A Nonconformist contemporary, having expressed its conviction that the presidential address from the Chair of the Congregational Union "might have dealt more gently with the Church of Rome," a missionary writes from that city a very vigorous remonstrance. He affirms that the "Holy Inquisition" still delivers its judgments in Rome, and only wants the power to carry out its sentences; but the Papal Church is alienating the intelligence of Italy from Christianity; is driving the best minds into infidelity, and reducing the ignorant into a superstition as grovelling as any that can be found in heathendom. The writer warns Englishmen against the grievous error of judging Romanism by what they see at home; against forgetting that devout Roman Catholics are not Romanists; and against the miscalled charity of overlooking the tremendous mass of inventions which are now formulated as much as ever by the Roman Church.

No contrast is greater than that between the method of Christ and the Apostles, in the matter of following policy or principle, and the method of ecclesiastics as told in later Church history. In the former case fidelity to truth was both invariable and uncompromising, and an undimmed torch was lifted up for the guidance of benighted men. In the latter a self-considerate precaution has frequently dictated courses whereby the torch has been obscured, and a generation left in bewilderment as to saving truth. Fidelity as to the "one name" and the "one faith" is the supreme question now. God's providence is making this more than ever the test of allegiance to Christ.

The time is drawing nigh when judgment on the Lincoln Case will be pronounced. With this, it may be, will come up the point of resistance or of submission. We are not surprised to hear that the matter is seriously agitating many minds. Great issues may be involved. With those who look on, as well as with devout "Churchmen," the trumpet-note is a call to prayer for right guidance, and a call to make this the dominating consideration—not what is to become of their denominational interests, but what is demanded for the advancement of the kingdom of Christ among men.

The debates in the Free Church General Assembly included one on Religion and Morals. It was wisely contended that meetings for prayer, where rich and poor sit side by side, are unmistakable evidences of spiritual life, and that there ought to be sacrifices in the way of business and late dinners on this behalf. Amusements, sensational reading, the study of magazines which foster unbelief, are killing both private devotion and Christian fellowship. Such a discussion goes very much to the root of the feebleness of individual churches. The statement that the work of Christians is to look after lost sheep, and not after one another, was more smart than wise. The two must go together.

The British Medical Journal has called special attention to the alarming growth in the use of wine as a vehicle for the administration of certain drugs, these so-called medicated wines being very largely and widely advertised, and many of them being by no means unpalatable. Hence it comes about, says the writer, that "if there be any tendency to tipple, the chemist's counter affordse very facility." This grave matter has formed the subject of discussion on the part of the Pharmaceutical Society. We have frequently urged that none of these preparations should be taken, except under medical advice, and it behoves parents to see that they are not introduced into their households, except with the physician's warrant. And not always even then. For some physicians are too much in the habit of recommending stimulants.

Are we sufficiently cautious in regard to the class-books which are put into the hands of our boys and girls? Not long ago we observed portions of an impure French novel taken and adopted as a middle-class examination text-book—pure portions, it may be, but calculated by their being fragments to draw attention to the work in a complete form. During the past few days a reviewer has spoken of two pieces in a German reader for beginners by an eminent professor as "erotic," and has objected to the insertion in a school book of such pieces, and deprecated their being learned by heart by "our English children at least." Surely all who are responsible for the education of young people ought to be very vigilant in regard to the purity of the books which they introduce to the notice of their pupils.

That the Jesuit is ever laying his secret mines, now here, now there, can only be denied by those who are wilfully blind to passing events. Africa is the latest scene of his fatal activity. Certain authoritative statements have recently appeared in The Morning Post, setting forth how Cardinal Lavigerie has made an agreement with the German East African Company whereby Uganda is to be monopolised by his French Roman Catholic Mission, to the exclusion, as far as possible, of the Church Missionary and other British societies. This grave charge, notwithstanding a denial (which the writer "for the best reasons cannot accept as satisfactory") is still adhered to as correct in substance and in fact.

It is further to be noted that Father Schynse, the Jesuit priest whom Stanley brought down to the coast, has returned to the Lakes with Emin Pasha's expedition; "the object of his return," it is remarked, "is as obvious as the bitterness of his animosity and that of his order to this country." To this it is added that no communications can be now made to the King of Uganda except through the French priests, and that the Cardinal has been subsidised by the Portuguese to establish a Roman Catholic and virtually anti-British mission at Mponda, at the south end of Lake Nyassa. If these things be so, they demand most serious attention, and the situation is fraught with the gravest consequences to the cause of true Christianity and civilisation in Africa. Mackay and his devoted companions have sown the seed through years of peril and hardship; it is for England to see that the harvest is not abandoned.

Very much stress is just now being laid upon the seeming growth of Romanism in America, and, therefore, the real causes of the increase should be carefully kept in view. One of the most potent is, of course, immigration from Ireland and the Continent of Europe; but another one, scarcely less powerful, is that of annexation, the populations of such territories, for instance, as Texas and Florida being largely Romanist. We have already pointed out the direction in which this Roman element will come into collision with the American Government; and, as Romanism is invariably a disturbing element in a State, and doubly restless when she is not dominant, we cannot think that the conflict will be long delayed.

It is not surprising that the recent negociations between the British legate, Sir J. Lintorn Simmons, and the Pope with respect to mixed marriages in Malta, are creating much indignant comment throughout the country. The Free Church of Scotland Monthly says:—

> What has happened, then, is this, that now, by the gracious permission of the Pope, Protestants are to be allowed to marry as they like without incurring civil disabilities; but if a Protestant marries a Roman Catholic, and does not get a priest to perform the ceremony, the children of the marriage are to be reckoned illegitimate, and cannot legally succeed to the property of their parents. The thing is so utterly monstrous that no effort should be spared to bring about a reversal of such legislation.

It has been stated that there are thirty thousand Buddhists in Paris alone. Those misguided people who, imbued with the restless spirit of the age, are dallying with the husks of false religions, might, with advantage, have read a recent article in The Morning Post on the monks of Gautama, in Burma, "the only true Buddhists in a country where the religion more closely resembles that of the great teacher than in any other part of Asia." The following extract from the article in question is timely and apposite:—

> Latter-day teachers from the West, who clothe Buddhism with a poetic beauty and majesty that never belonged to it, or its founder, except when seen through glasses that have been coloured with nineteen centuries of Christianity, would do well to study their pet religion in the country where it exists in its purest form—that is, where it most resembles the teaching of Buddha. Here they will see Buddhism as it is, and not as they imagine it to be.

It may be added that an accurate and succinct account of the inherent opposition and fundamental differences between Christianity and the utter agnosticism, if not positive atheism, of Buddhism, may be found in "Present Day Tracts," No. 46. (Religious Tract Society. Price 4d.)

Canon Wynne, Professor of Pastoral Theology, in lecturing in the Divinity School at Trinity College, Dublin, a few days ago, on "Pastoral Work," took occasion to speak upon the relative difficulty of doing good to the poor, and to the rich, and said that it often seemed to him easier to do good to the poor, there being fewer conventional barriers between them and the minister. He urged, however, that the carnal mind was always alike, and, after pointing out how to make the most of a visit to the rich, he added some wise words, which seem worthy to be remembered by every minister when engaged in pastoral visitation:—

> It should be a matter of principle with every faithful pastor to take as much interest in the servants of a house as in the master and mistress of it, and a visit upstairs should always be accompanied, if possible, by a visit below, and outside, to have a kind and friendly word, which, as a rule, will be always much valued, with the domestics and the servants.

Telegraphic tidings from China state that Mr. Hudson Taylor, accompanied by Mr. Montagu Beauchamp, was about to visit Melbourne from China. Letters from Australia have been received giving evidence of a great desire to further the work in China.

A Paton Mission Fund.

A CHARACTERISTIC of the devotion of that hero missionary, Rev. John G. Paton, who a short time since, at an age when most men would have accepted the offer of a well-earned retirement, returned to his beloved New Hebrides, has just been brought to notice. It appears that a small Y.M.C.A. at South Woodford, London, E., sent him last autumn a donation of £2 as a thank-offering for his work, thinking no more of the matter. A month since, however, they received a deeply interesting letter from the veteran missionary, telling out his gratitude, and giving new incidents of his work. One of these is that of a native convert who persisted in being sent as a teacher to an adjacent island, and who, having braved many persecutions, was ultimately shot down by one of the savages, crying, with his dying breath, "Jesus died for me."

Mr. Paton tells of his withdrawal from his beloved Island of Aniwa, now Christianised, to Australia, "to raise the funds needed to send missionaries to the 50,000 cannibals remaining on the islands." The need for these additional missionaries is sadly emphasised by the news contained in a recent telegram from San Francisco concerning the fate of the passengers and crew of a schooner driven upon the reefs of one of the islands (only partly reached), all of whom (fifty-one) save one, "were killed, roasted, and eaten by the cannibals." The thought of this venerable hero giving up his beloved pastorate to enter upon the toil of a new crusade, so touched the hearts of the Y.M.C.A. to whom his letter was addressed, that they at once organised a vigorous canvass for funds, and called a public meeting to hear an account of his work. The result was that in eight days they had secured and forwarded the sum of £53 to assist him in furnishing the needed funds for fulfilling what is the last burden of his life, viz., the planting of missionaries on every island of the New Hebrides.

It has been suggested that this sum shall initiate a "John G. Paton Mission Fund." We are sure that nothing would be esteemed by Mr. Paton a greater reward than that the means should be forthcoming to ensure the fulfilment of his life's purpose. He is truly a missionary of the Church of God; his devotion has thrilled Christendom, and given an impetus to missionary enterprise; and we earnestly trust that the sympathy and interest which the publication of his autobiography has aroused may find a practical issue through the channel of this "Fund." To crown his last days by the fulfilment of his prayer is surely a consummation which may well urge Christians—and especially British Christians—to loving emulation.

We shall be exceedingly glad to receive and forward any sums that may be entrusted to our care towards the Fund; if preferred they may be sent direct to the missionary's brother, Rev. James Paton, 2, Park-quadrant, Glasgow.

THE LORD'S DAY IN GERMANY.—In endeavouring to secure Lord's Day rest to his people, the Emperor of Germany knows that his views are strongly supported in commercial circles in the Fatherland. In order to ascertain public feeling, Prince Bismarck submitted the subject to a plebiscite in 1885, and for two years the investigation was continued. Chambers of commerce, great manufacturers, and corporations were consulted, as well as the workmen themselves. It was, in the result, found that two-thirds of the contractors and masters were in favour of legal prohibition of Sunday work. Prince Bismarck was unfavourable to the reform. No sooner, however, did he resign the post of Chancellor, than the Emperor's interest in the subject was pronounced.

THE THREE GARDENS:

EDEN, GETHSEMANE, AND THE GARDEN "WHERE THEY LAID HIM."

BY REV. JAMES CULROSS, D.D.

THE GARDEN OF EDEN.

III.—The Fall.

The story of the entering in of sin is told as to a child who knows nothing either of science or philosophy; and we shall understand it best if we listen with child-ear and child-mind.

The thought of breaking with God does not originate with our first parents, uncaused; it is awakened by a tempter. There was a serpent in Eden, the story runs, and this serpent was more subtle than any beast of the field. Many animals had wonderful sagacity, but the serpent went beyond them all. This serpent becomes man's tempter, and initiates the sin and misery, the woe and wailing and despair which have since overspread the earth. To our first parents it is only "a beast of the field" that appears; and it is not till we come to the Book of Revelation that we read in plain terms of "that ancient serpent, called the Devil and Satan, which deceiveth the whole world." All that is apparent is that a creature which God has made and placed in Eden, in subjection to man, becomes man's tempter and destroyer. The dark personality behind is concealed; the fowler is successful by keeping out of sight.

The story exhibits in simple and graphic outline all the elements of temptation found to-day. The method is to undermine faith in God. If this can be accomplished, man is ruined. This idea lies in the heart of all temptation (it may be, hiddenly), whether it be appetite, passion, ambition, pride, or self-love, that is appealed to. A man's faith is the living root of heaven or hell. In the heart of that tragedy which we name the Fall lay the giving up of faith in God and accepting a lie against Him.

One day, after what lapse of time we cannot tell, this cunning serpent, watching his opportunity, found Eve alone and near the forbidden tree, and began to speak to her. If you ask how a serpent could speak, I cannot tell. To-day the serpent can only hiss, and no serpent known can make the slightest articulate sound. And if you ask further, Must not Eve have wondered? I would answer, Not as you or I should. For the world was all new to her, and one thing could scarcely be more surprising than another. How the conversation with Eve was conducted—by voice, or sign, or in some other way—is not the really important matter, but the process by which she was led to believe a lie; and that is very clearly shown.

There is no attempt to carry the fortress by sudden assault or coup-de-main; instead, the enemy approaches in the friendliest possible manner. Eve could have no suspicion beforehand; indeed, suspicion implies acquaintance with evil. First came a question, as if for information, but so put as to suggest strange and new, if not hard, thoughts of God: "Yea, hath God said, Ye shall not eat of every tree of the garden?" Though innocent-looking, the question is very subtle. It entirely passes over God's goodness, of which so ample proof had been given. It is constructed and adapted to lead the woman to criticise God. In particular, it suggests doubt of his love, and hides a lie in its heart. It is as if a deadly enemy came, in guise of a friend, and said, I have heard an incredible rumour; I have heard that God has abridged your freedom and restricted your enjoyment: and I have come to get the rumour contradicted, or to ascertain the matter of fact: for, if matter of fact it be, God must be different from what you and I have been taking Him for.

The craft of the question lies in its underhand suggestion of doubt. A question in itself perfectly innocent may be asked in such a tone of voice, with arched eyebrows and incredulous shrug, and air of knowingness, that it shall have more power for evil than the best-constructed argument. More poison by far—and more swiftly and surely fatal—can be put into a question than into a direct affirmation. To say the least, it is the most effectual of all methods of instilling suspicion, and the most difficult to meet; because the questioner, if challenged, can always turn round and say, I only asked.

The woman's answer is somewhat vehement, and besides is too long: "We may eat of the fruit of the trees of the garden; of the fruit of the tree which is in the midst of the garden, God hath said, Ye shall not eat of it, neither shall ye touch it, lest ye die." God had not said, Ye shall not touch it: that is the woman's addition. The very vehemence of the reply (of which this addition is token) seems to indicate that the temptation is beginning to take effect. A calmer answer need not have carried less energy and decision in it, and would have shown a deeper sense of God's love—as, to-day, the very passion with which sceptical or agnostic attacks are repelled frequently betokens conscious or unconscious weakness of faith. We might, however, have attributed the vehemence to zeal for God; but the answer is also too long. It is neither right or safe to parley with the devil; and the fact that Eve does so betrays an element of irresolution. If the woman must speak, for courtesy's sake, a simple Yea would have been better. "Who hesitates is lost."

The tempter follows up his advantage. Ear-gate is open to him; through that gate he now makes one bold assault on the citadel. "Lest ye die!" O you poor, simple innocents, is that what ye dread? Is it fear that restrains you? If, now, it had been love, that would have been a noble motive—even had it been a mistaken one; but there is no room for love. The prohibition is that of a jealous tyrant, who tries to frighten you from seizing your just inheritance. "Ye shall not surely die; for God doth know that in the day ye eat thereof, then your eyes shall be opened, and ye shall be as gods, knowing good and evil." If there was craft in the question, there is audacity in these assertions. First, the penalty is denied: "Ye shall not die"; whence it follows that God is false, and that it is safe to defy Him. Instead of dying, says the tempter, your eyes will be opened, and ye shall be equal to God Himself, knowing good and evil as He does. That is the glorious heritage, the broad and grand experience, from which ye are presently excluded, but which ye may seize by simply stretching out your hand; the empire of knowledge is within your reach. "God doth know" this, and therefore it is that He has forbidden you to eat. Do not dream that He loves you; He seeks only to maintain his selfish supremacy; He has uttered a threat that will never be carried out—it is mere brutum fulmen.

Such is the tempter's lie—in which, with the finest guile, all lies against God are condensed. He never bids Eve pluck and eat. There is no advice, or urgency, or pressure. Ah! the tempter knows better where his power lies; it is enough if he succeed in subverting her faith and lodging his falsehood in her heart. That being accomplished, his work is done, and all is lost.

And all is lost. The woman—"taking the word of a Professor of Lying that he does not lie"—stretched forth her hand and plucked and ate. Did she pause a space before doing so, or did she put forth her hand hastily, in a hurried and awful venture? The narrative would rather suggest the former. She saw, probably from some showing of the tempter, "that the tree was good for food, and pleasant to the eyes, and that it was a tree to be desired to make one wise"; and slowly she stretched forth her hand to pluck and eat; and then, apparently unharmed by what she had done, she gave to her husband, and he too did eat. She has touched the battery wire, with the current full on, and no fatal shock, it would seem, has followed.*

This simple narrative, as has been remarked, embodies truths which neither philosophy nor experience has been able to modify or enlarge. The deed of our first parents has in it really the profoundest significance. By one dread act, without the apology of passion or pressure of supposed necessity, they have separated themselves from God and defied Him. The fatal step is taken. The earthly paradise is lost for ever. The life of the race is poisoned at the fountain. The seed of innumerable woes is sown. And we are not surprised by-and-by to read: "God saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth, and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually; and it repented the Lord that He had made man on the earth, and it grieved Him at his heart."

For our first parents did not fall alone; but drew their posterity after them. The Pelagian view which sees in every child born into the world a new Adam, with nature unimpaired and pure, working out for himself the old experiment of Eden afresh, with the same unvarying issue, and thereby serving himself heir to his first father, fails to take into account all the facts of the case, and is untenable in the face of Scripture.

Where is God all the while this tragedy is being enacted? Why does He keep out of sight? Does He know what is going on? If He knows, why does He not come forward and prevent? If a father should suffer some crafty, wicked, and malignant man thus to assail his unsuspecting child, and should stand aloof just round the corner, knowing all about it, till the mischief was done—what should we think of him? Should we not lay the blame of the child's ruin on the father's head? How then shall we vindicate God? If He has so acted once, may He not so act again, and how then can we trust Him? Should it be pleaded, He had in view to provide a remedy, and thereby reveal the depth of his compassion, might it not be answered, But would not prevention have been better? We are out of our depth. Before such questions we can only be silent, holding fast the assurance given

* "So saying, her rash hand in evil hour
Forth reaching to the fruit, she plucked, she ate;
Earth felt the wound, and Nature from her seat
Sighing through all her works, gave signs of woe
That all was lost."

So sings Milton; but the sigh of Nature was unheard, the signs of woe imperceptible to man's sense.

in Christ Jesus of his goodness, love, and righteousness, and awaiting his own disclosure of the mystery as soon as we are able to bear it—if that may ever be. In the meanwhile this is his word to us, "O man, thou hast destroyed thyself, but in Me is thine help." Let us accept it reverently.

The Two Bible Societies.

WE promised our readers some time ago to give attention to the matters relating to the British and Foreign and the Trinitarian Bible Societies, with a view to setting forth clearly the points of difference. Having carefully examined the whole case from the standpoint of each Society, we arrive first at

TWO PRELIMINARY CONCLUSIONS.

(1) That there have arisen on both sides a number of side-issues and reflections, which have tended to obscure the main points in question.

(2) That these, being entirely of minor import, should not be allowed to weigh with the supporters of either Society, inasmuch as most, if not all, of them, can be satisfactorily cleared away, explained, or justified.

This reduces the whole controversy to a diversity of opinion on

upon the merits of which our readers will decide for themselves. These are:—

I. As to Constitution. The T. B. S. contends that all persons having a share in the management of the B. & F. B. S. should be held as accepting the Doctrines of the Trinity and the Atonement.

II. As to Work. The T. B. S. contends that no Scriptures other than translations from the original Hebrew or Greek (from which our own A.V. and R.V. were made) should be circulated.

If these points were conceded by the B. & F. B. S., the T. B. S. would strongly recommend amalgamation with it; but the B. & F. B. S. does not see its way to adopt these restrictions. That Society's laws cannot be altered except by a general meeting of the Society. When the proposal was made in 1831 at the Annual Meeting to impose these theological tests, it was overwhelmingly negatived, and there has never since appeared any reason to think that a different result would follow were the proposal made again.

I. As to the FIRST of these contentions—

THE T. B. S. MAINTAINS:

(1) That the Laws of the B. & F. B. S. (v. vi. viii. ix. xiii.) qualify, by certain money payments, five classes of persons to become ipso facto on the Committee; and that these are (by Law vii.) "entitled to attend and vote at all meetings of the Committee."

(2) That Socinians have from time to time exercised an undue influence upon the Committee and the procedure of the B. & F. B. S. Hence the importance of requiring that all members of the Committee and all officers of the Society should hold the Doctrines of the Trinity and the Atonement.

THE B. AND F. B. S. REPLIES:

(1) That other fundamental doctrines might be mentioned beside the Trinity and the Atonement (e.g. especially the Inspiration of Scripture), and therefore if any creed were imposed it must be more comprehensive than that demanded. But inasmuch as the Society is, by its first law, restricted to encouraging "the wider circulation of the Scriptures, without note or comment" as its "sole object," the activity of its managers is so limited that no further fencing has been found needful in eighty-six years. The title adopted by the "Trinitarian" Bible Society is therefore an allusive misrepresentation of the character of the B. & F. B. S.

(2) That the entire management of the affairs of the Society is in the hands of a Committee of thirty-six ELECTED members; so that while certain persons, as above stated, may attend and vote at the meetings of the Committee, yet they are not upon the actual responsible Committee; and, though they may attend its meetings, they are but silent voters, having no further voice in the direction of its affairs; and finally, only one Socinian, if indeed he were a Socinian, which is denied—the late philanthropist, George Peabody—has ever been elected—and that inadvertently—on that Committee, and he did not attend a single meeting.

(3) That at no period has the Committee been under Socinian influence. Even were Socinians on the Committee (which they are not), they could do neither more nor less than is permitted under the constitution of the Society, i.e. promote the circulation of the simple text of Scripture.

(4) That the B. & F. B. S. cannot hold itself responsible for the affairs of local and provincial Bible societies in which difficulties have been known to exist. Though they are called "Auxiliaries to the B. & F. B. S.," they are entirely self-supporting and independent; they frame their own laws; they convene their own meetings; they raise and disburse their own funds (contributing to the B. & F. B. S., what they choose); and over them the B. & F.B.S. has no authoritative control whatever. The B. & F. B. S. exists only in Queen Victoria-street and in such other places as it locates agents who are under its direct control.

II. As to the SECOND contention—

THE T. B. S. MAINTAINS:

(1) That the Vulgate versions circulated in Roman Catholic countries contain perversions of God's truth, which teach idolatry, mariolatry, and other Romish errors.

(2) That it is not "half a loaf," that is given, as "better than no bread," but a "poisoned" loaf.

THE B. AND F. B. S. REPLIES:

(1) That no version is extant that can authoritatively be pronounced perfect; and that for all practical purposes of life and doctrine, these versions present the truth of God, setting forth clearly the fundamental doctrines of Christianity, and pointing to Jesus Christ as the only Saviour and Mediator between God and man.

(2) That the contention of the T. B. S. that no Scriptures other than translations from the original Hebrew or Greek should be circulated, goes too far; for it manifestly implies blame to our Lord for having used the translation of the LXX, and to his apostles for having embodied many of its passages in the New Testament. And this may be construed as a very serious reflection on the inspiring Spirit: for Jesus spake and the apostles wrote by the Holy Ghost.

(3) That the readings called by the T. B. S. "corruptions" were not wilfully made by the Romish Church to uphold its errors, but existed in texts of a very early date.

(4) That the simile of the "poisoned" loaf is inapplicable, inasmuch as such an article does not contain in superabounding measure that which counteracts the poison; while these versions are full of that which exposes the errors in question, and so guards the reader against wrong inferences from any single word.

(5) That these errors are infinitesimal in number when the book is considered as a whole.

(6) That inasmuch as the literal equivalent of the original Hebrew or Greek is given in the margin of all the "corrupted" passages, these versions may even have a certain advantage over the "purer," inasmuch as they direct attention to the error, and may lead to more thoughtful consideration than if the contrast had not been pointed out.

(7) That these versions, which bear the imprimatur of dignitaries of the Roman Catholic Church, are readily received where a translation made by an avowed Protestant "heretic" is condemned and destroyed, unread, as a "bad book."

(8) That the circulation of these versions has not resulted in leading people into Romanism, but it has been known in multitudes of cases to have led persons out of the thraldrom of Popery into the liberty of the Gospel.

(9) That each Society and its supporters have a perfect right to act upon their own convictions, and that the Trinitarian Society, having been formed in part by members who had withdrawn from the older Society, has no claim to dictate to it how it should formulate its Constitution or its Work. The immense disproportion between the two Societies in constituency, work, and experience should also be borne in mind.

(10) Protestant workers in France are only too thankful to get the De Saci Version, into the hands of Roman Catholics. The more effectual way, therefore, for the T. B. S. to secure its object would be to convince these workers that it is wrong to distribute such Versions. Then the B. & F. B. S. would have no demand for them, and must discontinue their publication. Whether this would be in the interest of the Gospel the B. & F. B. S. has no question.

AUSTRALIAN ABORIGINES.

THE spiritual claims of the aboriginal tribes of our great Southern colonies were brought before a meeting held at Exeter Hall on Thursday last. Farewell was also taken of two friends going out to work in connection with the Maloga Mission.

Mr. Daniel Matthews told the history of the Mission and of how God had blessed its operations in the past. In appealing on behalf of those who are still without knowledge of the Gospel, he said there were between 200,000 and 300,000 of these people waiting to hear the proclamation of the glad tidings. He referred with gratification to the visit of Paddy and Jenny Swift to England last year, and to the interest and sympathy that have been aroused as a result. It was through listening to their pleas on behalf of their neglected people that the friends now going out had been led to give themselves to the work. They are Mr. G. C. Smith, of the Ealing Y.M.C.A., and Mrs. Pridham, whose husband went out with Mrs. Matthews last year. He has now been at work for several months, and has been much impressed by the work already accomplished, and the large opportunities for extension.

Mr. Smith and Mrs. Pridham delivered brief addresses, as well as Mr. F. A. Bevan (who presided), Mr. H. W. Maynard, Mr. David Beath, and Rev. George Piercy. Mr. Matthews purposes leaving England on his return to Australia on June 27.

SOUL WINNING AND PRAYER UNION.—Text for June 10 (Deut. xxxiii. 25):—"Thy shoes shall be iron and brass, and as thy days, so shall thy strength be."

THE DRIFT CHILDREN'S MISSION.—By the kindness of a Christian lady, premises at Aldersbrook-farm, Wanstead Flats, on the confines of Epping Forest, have been placed at the disposal of Mr. C. Boyer, the conductor of this Mission. For the small sum of 2½d. each, children from the East End may be taken for a day's outing in the country, and, for a little more, those who cannot take food with them may have it provided. The Farm will be the rallying point. Mr. Boyer hopes also to make it easy for poor parents with large families to spend a day in the country. The premises have yet to be furnished with tables, chairs, earthenware, urns, &c., so as to be suitable for purposes of rest and refreshment. The hon. secretary is Rev. T. J. Hazzard, 14, Lawrence-road, Bow, E

The Scottish Assemblies.

(FROM AN OCCASIONAL CORRESPONDENT.)

ON MONDAY, May 26, the Assembly was chiefly occupied with matters pertaining to the state of religion in the country. In the evening Rev. HUGH PRICE HUGHES urged the preaching of a living Saviour as the one means of saving souls, and said with emphasis that no man would ever be converted by ratiocination. The applause was very hearty, and came from all parties in the house. This sympathy, with a warm Gospel appeal, was a good augury in respect of Tuesday's debate. Of all Mr. Hughes' telling points none was more effective than this: "There is one thing worse than an unconverted majority outside the Church; it is an unconverted minority within it."

THE DODS DEBATE.

THIS discussion occupied the whole of Tuesday, in the Free Church Assembly, resulting in a satisfactory reassertion of the Church's soundness in the faith. Business began, after solemn prayer, at 10 a.m.; and, with the exception of an adjournment of two hours from 5 to 7 p.m., went on till midnight. There were no fewer than five motions. One, proposed by Dr. ADAM, the Home Secretary of the Church, and seconded by Dr. LAIRD, the ex-Moderator, was in the following terms:—

The Assembly approve of the report of the College Committee in respect of the conclusions arrived at, that the writings of Dr Dods do not afford ground for instituting a process against him as teaching what is at variance with the Standards of the Church.

But having regard to questions which have been raised in connection with certain passages in Dr. Dods' writings, the Assembly finds it necessary to declare as follows:—

(1) This Church holds immovably the cardinal doctrine of our Lord's Divinity, and highly disapproves of all representations, by whatever motive dictated, which tend to lower the sense of its vital importance in the minds of many hearers of the Gospel.

(2) This Church steadfastly adheres to the fundamental doctrine of the Atonement as laid down in her Standards, and cannot consent to sanction its being set forth as a mere theory, or as only one among many phases or aspects of the Saviour's death.

(3) This Church firmly believes that the Resurrection of our Lord is not only an incontestably proved fact, but one which lies at the very foundation of the Christian system, and it looks with high disapproval on any apparent countenance being given to speculations fitted to bring the reality of it into question.

(4) With regard to the Holy Scriptures, this Church continues to hold, as she has ever done, that they are "all given by inspiration of God to be the rule of faith and life," and that of their infallible and Divine authority we are assured by the inward work of the Holy Spirit. She views the use of the term "mistakes and immoralities" to describe recognised difficulties in the Scriptures as utterly unwarranted, and fitted to give grave offence.

Finally, the Assembly, while thankfully acknowledging Dr. Dods' strong declaration of adherence to the doctrine of the Church as laid down in her Standards, and desiring to do justice to his high character and services, find it necessary in present circumstances to remind him, and the Church's Professors generally, that the primary duty which devolves on them in the responsible offices they have been called to occupy is to teach and defend the Church's faith as embodied in her Confession, and it earnestly exhorts them, even when engaged in laudable efforts to convince gainsayers and to help the doubting, to be on their guard against all lines of argument and forms of expression which may have a tendency to endanger the faith of others, and to wound the hearts of those who tremble at the Divine Word.

This ultimately became the decision of the Assembly, but only after prolonged and eager discussion. I need not quote the terms of the other four motions: it will be sufficient to describe the purpose of each. One was framed so as to make the censure on Dr. Dods more severe, but without entering a charge of heresy. A third differed from the first only in making the censure rather less severe. This was framed by the party most in sympathy with the incriminated Professor, and it was remarkable that even here there was made the same careful reassertion of orthodox doctrine on the four great points as in Dr. Adam's motion, and that Dr. Dods was admonished to be more circumspect in his language for the future. The fourth motion left the door open for a possible libel after further examination; and the last pressed for that extreme measure to be taken forthwith.

The speeches were not remarkable on either side for any quality except frankness and earnestness; there was no great display of learning and eloquence such as some of us can remember within those historic walls. The point clearly brought out was that all parties were really agreed in holding the Confessional doctrine of Inspiration, the only difference being that some hold one view and some another about the method by which God has secured the revelation of his truth in the form of human words. That that gracious result has been secured in the Bible, and in the whole Bible, was affirmed again and again by all speakers, and with obvious sincerity. One gentleman, indeed, affirmed that after twenty years' experience of the Assembly he had not heard in a single day so much utterance of orthodox truth.

The conclusion arrived at is one which makes the position of the Free Church in relation to doctrine most clear on the four fundamental points involved; and a serious warning has been conveyed to those who, as Professors, have to handle critical questions for purposes of Christian Apologetics, that they be careful not to disturb the faith, or give occasion for questioning their own soundness.

This was on Tuesday. On Thursday the case of Dr. BRUCE occupied four or five hours of the morning sitting; but the only additional remark that seems called for is that, in this case, the censure for unguarded statements was more explicit, and the re-assertion of orthodox belief, if possible more carefully plain.

But on Wednesday, between the two heresy discussions, there came a very gracious and healthful discussion of

FOREIGN MISSIONS.

After Principal Rainy had given the report on the Sustentation Fund, Dr. Lindsay gave in the report, of which the character was indicated in a former letter. The hall was little less crowded than on the previous day, and the audience was not a whit less enthusiastic. The sum given during the past year for this object was £41,884, all too little for the work lying to the Church's hands, but still a sum to be regarded with thankful hope.

The convener, Professor LINDSAY, told the Assembly plainly that it was "starving" its evangelistic work in India.

The deliverance of the Assembly was moved by Rev. MURDO MACKENZIE, of Inverness, the gentleman who had, the day before, said the hardest things against Dr. Dods, a pleasing evidence that all parties are heartily at one about the Lord's greatest work; and in his speech he created laughter by declaring that those ministers ought to be deposed whose congregations gave nothing for foreign missions. The deliverance was as follows:—

That the Assembly receive the report of the deputies to India, and refer it to the Foreign Missions Committee for consideration; acknowledge the goodness of God to its Livingstonia Mission in Nyassaland in preserving the Church's Mission in peace during the troublous time caused by the attack of Arab slaveraiders on the African Lakes Company's servants, as well as by other complications; record their view of the value to commercial and all missionary work in Central Africa of the Stevenson Road between Lakes Nyassa and Tanganyika; deprecate any attempt to hand over that region to any other European power, and direct the Committee to memorialise Government on this matter; recognise with gratitude to God the continued progress of the work of Christian education and evangelisation among the women of India and Africa; and commend the work of the Ladies' Society to the hearty sympathy and support of all the congregations and people as an indispensable part of the Church's missionary operations.

Dr. PIERSON made an eloquent appeal to the Assembly, and received its special thanks, with good wishes for his safe return to his own country. In the evening six young missionaries were introduced, and commended by the Moderator to the grace of God. Addresses were given by several missionaries, among others by Dr. Kerr Cross, of whom you publish a sketch in this issue of THE CHRISTIAN. The reception given him was similarly hearty, and proved how fully the Church has been sympathising with him in the trials so heroically endured on Lake Nyassa.

On Friday the Free Church Assembly disposed of Disestablishment in a lively, but not very prolonged debate. The tone was throughout one of kindly regard for their brethren in the Established Church, refusing to take seriously their cry of threatened destruction, and rather anticipating closer fellowship—the way to which will be opened up when the single point of endowments is got out of the way.

THE ESTABLISHED CHURCH ASSEMBLY

It was a suggestive experience to cross the High-street, and pass from the one Assembly to the other on Wednesday. There, Lord BALFOUR OF BURLEIGH, in presence of the Royal Commissioner, was addressing a crowded and enthusiastic audience on the danger of Disestablishment. After his very able and eloquent speech, there came other addresses, all in the same tone, rousing the Church to organised efforts in defence of its privileged position. The alarm has been caused by a recent debate in the House of Commons, and particularly by the position then taken by Mr. Gladstone, who represents Midlothian. Of course the brethren did not mean that it is possible for any political action to extinguish a true Church of Christ, but the sense of danger was too quick and urgent to allow them to find much rest in that obvious reflection. It was only in a dim and groping fashion that some referred to the great spiritual considerations which render the Church of Christ independent of secular opposition or support; the prevailing tone was a cry for action in the next general election.

FOREIGN MISSIONS OF THE CHURCH.

On Thursday, while their neighbours were engaged with the unsoundness of Professor Bruce, the Established Assembly was occupied with its missions to the heathen; so earnest and hopeful a discussion has not taken place since Norman Macleod began to rouse his brethren on this subject. The Convener, Dr. MCMURTRIE, made an excellent statement, showing that £30,000 had been given during 1889, being £6000 of increase from the year before, and that there had been fully 900 baptisms of converts in India, China, and Africa. He referred to the sympathy extended toward their work by Dr. Griffith John, in China, and to co-operation with the Free Church in India. As for Africa, he laid on the table a documunt printed by the black schoolboys at Blantyre, the workmanship of which is not surpassed by Edinburgh journeymen. Mr. Turnbull, of Darjeeling, made a statement full of interest about his work in India, and appealed for means to support a larger staff of native catechists.

But the great feature was the farewell to Dr. PIERSON, who spoke up to within an hour of leaving Edinburgh for America. His great and fruitful work in Scotland during the past few months had begun in the offices of the Church of Scotland, a work entirely without respect to denominational differences; and there was a propriety in his closing words being spoken in its Assembly. They were full of fire and wisdom, not without a spice of wit. He urged the brethren faithfully to remember that a church could not rise above the spiritual level of its ministry, and therefore to cherish in themselves increased compassion for a dying world. Cheers of the heartiest kind burst out frequently from a fully interested audience, and at the close the Moderator, Dr. A. K. H. BOYD, in fervent terms, conveyed to our American friend the Assembly's thanks, and prayerful wishes for his safe return home. Such as could, shook hands with him, the rest standing in token of affectionate respect. Nothing could have been more cordial, or more hopefully significant of Christian life. A church which has experience of that sort may calm and strengthen itself amid the dun of political contention by pondering Psalm lxxxvii.: "Of Zion it shall be said, This and that man was born in her, and the Highest himself shall establish her."

American Notes.

(FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

SINCE the death of "Uncle Tom," no one has appeared so intimately connected with the plot of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" as Lewis G. Clarke, the "George Harris" of the tale. He is seventy-five years old, possessing a vigorous and retentive memory, with head and beard so hoary as to give him a venerable appearance. He is now lecturing on the perilous and exciting times of the past.

Dr. A. J. Gordon, of Boston has completed twenty years of his pastorate over the Clarendon-street Baptist Church. Among the many reforms achieved by him was that of abolishing paid choirs, and restoring congregational singing. His volunteer choir of young people not only give their services freely, but contributed during the last year the sum of three hundred and fifty dollars towards the work of missions. There are two hundred Chinamen in the Sunday-school, ten of whom have been recently converted and baptized. This class supports three native preachers in China. Five of the young people of the church have dedicated themselves to foreign missionary service, five more being already on the field. There are several evangelists connected with the church, besides local workers in various branches of philanthropic andindustrial enterprise. Dr. Gordon's preaching is, as ever, spiritually elevating, and evangelistic.

The various Presbyteries of the country have been agitating revision. Nearly all have given their report. Some of the distant missions have not been heard from, but 197 have recorded their votes. Of these 128 Presbyteries have voted for, and 65 against, the revision of the Confession. The General Assembly will meet in a few days and pronounce upon the report.

The venerable Bishop Taylor of Africa is again with us. He addressed the Methodist ministers in Boston on Monday. The first part of his address had reference to the self-supporting missions which he has established in South America. His report was exceedingly interesting and hopeful. Of the work in Africa he spoke cautiously. The difficulties are very grave and great. His missionaries are now redeeming little girls before they become betrothed to polygamous chiefs, inasmuch as the law compels converted girls who were purchased by their prospective husbands in childhood to abandon religion and morality and live in their harems. Hence the need of redeeming by purchase and legally securing the lives of these female children for the future.

The Methodist Conference opposes Bishop Taylor in his idea of establishing self-supporting missions, but he claims that the churches of the denomination are with him, and only certain officials consider him at all irregular in his methods. He was received with warmth at the above meeting and his address enkindled a considerable "Methodist fire."

During my peregrinations in the Southern States, I noticed, what has often struck me before, the evangelical soundness of the churches. In New England, and other portions of the North, we are cursed with every heresy, ancient and modern, which poisons the moral atmosphere with death. They are "sound," further South; but, alas, sound asleep! Yet they respond to the Gospel, and do not fight it. Many of the conversions which took place were those of church members, who had in early years been received into fellowship without regeneration. After years of formal Christian profession they were convinced of sin, and led to Christ for salvation.

Preparations are being made for our summer conferences which are gradually on the increase: Niagara, Northfield, Crescent Beach, Ocean Grove, &c. Of these more hereafter.

The New England Evangelistic Associations has closed the second year of its existence. This young society is doing well. Many evangelists were sent into country towns and villages, which are fast becoming practically heathen. The blight of Unitarianism is felt everywhere throughout New England, but the evangelist preachers report an awakened interest and many conversions. The Association is moving into new quarters, hoping to found a training class for evangelists, a library, and other needed departments for the extension of their work of evangelism.

A MISSIONARY BREAKFAST.

ON Whit Monday morning, Pastor FRANK H. WHITE presided over the eleventh annual missionary breakfast in connection with the Talbot Tabernacle Church, which was held in the adjoining building, Powis Hall. The occasion proved one of special interest, the numbers being larger than at any of the previous gatherings. The object in view was the promotion of interest in missionary work generally, and there can be little doubt as to the effect of the meeting in this direction.

After breakfast, an adjournment was made to the Tabernacle, where the meeting took place. After singing and prayer, the President read Ps. xxx. (which he called Bishop Hannington's Psalm), and gave a few stirring words of loving exhortation. Mr. DANIEL MATTHEWS, of the Maloga Aboriginal Mission, in a brief address, referred with special delight to the gracious outpouring of the Holy Spirit on the blacks of Australia, and thereon grounded an earnest appeal to Christians to seek the same blessing on themselves and this country. Pastor JAMES STEPHENS (of Highgate-road), fresh from his recent visit to Algeria—and who thought he might pass as a little bit of a returned missionary—managed to compress into his address a large amount of information gathered during his tour, to which were added many important observations of a practical kind. He gave a graphic sketch of the outward conditions of life in Algeria, remarking particularly upon its European character, and pointing out that the trials of the missionaries did not lie in that direction, but in the prejudices and mental hostility of the people. He did not agree with those who thought it necessary to present a continuous report of results, in order to maintain home interest in the work abroad. His heart was full of admiration and sympathy for those who were plodding on persistently in their work, not because they saw fruit, but because Christ commanded them.

Dr. CHURCHER, who appeared in native costume, was full of fire and enthusiasm about the work in another part of North Africa—Morocco. There he was known among the people by a title they had given him, "A doctor of Jesus Christ." He bore testimony to the great advantage of medical missions, of which he had received abundant proof during his four-and-half years' experience in that country. The Moorish idea of Christianity was summed up in four words—idolatry, immorality, eaters of pork, and drunkards. They despised Christianity, and rejected the Gospel, but they could not resist the influence of kindness and generosity.

Miss CAMPBELL (C.I.M.) earnestly pleaded the cause of Chinese missions. There no difficulty is experienced in obtaining meetings, and gaining the ears of the people. Millions are there who have not rejected the Gospel, for they have never heard it. God needed some of the good workers at home to leave their work here, and go and serve Him there. He would take care that the work at home should not suffer, as she was able to testify was the case in her own experience.

Mr. JAMES E. MATHIESON read Psalm viii., and remarked upon the grand idea embodied in the words "how excellent is thy name in all the earth." It contemplated a worship of Jehovah by all peoples. He cordially sympathised with medical missions, and thought the healing and gospelling should go together.

Miss DE BROEN spoke cheerily about the work in Paris; Pastor LECOAT told how the first copy of the new Breton Bible had been blessed to the conversion of an old man of seventy-two years, and also his wife; and that there was a prospect of the Government buying copies for the libraries. Miss LEITCH (American Ceylon Mission) sought to stir up parents to encourage missionary enterprise in their children.

A few more words followed from Pastor F. H. WHITE, in which he drew attention to a novel missionary box in the form of a globe, which the Tabernacle Church is about to use as a family collecting box for missions. The audience was invited to test it by trying what coin it would take, and some experiments of this kind were made afterwards. The meeting throughout was most stimulating, and cannot fail to be fruitful in practical results.

COUNT CAMPELLO & THE VATICAN.

IT is hardly necessary to state that the report of the return of Count Campello to the Roman Church is entirely without foundation. It was inspired by the Vatican, and diligently circulated in the clerical press, some liberal papers publishing the news with reservation. Count Campello at once telegraphed to his friends asking them to make known publicly that there was absolutely no truth in the report, and he called on the editors of the leading Roman newspapers, who caused statements to be inserted in their journals, not only denying the canon's return to Rome, but also asserting that his adherence to evangelical doctrines was stronger than ever.

The fact that the Vatican gave currency to such a report is another proof that the cause Count Campello advocates is gaining ground in Italy, and is dreaded by the Vatican as a formidable power. A. R.

SOUTH WOODFORD Y.M.C.A.—The fifth annual report tells of progress, the membership at present being 112. A varied spiritual work is accomplished, and effective expression is given to the union which subsists between all who love the Lord. Whist banding together those who are already believers, the Association engages in active mission work, and this has been attended with blessing. The hon. secretary is Mr. A. K. Langridge, Chelmsford-road, South Woodford, E.

A NOVEL LECTURESHIP.—Rev. Dr. Duncan, pastor of Hornsey Rise Baptist Church, N., has told in a pamphlet (2d. Alexander & Shepheard) the story of the lectureship with which his name is associated. While devoting the Lord's Day to discourses upon sacred themes, he sets apart every Thursday evening to a lecture upon some topic which, whether suggested by national or social, personal or historical subjects or events, is turned to good account for general education and instruction in righteousness. Every endeavour is made to render these meetings cheerful and attractive, and it is pleasing to know that attendance upon the lectures has led some to take an interest in public wor-ship. Dr. Duncan says: "Real and abiding social and religious good is being done by the lectureship, and it has more than realised my expectations." Next week's lecture will be the 150th, the course having commenced on September 4, 1887, and been carried on without intermission. The plan which has proved so successful at Hornsey Rise might well be adopted elsewhere, and doubtless would be attended with like results, for Christian teaching on common subjects would inspire confidence on the part of some who have no personal knowledge of religion, and perhaps open the way for definite work for Christ.

Letters from France.

II.—CONDITIONS OF WORK IN HAVRE.

ON Friday, May 9, Mr. Morgan and I returned from Paris to Havre, and were joined on Saturday morning by Mr. Bernard Knight, of Bournemouth. During the few days we spent in Havre we had abundant opportunity of observing the difficult conditions under which earnest work for Christ has to be done.

Wherever Romanism flourishes, Christian work is made difficult. Unhappily, we are becoming too familiar with this gigantic evil in our own land, but in France we see how idolatrous the system really is. The names by which the churches are called; the inscriptions which some of them bear; the images with which they are adorned; and the services held in them—are all idolatrous. Watch the people as they enter, and it will appear that among the more inteiligent class there are two divisions—the one (chiefly women) being superstitious, the other evidently regarding the whole system with contempt. If Christianity, backed up with pomp and power and wealth and art, has become such a contemptuous think to many, it is not easy to persuade them that the simple Christianity of the New Testament, independent as it is of all human might and power, can be anything else than a failure too. The ignorance of the Bible, in which this system keeps the people, makes the difficulty greater. For no bigotry is so intolerant and hard to overcome as that which is based on ignorance. The Paganism of Rome did not present so formidable an obstacle to the progress of the Gospel as the corrupted Christianity that has taken its place. Those who are seeking to give this people the light need the prayerful sympathy of all.

In this port we were struck also with the difficulty which the continental Sunday presents to Christian work. It is not only that shops and cafés are open and doing a flourishing trade, that an excellent band of music attracts large multitudes to the beautiful gardens, that Romanism presents no objection to such a use of the Lord's Day; but the most surprising fact of all is that even Protestants do not appear to attach sacredness to the day. On our way to the Sunday evening service, we noticed a company of ladies and gentlemen playing lawn tennis. The fact itself surprised us, but we were astonished and grieved to be told that these persons were not only Christians, but Sunday-school teachers! We would not wish to introduce the details of the Old Testament Sabbath into our present observance of the Lord's Day; but we do feel that such laxity must greatly increase the difficulties of Christian work.

The only other difficulty I mention is one which affects work, not only among the French people, but among the sailors of all nationalities who frequently put into this port. On the large iron rails outside one of the churches was a board headed "Gaiety Concert Hall," announcing some of the attractions of the place. To the Romanist, I suppose there was nothing incongruous in this association of religion with such a doubtful form of amusement. On inquiry we found that there were many such concert halls, at least four of them catering for English sailors. English "artistes" are secured, mostly young girls of attractive appearance, who not only perform on the stage, but who visit the sailors as soon as they come ashore, and seek to allure them into these dangerous places. The temptations to which English sailors are exposed at this port are fearfully great. Enter one of these halls while the performance is going on. It is a spacious building, capable of seating some 400 or 500 people. A number of persons are sitting by little round tables, drinking and smoking. Here is a smart-looking young fellow who evidently knows his business, and, half divining the object of our visit, he plies us with question after question. Close by are the English "artistes," to whom he seeks to introduce us. Alas! for the hapless sailor who accepts their dangerous friendship. On the stage, brilliantly lighted, are two girls, singing in a loud voice a vulgar song, and after each verse dancing, with anything but decent movements. It is a fearful place to be in, and we can only endure it for a few minutes. After such an experience, the heart is filled with pain at the thought that men and women can give themselves thus to a life whose aim is the ruin of others; with sympathy for the poor English sailor who must find it so difficult to do right amid such temptations to wrong; and with shame to note how much wiser and more energetic are the servants of the devil than the children of light.

Drunkenness as well as immorality thrive in Havre. How can it be otherwise, when in some of the streets ten shops out of twelve are cafés? Absinthe and other strong spirits are sold apparently with almost no restriction.

These are some of the difficulties Christian workers in Havre have to encounter. In a subsequent letter we shall see what is being done to oppose this manifold evil. Meanwhile, let the thought of these obstacles excite us to a deeper and more prayerful sympathy for Christian work in this important French port.

GEORGE WAINWRIGHT.

LONDON CITY MISSION.

ON Tuesday, last week, the missionaries connected with the London City Mission, accompanied largely by their wives and families, spent a delightful holiday in Bournemouth. The conditions under which many of them do their difficult and important work gave them a keen appreciation of the bright sunshine, the pure air, and the lovely scenery of that popular seaside resort. At about 5 o'clock, nearly 600 were gathered in the Shaftesbury Hall, and in the gymnasium below for tea; and at 5.45, a brief, bright meeting was held, over which Mr. R. C. Morgan presided. Addresses were given by Revs. F. Toyne, Vicar of St. Michael's, Bournemouth; B. Cassin, of London; and W. V. Robinson, of Lansdowne Baptist Chapel. Mr. Chalk, one of the missionaries, gave an interesting account of work among the employées at the London hotels. At 6.45 the meeting closed, and the missionaries and their friends hastened to the station to begin their journey home.

In connection with this day's rest and change it may not be out of place to commend to all Christians who value the work of the London City Mission the little pamphlet, entitled "Truffle & Nephews," in which Rev. P. B. Power succeeds in showing how greatly this body of faithful men need seasons of rest and change. When the sum of £2 10s. will obtain for a missionary a fortnight's holiday, while £5 will enable his wife to accompany him, no exhausted worker ought to be without this privilege. A single day is not enough for a body of men to whom Rev. W. V. Robinson referred as forming part of "the noble army of martyrs."

THE BRUSSELS CITY MISSION is an excellent agency. Assisted by many faithful servants of God, the director, M. de Jonge, carries on a very difficult work among the Flemish portion of the population. In the various Sunday-schools there are about 250 Roman Catholic children, who are brought under the influence of the Gospel. Visitation at the homes of the people, nursing the sick, and colportage are among the means employed; and, though the difficulties and disappointments are many, the Mission has had the seal of God's approval and blessing. The Mission has a few warm friends in England. M. de Jonge's address is 344, Rue des Palais, Brussels.

THE BRUSSELS CONFERENCE.

IN a speech at the recent annual meeting of the Aborigines Protection Society, Mr. F. W. Fox said:—

By the labours of the Anti-Slavery Society, the Native Race Liquors Committee, and the Aborigines Protection Society, as well as by many other associations, a definite and favourable impression has been made upon the representatives of the several Powers; when this Conference closes its labours, it will be found that a great and enduring monument for the good of the African people and the African Continent has been created, and a great work achieved. Although the results of the Conference are not yet known officially, and it is still sitting, yet we have authority for stating that most favourable and important decisions have already been arrived at, on the following points:—

(1) Measures as to the dealing with the slave trade in the country of its origin.

(2) For stopping the slave caravans on their way to the coast.

(3) Effective measures for stopping the maritime slave trade,

(4) And for dealing with the slave markets of Arabia and Persia.

(5) The trade in fire-arms to be prohibited, except under clearly defined limitations.

(6) The importation and sale of alcoholic liquors to be entirely prohibited in every zone or district where the European trade is not at present in operation, and to impose high and restrictive duties in those districts where the trade is now being carried on.

These great results are a cause for much satisfaction and grateful acknowledgment, and are strong evidence of the marvellous progress and advance in public opinion amongst the nations. Never before in the history of the world, have such humane and beneficent measures been adopted so unanimously. The labours of this Conference will prove, it is believed, a great landmark in the world's history in its onward progress in high aim and noble endeavour.

The Aborigines Protection Society has a great future before it. We have to see that Christian commissioners and residents are stationed in every part of the African Continent to maintain and create peace; for where peace reigns in Africa, there the slave trade languishes, and prosperity and contentment ensue. By bringing pressure and influence to bear on the proper authorities, we can facilitate the opening up of Equatorial Africa by encouraging the construction of lines of communication from the coast to the great Inland waterways. We have to lend a listening ear to the cries of the suffering and oppressed, from whatever part of the Continent they may arise; we have to declare to the nations of Great Britain, Germany, and other Europern countries, that the Bible shall not be forced into Africa by the bullet and at the point of the sword, that African explorations and discoveries can be efficiently and effectually carried out in the future without the destruction of so much human life, and the shedding of so much human blood, as has been the case in the past; that commerce shall not be conducted at the expense of the happiness and prosperity of the helpless and innocent; and that European and other traders shall not fatten upon the miseries of the people, by the importation and sale of fire-arms and poisonous spirits.

WESLEYANS IN CHINA.—The Central China Wesleyan Methodist Lay Mission have issued their report for 1889. The superintendent is Rev. D. Hill, Hankow, and there are eight British workers. Twelve souls have been added to the Church in connection with the work of the Mission. These twelve converts, with fourteen inquirers, foreshadow the possible fruitfulness of the three branches of Christian work already undertaken—the evangelistic, the medical, and the educational.

GEORGE YARD MISSION.

In the words of a phrase that has become current with it, it may truthfully be said that Mr. George Holland is the "grand old man" of the re-[illegible]. He is not much [illegible] in public platforms; he prefers to dwell among his own people. Yet God has given him favour among many of its fellow servants—rich and poor, high and low. No name is more revered than his in the pulpits of Whitechapel; and we believe it is held in high esteem in the courtly circles of Windsor Castle. Indeed, one of his truest friends is a member of the Royal house, Princess Mary of Teck, who has done honour to herself by inspecting the work at George Yard in person, and whom we have seen as a most attentive listener to the words of the veteran Christian worker in a West-end meeting.

Mr. Holland had a goodly array of friends to greet him and congratulate him at his recent anniversary held in his mission-room. The bulk of the audience were genuine East-enders, but the aristocracy of the West were worthily represented in the chairman (Lord Ramsay), Lords, Lady Aberdare, and others. It was the thirty-sixth annual meeting, so that the work in and around George Yard is not a thing of yesterday. Mr. Holland is fond of telling of the wonderful changes for the better that have taken place in the neighbourhood since he began work there. Dingy, [illegible] streets, [illegible] scenes of [illegible] and vice, [illegible] were then the order of the day. Now [illegible] and [illegible] are the exception. [illegible] was known on the [illegible] as one who seemed to have selected some [illegible] as to the general safety for Christian virtues to the [illegible]

Mr. Holland's report is a voluminous document, and suggests even more than it describes. The "list of operations" and the daily programme of meetings, details the fact that George Yard is a busy hive of Christian work every day in the week and hours all night. The young people of course come first, and for them there are an infant nursery, week-day and Sunday schools, evening classes, [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

ANOTHER LEADER FALLEN.

DEAR SIR,—"Rev. John Henry Davies, M.A., died of small-pox at Seoul, Korea, April 11, 1890." Such was the notice cabled to Melbourne, and transmitted to England by last mail. Quiet, unassuming, gentle, yet full of zeal, learned, and undaunted; a well-trained, much-loved, and devoted young missionary has been taken from the front rank here to swell the noble army above. Like Jonathan, he was "lovely and pleasant in his life;" living in close communion with his Saviour, "in his death they were not divided."

When but a youth, about twelve years ago, he left his home in Australia for India, where he laboured for a couple of years, until his health gave way through the unsuitability of the climate, and he was ordered home. On recovering, he established a Grammar School near Melbourne; and, as its head master, was of incalculable benefit to hundreds of the youths of the colonies who passed under his training. But although most successful in this enterprise, the heart of Mr. Davies was still in the mission field; so, after a few years, he sold his school with a view of returning.

Forbidden by medical men to return to India, he was led to offer himself for the Korea; largely through the instrumentality of his gifted and Christlike friend, the Rev. J. F. Ewing, of Toorak, Melbourne, notice of whose sad, early death, in the midst of abounding and successful labours in the Gospel, was given in THE CHRISTIAN recently. The better to qualify himself for this work, Mr. Davies came to Edinburgh and attended the University. Returning to Melbourne, he proceeded with his sister last year to Seoul, Korea, as a representative of the Christian young men of Victoria. And now, with all his gifts, scholarship, and experience, he has been called higher, to the lasting grief of many warm friends in Edinburgh and London, and to the great regret of thousands who loved and esteemed him in Victoria.

In a recent letter to one on this side, he wrote: "Pray for us and our work here. It does seem such a great land to be possessed by a handful of sinful ignorant men and women like us. God grant that we may not fail through unbelief"; and further, "I don't know what message to send L——, except that, if he should give himself to God for mission work, he would never regret it."

Who among us will go to fill up the gap and carry on God's war?—Yours faithfully,

West Wickham, Kent. DAVID BEATH.

THE SOCIETY FOR DISTRIBUTING SCRIPTURE TRUTH.—The Midland Railway Company has given permission to this Society to place hanging rolls and handbooks in the waiting-rooms on its system. The secretary of the Society is Mr. Peter B. Maxwell, 47, Pevensey-road, Eastbourne.

BASEL GERMAN EVANGELICAL MISSIONARY SOCIETY.—The fiftieth report of this agency in South-Western India describes a truly excellent work. The districts are Canara, South Mahratta, Malabar, and Nilgiris. There are 66 European labourers, of whom 47 are married. The native pastors are 15 in number; evangelists and catechists, 106; Christian schoolmasters and mistresses, 177, and Bible-women, 16. Together with other workers, the agents of the Mission number 549 in all, whose time and energies are directed to educating and enlightening the people. The congregations number 9682 souls, being 290 in excess of the previous year. The chief aim is to evangelise the heathen, and, in order to this, advantage is taken of all public assemblies, such as festivals and markets, to sow the good seed of God's Word. There are 121 different schools, with 5019 male and 1353 female pupils, not reckoning those who attend the Sunday-schools. Orphanage work, higher education, the training of theological students, and the preparation of books, add to the all-round usefulness of the Mission. Contributions in England are received by Mr. I. P. Werner, 46, New Broad-street, London, E.C.

HOME TEACHING FOR THE BLIND.

THIS Society provides teaching for the blind at their own homes, or in institutions where they may be resident. Viscount MIDDLETON presided at the annual meeting in Exeter Lower Hall last week. The Society has seventeen teachers, and seventeen libraries of books embossed in Dr. Moon's type. With one exception, all the teachers are themselves blind. During the year, 2,143 persons have been visited by the teachers in and near London; and 49,878 visits have been made to the homes of the blind. The number of books lent was 58,859. These facts are in themselves eloquent appeals on behalf of the Society. The work is extending to India where there is great need for its operations.

The Chairman hoped the committee would be enabled to proceed with less anxious care in the matter of funds. The work is based on the principle of helping people to help themselves, and also to help others. Rev. W. H. WEBB-PEPLOE said the thought that should animate people in assisting this Society was that God desired this world to be bright, and we ought to count it an honour to be permitted to bring the means of cheering the dark hours of those afflicted with blindness. Rev. HENRY BRIGHT said that people very advanced in years had no difficulty in learning to read Dr. Moon's type, and bore testimony to the happy effects of enabling the blind to read the Word of God. Rev. E. G. SWAIN testified in a similar way from personal knowledge.

Dr. MOON expressed deep gratitude to God that he had been enabled to provide books for the blind which they could readily read after a short term of instruction. He narrated several instances of how the blind were led to Jesus through reading for themselves the Word of life. Austria, India, and Russia were beginning to profit by the introduction of books for their blind. Mr. GEORGE MARTIN TAIT said a foreign language was no bar to the use of Dr. Moon's system, and predicted the best results of the work of teaching the blind of India to read, especially in zenanas. The BISHOP OF BEDFORD gave a cheery address for the special declectation of the blind.

MRS. PARSONS' HOME, WALTHAMSTOW.—DEAR SIR,—May I refer your readers to the note you kindly inserted on May 23 about our Home at Walthamstow, and say that the committee is already formed and in active work? Happily, most of the friends who have come forward and banded together at this crisis are those who have known the work, and practically sympathised with it, ever since we came to Walthamstow. This step has, I am assured, been taken under the guidance of God, and will not only relieve the pressure of single-handed responsibility, but in every way strengthen my hands and benefit the Home. I am thankful to state that we have received about £180 towards the £200 wanted to clear off debts. Readers of THE CHRISTIAN have often helped us in the past, and we shall be grateful for their practical sympathy now.—Yours faithfully,

MARY PARSONS.

DUBLIN UNITED SERVICES.—The committee of the free breakfasts, which are provided for the poor every Sunday morning, in the Christian Union Buildings, have rendered a cheering report for 1889. Pleased as they are to have been in a position to provide 31,000 breakfasts during the year for men, women, and children, without distinction of class or creed, and praiseworthy as such a beneficent work may be considered, yet the breakfasts are merely a means to an end, and that end is the presentation of the Gospel of God's grace to the recipients of the charity. This is done by the singing of Gospel hymns, and by Gospel addresses to the adults; while the children are placed in classes in another part of the premises where they are instructed by their teachers in the Word of God. Meetings for women have been held with encouraging results. Penny dinners and special treats have also been organised. The hon. treasurer is Mr. J. R. Fowler, 6, Duncairn-terrace, Bray.

GOD OF NATIONS.

BY REV. JOSEPH COOK.

God of the nations rise,
Fix on Thyself our eyes,
  Wisdom, Love, Might;
Draw Thou as noon-tide nigh,
Flood Thou the earth and sky;
Keen, white, pure, vast, and high,
  Let there be Light.

God of our fathers' day,
Make us as wise as they,
  Thy Truth our guide;
Ours be thy bugle call,
One plan Thou hast in all,
As the new ages fall,
  In us abide.

God make our eyesight clear,
Duty as freedom dear;
  Right all our wrongs:
Strong in Truth gladly heard,
Loyal to all thy Word,
Nations with hope deferred,
  Fill Thou with songs.

God in all faces shine,
So make Thou all men thine,
  Under one dome:
Face to face, soul to soul,
East to west, pole to pole,
As the great ages roll,
  Be Thou our home.

HOXTON HALL.

A RECEPTION of subscribers and friends by the president and committee of the Hoxton Hall Mission was held on the evening of Friday last. The hall was crowded. Mr. W. I. PALMER, president, expressed special pleasure that Mr. William Noble had so far recovered strength as to be present, adding that he hoped Mrs. Noble would soon be able to resume her self-devoted work. He was happy to recognise a more adequate realisation among people, high and low, of the grave evils of drunkenness, and a greater earnestness in devising means to abate those evils. The churches, however, need to be thoroughly awakened. The influence of Hoxton Hall is widely felt, and the better the work is done there the better it will be done everywhere. What is needed is persistent endeavour to change the habits of the people. Mr. JOHN T. RAE read to the meeting an interesting paper, prepared by Mrs. J. C. Mackenzie on work among women and girls at Hoxton Hall. Mention was made of the Help-one-another Society, the Girls' Guild of Good Life, and the Women's Bible-class, all of which are doing splendid work among our East-end sisters. Mr. GOULDING described the work among the men and youths, including the Help-myself Society, the Youths' Union, and the Platform Band. Regarding work among the little ones, Mr. JOHN W. JONES gave a most interesting and encouraging account.

Mr. A. W. ELLIOT spoke of the work done by the public meetings, by which 2400 persons are reached and influenced weekly from the Hoxton Hall platform. Mr. JOHN T. RAE, told of pledges and visitation work for the past year. It had been ascertained that 65 per cent. of the men, and 64 per cent. of the women remained faithful to their pledges. Mr. Rae expressed to Mr. Palmer the best wishes of the workers of Hoxton Hall for many happy returns of his birthday (May 31). The Chairman afterwards presented to Mrs. Wiesberg, who had acted as registrar of pledges every evening since the opening of the Hall twelve years ago, a silver tea and coffee service, as a token of appreciation for her long-continued service. Before the meeting broke up, Mr. William Noble delivered an incisive speech, and Mrs. Goulding earnestly addressed abstainers, beseeching them to add to their temperance a living faith in the Lord Jesus Christ.

The Dods-Bruce Case.

The proceedings in the Free Church of Scotland Assembly last week, as to the cases of Professors Dods and Bruce, were painful in more ways than one. Occasion was provided for latitudinarian speeches, and votes were taken which demonstrated an influential sympathy with loose views as to the authority and teachings of Holy Scripture. Moreover, evidence was afforded of the working of the "spirit of the time" among the pastors that are to be, for (sadly ominous incident!) the students seized many opportunities of cheering sentiments which they cannot have thoroughly studied, and of showing favour for positions which many maturer minds cannot but regard with distrust and alarm. That the Professors are men held in high esteem for their personal character and scholastic attainments cannot excuse their action in sowing broadcast the crudities and speculations of critical methods which are largely rationalistic. In the pursuit of a vaunted "scientific method" of study, they seem to have forgotten their grave duty to the Church at large.

That Dr. Dods had reduced inspiration to a mere figure of speech, and watered down vital doctrines of the faith, was fully established. The Assembly adopted the College Committee's report, declining to institute proceedings for teaching that which is at variance with the standards of the Church; but plainly re-affirmed the faith of the Free Church on the verities affected by Dr. Dods' writings. In the case of Dr. Bruce, in some respects more serious than the other, the result was similar, but the proceedings had an added interest, from the fact that the Professor, as a member of the Assembly, spoke in his own defence. Protesting that his intention had been to do service to the cause of faith, he expressed sincere regret for any misunderstanding that might have arisen from the way he had put things in his books.

Some of the speakers well lectured the professors as to their responsibilities and duties. The result of the proceedings cannot be regarded as satisfying the best men in the Free Church; it by no means harmonises with the evidences of holy zeal and doctrinal purity of which the past affords such noble illustrations. Not by casting doubts upon the Bible, or exalting reason at the expense of Revelation, can professors expect to equip men for a ministry which shall bring forth fruit unto eternity. There would be no such waste of precious time and abuse of brief opportunity — to the sorrow of believers and the joy of unbelievers—if the solemn words of our Lord, so distinctly relevant to the subject, were duly appreciated: "Whoso shall cause one of these little ones who believe on Me to stumble, it is profitable for him that a great millstone should be hanged about his neck, and that he should be sunk in the depth of the sea" (Matt. xviii. 6, R.V.).

It was remarked that more orthodoxy was talked that day in the Free Church Assembly than ever had been heard there in the same space of time. But words are interpreted by deeds, and the length and breadth and thickness of the orthodox declarations made will be measured by the action taken. "Not guilty, but don't do it again," is not a verdict which carries conviction of wisdom and sincerity to them that are without.

The emphatic declaration that the Free Church tenaciously holds the Gospel verities particularised by many speakers was irrelevant, if it did not imply that those verities had been called in question by the arraigned Professors. But, if the Assembly found it necessary to affirm these foundation truths, because it felt them to be imperilled, how can it commit the teaching of future evangelists and pastors to those who give such uncertain sounds?

After all has been said that can be said in excuse of Professors Dods and Bruce, it leaves them experimenters and guessers, in contrast with the Lord Jesus, who said of Himself and his forerunner, "We speak that we do know, and testify that we have seen," and who told his conquered persecutor, when he asked, "Who art Thou Lord?" "I am Jesus whom thou persecutest. But rise and stand upon thy feet, for I have appeared unto thee for this purpose—to make thee a minister and a witness both of these things which thou hast seen, and of those things in the which I will appear unto thee." How strongly does the testimony which this Apostle bore to the truth of Christ contrast with such halting words as these from Professor Dods' work on the Corinthians, p. 305:—

> The atoning death of Christ may be spoken of as the substitutionary sacrifice of a victim on whom our guilt is laid; but to speak thus of the death of Christ is to make large use of the language of symbol, and we must hold our minds open for the better knowledge which will make such language seem quite inadequate.

It was never more true than now that "of all the cants that are canted in this canting world, the cant of hypocrisy may be the worst, but the cant of criticism is the most tormenting." There is no cant of criticism so tormenting as that which calls itself "the higher criticism," and which, professing to be gathering with Christ, scattereth abroad. The most unsatisfactory part of the lame and impotent conclusion arrived at with regard to the two Professors is that they are encouraged to add to the cant of criticism the worse cant of hypocrisy; and while they have abundantly shown their departure from the doctrines which the Free Church holds as fundamental, they are practically exhorted not to teach what they are known to hold, or to teach that which they are known not to believe.

> Oh wad some power the giftie gie us,
> To see oorsels as ithers see us:
> It wad frae mony a blunder free us,
> And foolish notion.

This is how the "Peace, peace! when there is no peace" policy is described by Professor John Stuart Blackie.

> On the one hand, the Assembly could not stultify themselves by casting out a man from a seat to which they had quite recently appointed him with full knowledge of his character and views, and on the other hand, the extreme party in the north did not feel themselves, either in public sympathy or in pecuniary power, strong enough to separate from the great body of the church to which they belonged, and constitute themselves into a distinct body of a more exclusive stamp. Accordingly, no doubt under the direction of Principal Rainy, who is a practised diplomatist, a middle course was adopted, which may be put into rhyme shortly thus:—
> You've done a bad thing: but you're not
> A bad boy: this time you go free;
> But if your tongue you dare to wag
> Again without a Dingwall gag,
> You'll get a flogging for your fee.

Or, in plain prose, the Rev. Marcus Dods was dismissed from the bar with a solemn warning to beware of interpreting any passage of the Bible in such a way as to contradict the words of the Westminster Confession, and, above all things, in his teaching to eschew any expression that might fret the skin of the Dingwall theologians. That Professor Marcus Dods will know how to do this we entertain no doubt; a wise man who speaks wisdom to fools all round is flinging pearls before swine; the liberal and truly Christian atmosphere which a man like Dr. Dods habitually breathes will be quite sufficient to redeem the young theologians of the rising generation from the worship of fossilised creeds without going formally to war with the champions of an outlived orthodoxy; and the wise policy of all who feel themselves called upon to attack antiquated bigotries is to undermine them quietly, not to assault them with observation.

The fling at Principal Rainy's diplomacy comes badly from one who advocates as a "wise policy" what might be more truly defined as unscrupulous hypocrisy.

CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES.

ETHIOPIA is being colonised by Italians. The scheme has for some years been a subject of interest in Italian official circles.

THE GREEK CHURCH has its Missionary Society, which was founded about eleven years ago, under the patronage of the Empress of Russia. Its work in the less populous regions of the Empire includes much aggressive effort among the pagan races of Siberia. In Japan there is a vast machinery, and apparently much success has attended the work. In Europe the schools of the Society have done a good deal to counteract the Mohammedan propaganda.

THE ANTI-JEWISH MOVEMENT IN GERMANY is finding less favour in some circles. The proceedings of the Protestant Social Congress indicate a complete change of opinion on the part of some who formerly symyathised with the Judenhetze. Dr. Harnack, Professor of Theology at the University of Berlin, exclaimed, "Let us endeavour to gain the affection of the Jews who have been so long down-trodden by us." Similar sentiments were uttered by other influential speakers.

GERMANY. — Herr Bachstein, Romish curate at Griefswald, has just publicly joined the Protestant community. Formerly a very ardent Ultramontane, he arrived at a knowledge of evangelical doctrine by the casual perusal of two pages of Luther's Smaller Catechism.—A Young Men's Christian Association has been founded at Hamburg with Baron Oertzen at its head. A house has been bought for the use of the members, the Berlin Association having shown much sympathy, and rendered valuable aid.

LEPROSY IN RUSSIA.—Leprosy is a scourge which weighs heavily upon thousands of people in Russia. By degrees efforts are being made to study the disease and alleviate the sufferings of its victims. A syndicate of noblemen has been formed at Dorpat, in Livonia, with the object of devising means for the isolation of lepers in the Russo-Baltic provinces. The large property holders of Livonia have placed at disposal two farms, one in Rennal and one in Stackeln, where hospitals will be erected, one for incurable, the other for curable cases.

SWITZERLAND.—Mission services are not so common in this land as in England. Nevertheless, they are being used more frequently than hitherto. If the sheep will not come to the shepherd, then the shepherd must look up the sheep. Recently a series of special meetings was held at Berne, organised by the two Methodist churches. Three pastors and two evangelists conducted the proceedings, and a very favourable impression was made upon the classes of people who are outside the churches. Night after night the audiences increased, the poorest of the poor being largely attracted.

FRANCE.—During the last fifty years the number of culprits under nineteen years of age has increased 140 per cent., and the number between sixteen and twenty years of age 240 per cent. Public-houses have increased, also alcoholic madness. Dens of infamy are more numerous than ever; the birth rate shows a terribly suggestive decline; filthy novels and immoral prints pour from the press. All these signs emphasize the great need of France for the Gospel of Christ, and as the efforts are being made to supply that need, so the people show an encouraging readiness to hear, and signs of better times in store are being multiplied.

EVANGELISATION IN FRANCE.—Describing work in and around Barbezieux, Charente, M. Duproix states that during last winter he engaged in evangelistic work in nineteen communes, and organised thirty-eight meetings. In one district a Roman Catholic curate made several attempts to create disturbance, but no one would second his endeavours, which rather resulted in larger audiences assembling than otherwise would have attended. During the various missions 85 Romanists abjured their old form of faith, and ranged themselves in the Protestant ranks. There is a growing conviction in the Reformed churches of France that if the Gospel could be proclaimed throughout the land at the present time, there would be a great accession to the Protestant community. The people are, in large numbers, thirsting for that peace of mind which the Papal system cannot give them. Christ alone will satisfy their craving. The numerous audiences which now attend Protestant lectures and addresses, and the eagerness with which the Holy Scriptures are accepted by the people, are very encouraging indications.

REV. DAVID KERR CROSS, M.B., C.M.,

Of Nyassaland, Central Africa.

THE subject of this sketch spent nearly all his boyhood, and received his education, in Glasgow. While yet in his teens he took an earnest interest in home mission work. He was one of the leaders of a band of youths in the Barony Free Church, several of whom are now successful Christian workers. He owed his interest in Africa greatly to the influence of his Bible-class teacher, Dr. Black, one of the two first medical missionaries at Livingstonia.

When Dr. Black died, David Cross formed the desire to take up the standard that had fallen from the hands of his much-admired teacher. He accordingly began the study of medicine. He was a successful missionary for two years in Blochairn Free Church, and then for four years in the territorial mission of Pollokshields Free Church. Though a missionary during the whole of his University course, he gained some of the highest honours in his medical classes. He is one of those resolute Scottish youths who have achieved a University education by their own unaided efforts. Like Livingstone, in whose footsteps he has followed, his heart and life were largely moulded by a Christian mother, who was taken to her rest soon after he had started for Africa.

He reached Lake Nyassa in 1885, and in 1886, along with his young wife, the late lamented Rev. J. A. Bain, and Mr. MacIntosh, a missionary artisan, he settled at the north end of the Lake, which was then the most advanced mission outpost in that part of Africa. Of these four, he is now the only survivor. His wife was taken from him in less than four months after their marriage. She was the daughter of Mr. James Gibson, of Rednock Glasgow, and was a noble-hearted missionary. She had gladly resolved to surrender the comforts of a wealthy home that she might offer herself for the mission field, and was for some time under training for her chosen work.

Dr. Kerr Cross has attracted much attention of late by his heroic services as a non-combatant in the war between the African Lakes Company and the Arab slave traders. The leaders of that heroic little band of Britons, whose numbers during two years of warfare ranged from three to twenty, have warmly acknowledged that but for his skill and encouragement they should have had to retire from their post. In the end of last year the Arabs signed a treaty in favour of the white men. During the war Dr. Cross offered his services also to the wounded in the Arab stockade.

Dr. Cross is now enjoying a well-earned furlough. He has done something to narrow the circle of the "unexplored" in the heart of Africa. He is the first white man who has stood on the shores of Lake Rukwa, which lies about 150 miles N.W. of Lake Nyassa; and he has increased our knowledge of the watershed of the Congo and Zambesi. He has also brought information which has been appreciated by our Government at this crisis in Africa's history.

He has a very favourable opinion of the country and the people in his African diocese. The earth there yields three crops in the year, and is rich in minerals. The traveller can walk for twelve hours under the almost unbroken shade of fruitful bananas, and amid great pastoral wealth of every sort. The soil is well watered and free from fever, as it is some 5000 feet above the sea-level; and it is likely to become the health resort for Central Africa. The people are free, kind, fairly honest, brave, and vigorous; the men are usually not under six feet.

These simple children of nature are capable of generous gratitude and loyalty to the white man, whom they love as their friend, and even reverence as a miracle-worker for what seem to them his superhuman cures. They positively do homage to the medical missionary as a god in human form. When Mrs. Cross died a great company of the chiefs came to sympathise with the mourner. Like Job's friends, they sat from morning till evening and never spoke or moved, and then retired softly and slowly in the twilight. They know the gift, and even the proprieties, of sympathy. Dr. Cross has thus, like Livingstone, discovered that the African heart has, amid all its darkness, many noble qualities, which, when sanctified, might make great Christians—namely, a wonderful quickness in discovering and appreciating real worth, goodwill to those worthy of it, noble loyalty to a true leader, and readiness to be won by Christ-like men, and to receive the Gospel from their lips. There is among them "the making" of men like Livingstone's "faithfuls," Chuma and Susi.

During the war Dr. Cross sometimes had 1000 blacks at a religious service under a tree. At Bandawé, to the south, Dr. Laws has some 3000 or 4000 children at school. Young Ethiopia is eager to get the key of knowledge into his hand, and can learn to read in six months. Dr. Cross, like all missionary pioneers, is reducing their language to writing, that he may give them, first of all, the Word of God in their mother tongue. He is at present translating the Gospel of Luke. The banana groves there are often vocal with the music of our favourite hymns.

Altogether Dr. Cross's story is among the freshest and most inspiring one could hear. He has two burdens—the desire to carry the Gospel to the Africans, and to deliver them from the black-hearted slave-hunter, who is the reproach of humankind. He has witnessed horrors like those which made Livingstone feel as if he had been in hell, when he saw the people in the market-place of Nanyuema, under the fire of the Arabs, "throwing their arms aloft as if appealing to the great Father above." The price of a young woman there in her prime is an old flintlock gun which was once used by our soldiers in defending British liberty.

O Lord, how long!

A Nyassa boy can be clothed, and housed, and fed, and educated, for £2 a year. Surely there is no other corner in our little planet where money goes so far. One may read in the opening pages of Dr. Livingstone's life that, when he lay under the paw of the lion, wondering what part of him the lion would eat first, his life was saved by his native helper, whose salary had been provided by a minister's wife who had been moved by Livingstone's story. Who can tell but some of these boys may yet become the Luthers, the John Knoxes, the Wesleys, the Whitfields, of Nyassaland.

Ethiopia is now hasting "to stretch out her hands unto God," and unto us. By our great travellers and missionaries she has been brought so near us that we can almost see her outstretched arms with the cruel fetters upon them, and hear her imploring cries. Now is the time to extend a helping hand to her. The meeting of the two hands —hers and ours—may be as life from the dead to that most interesting and cruelly wronged race.

FRIENDS' YEARLY MEETING.

IN aiming at brevity last week, I was not clear on one point. When stating that "for perhaps 150 years there have not been so many accessions to membership as during the past year," I should have added in any single year—though this is probably understood.

To return to the Yearly Meeting itself, the interest did not lessen as it proceeded, and the evening meetings were of a very enthusiastic character. The reports from the six Northern Quarterly Meetings showed much and increasing work on hand. Last year a high-class school was opened near Reading, to supply a first-rate education, and prevent leakage through the influence of similar schools under Church of England teaching and patronage. Now the education of the artisan class joining the Society is claiming earnest attention, and is to be discussed with a view, if possible, to settlement next year.

Friends have always regarded a solid education as indispensable in maintaining the true position of the Society. Unlike any other Church, the women hold their Yearly Meeting concurrently with the men's; and not unfrequently visits are interchanged. Such times are often exceedingly solemn. A Friend has a "concern" or "burden on the heart" for the other Meeting. Leave is asked, and generally obtained, and a time fixed. The Friend under concern comes in, accompanied by two or three others, and a period of silent prayer ensues; then the burden or message is delivered, and the Friend retires. Its import is sometimes taken up and considered. Thus, two or three years ago, a lady's heart was moved on the subject of peace, and extensive action followed its earnest consideration.

This year a lady opened the burden of her soul to the men on behalf of the cultured and wealthy classes longing for the rest she had herself found among the Friends. Knowing "the heart of a stranger," and the strugglings for light and life widely felt among them, she besought the Yearly Meeting to meet the need. Herself moving in the highest circles, her appeal had great weight, and doubtless ere long the Society will somehow bring its great principles more prominently before those tossed on the sea of doubt, and longing for a haven of peace and rest. Free from all priestcraft and ceremonialism, and recognising the real presence of God in man, it unites rich and poor alike to Him who stands and knocks at the door of every heart, and when admitted makes all truly happy. The women's Yearly Meeting had several visits from men under concern, and gave much consideration to work among prisoners. Memorials of a number of deceased Friends were read, in each case evoking kindly comment. The Continental Committee's report told of service for Christ in fields far apart, and conflicts and victories in many parts of the world.

On Monday evening the largest house was crowded at the Foreign Mission meeting. The gratifying fact was announced that the income last year was over £15,000, and that we have fifty-three English Friends in the foreign field. John T. Dorland reported work at Brumana, on Mount Lebanon; Ellen Nainby could tell of eighty or a hundred zenanas open to her and her friends at Hoslumgabad, in India; and Frederick Sessions gave a powerful description and appeal regarding Central India. Henry Stanley Newman spoke of March 3 as a red-letter day in China, for then the Friends' Mission had a splendid inauguration at Chun-King, the head of the robbers and the chief of the beggars being among the guests.

Large as was the Monday evening gathering for Foreign Missions, that on Tuesday was larger still on Home Mission work. The venerable Isaac Sharp, in the chair, gave a touching account of the origin among Friends of both home and foreign mission enterprise; and the speakers that followed showed at once their earnestness in the cause of Christ, and their loyalty to the Church of their choice and love. They were Jonathan B. Hodgkin, Darlington, and J. Fyfe Stewart, London; the Secretaries; Howard Nicholson, of Hart's-lane, London; Isabella Young, West Hartlepool; George Ash, Gloucester; William Henry Wilson, Cumberland; and Doctor Hessenauer, of the new East-end Mission. The meeting was felt to be the best perhaps yet held, and not a few home missionaries added to the staff are hoped for as a result. Notwithstanding removals from ill-health and other causes, the staff enlarges year by year, and "yet their is room" for more.

Wednesday evening was set apart for the annual meeting of the "Friends' Temperance Union," and a very enthusiastic and splendid gathering showed the grip this great subject has on Friends. The president and chairman, John T. Grace, of Bristol, launched it well; Joshua Rowntree, M.P., Wm. Jones, and Henry Wigham, as well as Mrs. Barnes (from New York), sustained the interest to the close. A united meeting of young people on Thursday evening, at the request of John T. Dorland, brought the outside meetings to a conclusion, and, we cannot doubt, far-reaching results will follow. Many have confessed the blessing received.

In the Yearly Meeting the subject of peace was eloquently dwelt on, and a delegation appointed to the coming Conference in London. The monthly publication, Messiah's Kingdom, is reaching the editors of influential papers, and helping to turn the current of public opinion into purer channels.

The annual gathering has been felt to be one of the most favoured and helpful for many years past, and thankfulness and hope have widely prevailed.

Cardiff. WILLIAM HOBSON.

MEDICAL MISSIONS.

THE second annual missionary meeting of the St. Bartholomew's Hospital Medical Missionary Society, was held on May 29, at the Hospital. There was a good gathering, presided over by Dr. R. THORNE THORNE.

After the financial statement of the preceding half year had been read by one of the secretaries, the members had the pleasure of listening to a most interesting address by Rev. J. C. HOARE, who has been labouring for fourteen years in China under the C.M.S. He began by showing an idol—the Chinese god of medicine—and forcibly contrasted the spiritual and medical condition of the people with that of those at home. The hospital at Ning-po, where he had been working, had only been opened about four years, the medical aid being given by the doctor of the port. It was used for reclamation of opium-smokers, and for general surgical practice. He brought forward four very strong arguments as to the help that medical work is to the missionary work; these were that—(1) The hospital was a place to which those with diseases in the various towns through which the missionary was travelling could be sent; (2) openings were made for work for God in many homes where otherwise no missionary could enter; (3) many conversions occurred in the hospital itself while the sick were being treated; (4) through those converted in the hospital the Gospel spread widely. He ended by an earnest appeal to those present to give up their lives to God for mission work.

Dr. CHURCHER, of Tangier (North Africa Mission) spoke, alluding to the moral and physical degradation of the Moors through sin and disease. He was confident that medical missionary work would be the only means of opening up certain parts of Morocco to the Gospel, which is the power of God to salvation.

The secretaries of the Society are Messrs. W. McAdam Eccles and J. Ll. Thomas, St. Bartholomew's Hospital, E.C., who would be pleased to forward any particulars of the work to any desiring the same.

THE SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.—Carried on quietly and unostentatiously, this work continues to enjoy God's blessing. Itineration is still a means of much good, while by the circulation of Gospel portions and religious books many doors are opened. The sixty-ninth annual report truly says: "Ireland is now open largely to receive the missionaries of 'the truth as it is in Jesus.'" The Society's work is not only widespread but distinctly special in character. Speaking the truth in love, agents open the Scriptures in peasants' houses and on the wayside to those who otherwise would remain in spiritual darkness; going throughout the country, and working under the superintendence of zealous supporters of the Society, they carry Gospel light into some of the darkest places of the island. We join the committee in commending the work to the sympathy of all who have at heart the glory of God and the welfare of Ireland. The secretary is Captain J. Kearney White, 27, Lower Pembroke-street, Dublin.

Gathered Gold.

WHOM SHOULD WE FEAR?

To FEAR the censures of men, when God is your judge; to fear their evil, when God is your defence; to fear death, when He is the entrance to life and felicity, is unreasonable and pernicious.—Jeremy Taylor.

THE SABBATH.

Oh! day of days! Shall hearts set free
No "minstrel rapture" find for thee?
Thou art the Sun of other days,
They shine by giving back thy rays.

Keble.

STRENGTH IN WEAKNESS.

God works with broken reeds. If a man conceits himself to be an iron pillar, God can do nothing with or by him. All the self-conceit and confidence has to be taken out of him first. He has to be brought low before the Father can use him for his purposes. The lowlands hold the water, and, if only the sluice is open, the gravitation of his grace does all the rest, and carries the flood into the depths of the lowly heart.—Alexander Maclaren.

THE DAY OF JUDGMENT.

Welsh Hymn (translated).

Ten thousand glorious wonders
Shall greet the morning ray,
When earth's storm-beaten children
Shall wake to endless day;
All clad in robes of whiteness,
And crowned with fadeless bloom,
In their Redeemer's likeness
Ascending from the tomb!

Behold! the day is coming
In which our faith to test,
To see who have the substance,
And who on shadows rest.
Lord, let my soul unworthy
Be sealed by Thine own hand;
The one, the only token,
The final test will stand.

"IT IS WRITTEN."

Jesus has taught us the use of the Bible in self-defence. The Captain of our salvation girded Himself with the sword of the Spirit. You will be mortally wounded if you are not able to parry the strokes of the enemy. Search out the meaning of God's Word, and what you know use. There was great vehemence in the words of Jesus. He was not content to parry the stroke; He cut with the edge of the blade. And the wounds He made have not healed to this day.—Thomas Champness.

"PRAY WITHOUT CEASING."

What the key is to the watch, that prayer is to religion; it winds it up, and sets it agoing. It is before other duties in regard of opportunity for its performance. A Christian cannot always hear, or always read, or always communicate, but he may pray continually. No place, no company, can deprive him of this privilege. If he be on the top of a house with Peter, he may pray; if he be in the bottom of the ocean with Jonah, he may pray; if he be walking in the fields with Isaac, he may pray when no eye seeth him; if he be waiting at table like Nehemiah, he may pray when no ear heareth him. If he be in the mountain with our Saviour, he may pray; if he be in the prison with Paul, he may pray; wherever he is, prayer will help him to find God out. Every saint is God's temple; "and he that carrieth his temple about him," saith Austin, "may go to prayer when he pleaseth."—George Swinnock.

Notes from Cambridge.

ON Wednesday evening, May 28, Mr. J. C. Swinburne-Hanham, hon. secretary of the Cremation Society of England, delivered a lecture in the Guildhall upon "Cremation." He based his arguments mainly upon cremation being better for health, doing all that burial did without leaving behind it its evils. Professor Mayor presided.

In view of the approaching sea-side services of the Children's Special Service Mission, efforts are being made to obtain Christian University men. The C.S.S.M. put it before University men in a meeting last year, that they wanted "men who are saved, and who know it."

I have before me the report of the Cambridge Refuge Home, founded and supported by undergraduates. They have a matron who has a wonderful influence in the Home by her life. There have been several cases not only of truly reformed life, but of really changed hearts. Severe lines are avoided, the committee believing that love rules without law.

CHRIST'S COLLEGE.

This College has an open-air mission in Chesterton, a suburb of Cambridge; also a mission to tramps in Barnwell during the winter months—a work very much needed. A service is conducted also in Barnwell for children, by a Christ's man.

On Wednesday morning the College prayer-meeting is held, and on Saturday evening there is a Bible-reading for the members of the College.

Among the Christ's men who have joined the C.M.S., we notice the names of Revs. H. C. Milward, M.A., N. India; P. K. Fyson, M.A., Japan; J. A. Robinson, M.A., Niger; E. A. Douglas, B.A., Christ's and Ridley, Tinnevelly. Missionary bishops include Right Revs. Dr. Gell, Madras; Dr. Cheetham, Sierra Leone; Dr. Sweatman, Toronto.

SUMMER OUTINGS.—Only those who have to live the whole year through in the heavy atmosphere of London life can fully realise or properly estimate the boon of having a day's outing in the country, in one of the sunny months from May to September, and by no class of London's perennial dwellers is such a privilege more highly appreciated than by its working girls. Several friends have during the past few years kindly invited the residents of the various Homes for Working Girls to their country or suburban residences, giving them free access to their grounds or meadows, and generously providing meals for the day; whilst others have borne the expense of sending a number of them for "a day at the sea-side." Now that the summer months are near at hand, after a long and trying winter, it is earnestly hoped that some of those who have it in their power to thus give a day's holiday to some of London's toilers, will remember its working girls and young women. Any communication on this subject, on behalf of those living in the nine Homes for Working Girls in London, will be gladly received by Mr. John Shrimpton, honorary director, Westminster-chambers, 3, Victoria-street, London, S.W.

Tracts and Scriptural Portions, in Italian, are needed for distribution among the hundred Italians employed at the quarries near Bodmin, Cornwall. They may be sent to Mr. G. E. Pearce, Free Library, Camelford, Cornwall.

Mrs. Reaney's Convalescent and Holiday Home, Blackpool.—SIR,—Kindly allow me to correct an impression that the work connected with my Convalescent and Holiday Home, Blackpool, will be in any way affected by my removal from Manchester. The Home has already proved the means of blessing to many, and will continue on the same footing as heretofore. It is entirely unsectarian? During the next few months I hope to be in residence, and shall be glad to receive application from those who would like to share in the advantages it offers to such as are in search of rest.

Yours, &c., ISABEL REANEY.

Cavendish House, Wellington-road, South Shore, Blackpool.

NORTHFIELD SUMMER SCHOOL.

MR. MOODY has secured the services of Rev. W. R. Mowll, M.A. (of All Souls' Church, Langham-place, W.), to address the students who will gather from the various European and American Universities this month and next at Northfield.

Mr. Mowll is well suited to the task. Himself a graduate of Cambridge, he understands the difficulties, and appreciates the advantages, of college life, while his fine physique, his powerful character, and genial manner, will, we doubt not, make him as popular with young men there as here.

But there are other and more important qualifications that Northfield requires, and in these Mr. Mowll is not lacking. He is one of those men who knows what he believes, believes it heartily, and declares it with a boldness that defies all comers. We confidently expect that his visit to Northfield will prove a great blessing to those who hear him.

LONDON AGED CHRISTIAN SOCIETY.

THIS Society endeavours to see that, as far as possible, not a single aged believer is destitute of the things necessary for the body or the soul. If Christian sympathy should be excited by any suffering, it undoubtedly ought to exert itself in aid of the poverty of the hoary head found in the way of righteousness. Last year the number of the pensioners was 195, and there are now eighteen approved candidates awaiting for admission. The balance-sheet unfortunately shows a deficit of about £70.

Sir A. LAWRENCE, the chairman of the annual meeting last week, said that, so far as years were concerned, he was qualified to speak for his aged friends. Eighty summers had passed over his head. He would urge them to believe, even from his own experience, that blessed are those who put their trust in Christ.

Rev. F. A. C. LILLINGSTON, in an excellent address, advocated the claims of the aged on Christian sympathy and assistance. He enumerated the various ways in which the aged Christians, even though in straitened circumstances, can cheer, encourage, and direct younger persons who have to sustain the burden and heat of the day in the Master's work. King's messengers were these pilgrims, with rich blessings for us in their one hand, but with the other hand empty, to test our fidelity to the Lord of all, in giving to them of our substance. Mr. R. W. DIBDIN having spoken, Rev. H. W. WEBB-PEPLOE deprecated the selfishness of Christians who attend meetings that give promise of being entertaining, and absent themselves from gatherings calculated to promote the best interests of humanity. A felicitous exposition by Rev. THOMAS KEANE was given on a number of texts enjoining kindness to the poor, and Mr. G. L. DASHWOOD instructed the old people with a lecture on some street advertisements.

The address delivered to the pensioners was by Rev. A. H. DELME-RADCLIFFE, who based his remarks on Gen. xxv. 8: "A good old age"; and the general treatment was helpful, hopeful, and strengthening. At the close Rev. G. F. WHEDBORNE attributed the public neglect of this most deserving Society mainly to the fact that it was not more generally known; he appealed strongly for exertion on the part of individual Christians in doing all in their power to remove this obstacle to its wider usefulness.

THE ANTI-SLAVERY CONFERENCE has just completed the regulations for the suppression of the slave trade by land and sea, and the rules for the regulation of the traffic in arms and spirits. There only remains now the question of the import duties. A speedy conclusion is most desirable, otherwise it is possible that political complications may mar the exceedingly laborious work which has been accomplished.—Times.

SPURGEON.

SPURGEON, that pregnant mother-wit of thine
Still thrills the world to laughter and to tears—
Tears that lure soul-wrecks through the briny years,
Laughter that makes Doubt's mist-rolled ice-peaks shine!
Thy honest tongue's a magic looking-glass,
Where lost men find themselves themselves once more,
And rend with scorn the masks long years they wore,
And bless again blue heavens, and green, green grass.

Thine is a rugged, manly, royal soul—
Like some bold crag suffused with waterfalls,
Veiling in rainbow spray the thunder-roll
Of torrent voices and their trumpet calls!
Thy mighty, artless bow of common sense
Drives shaft-like home God's Whither and God's Whence.

CHARLES A. FOX.

THE CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY.

THE annual meeting of this Society was held in Exeter Hall last week. Mr. F. A. BEVAN, in his presidential remarks, said that while it knows no faltering and is always ready to take up new work, it keeps steadily to the old lines. There is much to be thankful for in reviewing the work for the year. There are 400 voluntary workers, men and women, who freely give their spare time to the labour of winning souls to Jesus. Even the physical work they undertake is enormous. Fifteen thousand persons are visited every week in eighteen workhouses, infirmaries, and casual wards. Three thousand lodging-houses are visited weekly. Eight mission halls, a home for working girls, and twenty open-air stations are sustained by the Community. Shelter to the homeless, food to the hungry, outings for children and adults, are provided, on no sparing scale.

Rev. Dr. TYLER said he was afraid that greater efforts were made to get people to come together than to preach the Gospel fully and faithfully. The great principles must not be neglected—repentance towards God, and faith towards the Lord Jesus Christ. What particularly struck Rev. PEDR WILLIAMS was the many-sided usefulness and evangelical character of the Community. Rev. GORDON J. H. LLEWELLYN said that whatever measure of grace they had experienced in the past was an encouragement for the future.

Mr. GEORGE WILLIAMS said the preaching of the Gospel was powerful when the heart of him who proclaimed it was full of the Holy Spirit. Touching on the origin of the work of the Christian Community, he said they were indebted to the French believers for much. Why, then, could they not now, after many days, send directly among the French people living in London some of the bread of life that Frenchmen gave to our ancestors many years ago? Let there be steady evangelistic labour among French residents in London, not confining it to the East of London. The expenditure of the Society somewhat exceeded the income last year, but before the benediction was pronounced, it had been almost met by contributions.

THE CUSTODY OF CHILDREN.—In a Bill dealing with the custody of children the Lord Chancellor proposes to enact that, where the parent or guardian of a child applies to the High Court for a writ or order for the production of the child, and the Court is of opinion that the parent or guardian has so conducted himself that the Court would refuse to enforce his right to the custody of the child, the Court may in its discretion decline to issue the writ or make the order.

AGED CHRISTIAN BLIND.

THE tenth annual meeting of the North London Homes for Aged Christian Blind Men and Women was held on Thursday of last week in the Jubilee Hall, on Hanley-road. There were many friends of the institutions present as well as a large number of blind persons. At present there are fifteen male and fifty-three female inmates in the Homes. The receipts for general maintenance fell short of the expenditure by about £170. There is a debt of some £1700 on the building fund, and it is much desired that this be entirely extinguished before the end of 1892 when Rev. H. Bright, the founder of the Homes, attains his jubilee. The committee warmly commend the maintenance deficiency, and the general debt extinction project, upon the generous consideration of the Christian public.

Mr. ARTHUR MARSHALL, who occupied the chair, commended the work done by the Homes, complimented the well-directed efforts of Mr. and Mrs. Bright, and considered the indebtedness trifling in view of the great tangible results that have been achieved. Mr. H. J. WILSON thought the public conscience is becoming more alive to the claims of the blind. The workhouse is no place for them, though many are now there. It is a matter of regret that, whilst the Homes can give accommodation to twelve more inmates, the condition of the funds prevents the vacancies being filled. Rev. J. R. WOOD, who has done much to promote the institutions, spoke eloquently of the benefits they confer. Rev. CHARLES BROWN said that the Homes are carrying on the work which Jesus began on earth, and which He would have all his followers continue.

Mr. F. A. BEVAN delivered a long and inspiriting address. Poverty combined with blindness should touch every heart. Comforts to the aged are in reality necessities, in order to make their declining years easy and bright. Those who minister such comforts accomplish things more pleasing in the sight of God than those who perform deeds called great and grand by the world.

After happy speeches had been delivered by Rev. W. Pierce and Mr. W. O. Clough, Rev. A. G. GRISWOLD addressed the blind who were in attendance, and especially the inmates of the Homes, illustrating how obedience to the command of Jesus "to love one another" would make their lives pleasant and cheerful in the conditions in which they found themselves.

UNION HALL MISSION.—Meetings were held on Whit-Monday, in connection with this Mission. The open-air services in Regent's Park, and in the streets, had many attentive listeners to the Gospel. The closing service of the day in Union Hall was of a very charming character. Several addresses were given, and at the close anxious ones were dealt with. I am hoping to use the three Gospel tents this summer if means are supplied. I would ask the prayers of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN that this work, which has been so remarkably owned of God, may be continued with earnestness and vigour during the summer months.

ROBERT BILKE.

Abergeldie, Greenhill Park, Harlesden, N.W.

THE MARTYRS' MEMORIAL HALL, DARTFORD, was opened on Wednesday, last week, the ceremony being entrusted to Colonel Sandys, M.P. The total cost of the building was £1638, all of which had been raised, so that the Hall is free from debt. Already some subscriptions have been received towards the sum of £200 required for furnishing the place. The several speakers dwelt upon the special testimony which the Hall is to represent and promote as a centre for the diffusion of Protestant truth. The prevailing indifference as to the blessings of the Reformation was much deplored, and the need for vigilance, lest Romish enroachments should lead to the loss of our civil and religious liberties, was emphasised. Local speakers and visitors—including Mr. T. A. Denny, the Dean of Achonry, and the Hon. P. Carteret Hill—alike delivered stirring addresses.

Obituary.

PROFESSOR J. H. KURTZ.

THE death is announced of Dr. J. H. Kurtz. Born in 1809, he filled the professional chair of Theology in Dorpat University from 1850 to 1870. He gave special attention to Old Testament studies and Church history, and in both these spheres he wrote works which have attained a high place in the esteem of Christian scholars.

MR. JOSEPH WATSON, OF PETERSHAM, N.S.W.

By the death of Mr. Joseph Watson, at Petersham, New South Wales, in February last, the Congregational Church of the colony loses one of its oldest and most respected members. Though living quietly and unostentatiously, he managed to do a vast amount of good. He was born in England in 1814, and received into the Christian church at Camberwell when a young man.

PASTEUR MOUCHON.

The Reformed Church of Lyons has recently lost its most distinguished pastor, M. Hippolyte Mouchon. As a young man he studied theology at Geneva, and for some time held a ministerial charge at St. Hippolyte-du-Fort, in the Cevennes. Called to Lyons, his native city, he developed great powers as a preacher. His ministry there extended over a period of twenty-three years; he was much beloved for his warm-hearted generosity and frankness of manner. M. Mouchon was the author of several works, expository and educational. Broken down in health, he sought rest at Geneva, and there expired, aged fifty-six. His death leaves another serious vacancy in the ranks of French Protestantism.

Personalia.

Rev. Vine Hall, whose life was despaired of last December, resumed his work at the South Congregational Church, Scarborough, on Sunday last, preaching to large congregations.

Mr. Herbert R. Francis, who was recently severely injured through a gas explosion in his house, writes: "I desire to record with thankfulness and praise to the Lord my speedy restoration to health." Mr. Francis is to preach each Sunday this month at Eccleston Hall, near Victoria Station, S.W.

Mr. W. J. Lewis, we are glad to learn, has partially recovered from his long and severe illness. He writes from his residence at Ryde to thank our readers for the prayers offered on his behalf. First laid prostrate with the influenza, then with nephritis, congestion of his only lung following, and this succeeded by pleurisy, he regards his recovery as nothing less than marvellous. He is still very weak in body.

Father Chiniquy.—A report having been circulated, in Roman Catholic circles, to the effect that Father Chiniquy had become an Atheist and then died, a London lady wrote for a contradiction of the falsehood. Father Chiniquy, writing from Ste. Anne, Kankakee co., Illinois, said: "Though eighty years and ten months old, I travel in the United States and Canada, and lecture almost every day, with as much ease as when thirty years old. By the good mercy of God my eyes are still good, my hands do not shake, my steps are firm, and my lungs excellent. Far from being dead in a state of Atheism, I am at work to build a church for one of the many congregations of converts who have lately broken the heavy and ignominious yoke of the Church of Rome. This year my work has been more prosperous than ever, upwards of 500 converts being the blessed fruits which the good Master has granted me to reap in his vineyard during the last twelve months."

KILBURN HALL was the scene of pleasant and profitable gatherings on Bank Holiday. At the afternoon meeting, which was well attended, Mr. John Connor gave a stimulating address from John iv. 13, 14. He was followed by Pastor W. H. J. Page, of Chelsea, who paid a graceful tribute to the Wilton House of Rest, in connection with this Mission. He had gone there completely broken down in health, and had derived physical restoration, social enjoyment, and spiritual profit from his sojourn there. After tea, the large hall was well filled for the evening meeting. Mr. Russell Hurditch presided, and Rev. Walter J. Mayers, Mr. Crawley (Carshalton), Mr. W. R. Lane, and Mr. Charles Inglis took part.

For the Young.

THE STORY OF PHILIP.

By T. J. Barnardo, F.R.C.S.E.

In its effect upon my young protégés the life of the Homes performs wonderful transformations. It changes even the very expression of their faces. Many a time have I observed lads and girls, the lines of whose physiognomy have undergone a complete metamorphosis in the course of six or eight or twelve months' training. Exempli gratiâ, Philip, whose portrait I here present. When I first met Philip in Shoreditch he was positively an ill-looking boy. That ferocious expression which marks so many street lads was creeping over his face, and degrading its expression. He looked a "rough," and indeed he was a "rough," nor was I surprised in conversation with him to learn that he had already had two terms of imprisonment of three weeks each for assault. How would he end? He was then nearly sixteen years old; the law could only imprison him as a vagrant or as a criminal. It provided no preventive or reformative agencies to keep a lad of his age from the black incline of crime. Respectability was beginning to look askance at Philip.

The roguish leer upon the fellow's face was even more repugnant to me than the slouching gait, and the appearance of "shirk" and laziness which spoke unmistakably from every rent in this "larrikin's" ragged clothes. His shoeblack box slung on his shoulders was too obviously a mere pretext for idleness, begging, or worse. I was half ashamed to be seen with my boot on his box while, after a scamping fashion, he slowly shined it. A few loafers gathered round us. They talked to Phil in a jocular style, and of me, his customer, patronisingly. I began to think it would be better to make myself scarce, and was glad to know I had nothing in my pockets which these light-fingered gentry, who were pressing closer and closer round me, could abstract. Now and then Phil squirted some tobacco-juice from the corner of his mouth upon the street, with the offensively rakish air of a man who "could an' if he would," and who knew what he was about. At last one boot got cleaned, and the other was half done, when a young fellow thrust his way into the little circle that had gathered round. Immediately recognising me, he called out in a respectful tone, "Glad to see you, Doctor; I'll give you a better shine than him." Some muttered words ensued between the boys, by way of question and answer, doubtless as to my own personality. When once the discovery was made, however, the change that took place in Phil's air and expression could hardly be credited. His offensive jocularity was gone in a moment, his mouth was emptied with a mighty squirt of the unclean mass which he had been chewing, and standing up he gave me a military salute in his best style. I marvelled inwardly; but the explanation was not long in forthcoming.

It seems that Philip had a step-brother, four years older than himself, and that some years ago I had taken this step-brother into my Home, where, after a period of training in decent and industrious ways, he had been placed out in life. Phil's ambition was to get a similar chance for himself. He had never had the opportunity of gratifying it; when, lo and behold! here was I before him, no longer an abstract idea, but a concrete fact, whose very boots he had cleaned! "Jack Spratt was my brother; you remember him, sir?" paved the way for a conversation that followed, in which I heard the few particulars just narrated. "He's doin' well, he is. I'd like to get in myself, but I suppose I'm too big." "It is not your size, my lad, that would hinder your admission, but your habits and your character. What should I do with a lad in my Home chewing filthy tobacco, who could not leave off the habit, and who was spitting all about the place? Impossible! I could not allow such a thing." "But, sir," pleaded one of the lads in the crowd, "Phil would give it up, I know." To which Phil added, sheepishly, "I ain't been doin' it long, and its nothin' to me to chuck it up." Thereupon I enlarged on the discipline of the Home, the daily drill, the early hours, how you had to keep clean, to do as you were told, to be civil, and not to use bad words; to all of which Phil listened with a humble air, which I could not think was altogether assumed.

But to make a long story into a very short one, our conversation ended in a new threepenny passing from my possession into that of Phil, who gave it three twists in the air, each time mentally calling out heads or tails, as if to determine his chance of admission, while his face beamed with satisfaction afterwards, as if the omens had been favourable. An appointment was arranged for the same evening, which Master Philip duly kept. Then followed two days' detention in our Refuge, while inquiries were set on foot, and Phil was thereafter duly admitted to the privileges and responsibilities of Home life. Although he was a big fellow, he had to spend a whole month in school to make up his educational leeway, during which his impatience hardly knew any bounds. The lad was boiling over with new energy in his way, and anxious to get to work. He set his heart on becoming a carpenter; bootmaking, which was proposed as an alternative, he dismissed as "too slow for him." Transferred as a half-timer to the Carpenters' Shop (one half the day having still to be spent in school), he turned his faculties with surprising diligence into the new channels thus provided, and six or seven months found no abatement of his desire "to get on." At length one day, inspecting that busy hive of noisy workers, I had my attention again drawn to Phil, who had somewhat fallen into the background of memory owing to the pressure of many duties. I absolutely could hardly recognise, in the quiet, eager, but self-restrained young workman, the quondam roving, leering vagabond or ragamuffin, who had cleaned my boots in a questionable fashion under the railway-arch at Shoreditch not quite twelve months before.

Philip is a type, not indeed in the somewhat late stage of a downward career at which I caught him, but in the transformation which the discipline of our Homes effects. I will ask any of my readers to come down when they will to Stepney, and look along the rows of young faces to be seen in the workshops. Although the previous histories of the boys may vary as widely as the poles, no observer can fail to be struck with the peculiarly beneficial result, in a high degree refining, restraining, and reforming, which active industry in mechanical methods has brought about in these young and plastic lives.—Night and Day.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sun., June 8, Gen. xi. 1—9; Mon., June 9, Gen. xii. 1—10; Tues., June 10, Gen. xiii. 1—18; Wed., June 11, Gen. xiv. 8—24; Thurs., June 12, Gen. xv. 1—18; Fri., June 13, Gen. xviii. 1—15; Sat., June 14, Gen. xviii. 16—33.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

Mr. H. Hutchinson, Tent, Vale-grove, Chelsea, to June 14; Emmanuel Church, West Brixton, June 15—22. Mr. J. S. Tyler, Holmwood, to June 6; West Hartlepool, June 8—13; Morecambe, June 15—20. Mr. T. L. Sayer, Presbyterian Church, Marlborough-place, St. John's Wood, to June 11. Mr. H. W. Pewtress, Enfield Congregational Mission Hall, to June 6. Mr. W. R. Moore, B.A., Ramsgate, June 7—9. Rev. W. S. Standen, Bird's Nest, Dublin, June 17—25. Mr. H. L. Corry de Candole and Mr. R. Callender, St. Barnabas' Church-room, Holloway, June 21—27. Special public meeting at Kilburn Town Hall, June 10, at 7.30; Mr. Joseph Peters will preside.

BIBLE AND COLPORTAGE SOCIETY OF IRELAND.—The Dublin branch of this Society directs the work in the province of Leinster. There are only three colporteurs at present for the twelve counties; but, finding ready access to the people, they are able to render cheering reports. During last year they paid 8200 visits, sold 309 Bibles and portions, and 12,958 religious books and periodicals. Many of these visits were paid to Protestant families, but a very large number also were to Roman Catholics, by whom the colporteurs are as a general rule favourably received. The colporteur has daily opportunity of reading the Word and prayer, and of conversing in the homes of the people on spiritual and religious subjects, for it is never lost sight of that the great aim of the Society is evangelism. Until a year ago the branch was simply an auxiliary of the parent Society. It is hoped that under the present more responsible constitution the work will go forward rapidly. The secretary is Mr. Robert Cotter, Christian Union-buildings, Dublin.

SCANDINAVIAN SAILORS' TEMPERANCE HOME.—During last year 2469 seafaring men and 465 emigrants and others passed through this institution. The Gospel and temperance meetings have been carried on as usual, and many have come out on the Lord's side, about 400 taking the blue ribbon. Although the Home is mainly Scandinavian, other nationalities have occasionally been represented within its walls, and £9505 of sailors' money has been sent to their wives and families. This is a very important phase of the work, for, were it not for the financial facilities afforded by the Home, the great bulk of this money would, in all probability, have been squandered in dissipation. Copies of the report for 1889, as well as "A Few Words about our Destitute Seamen," may be had from Mr. and Mrs. Hedenström Welin, at the Home, West-India Docks, London, E.

Evangelistic Notes.

Mr. Herbert Veasey has recently conducted an eight days' special mission in the Gospel Hall, Tavistock. There were several interesting cases of professed conversion.

Ireland.—Misses Bax and Smith have been holding for the past ten days a series of most successful evangelistic meetings in the Assembly Hall, Warrenpoint; much blessing appears to have attended their labours.

Mr. Joseph Clarke has completed a five months' successful mission at the Edinburgh Castle, Limehouse, with much blessing on his labours. He will conduct the services for this present month in the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road, where he is a special favourite.

Mr. Henry Thorne.—At the invitation of the Young Men's Christian Association, Mr. Henry Thorne recently conducted a series of Gospel services in Hertford. The Bible-readings were greatly appreciated. Mr. Thorne has a peculiarly happy and profitable manner of comparing Scripture with Scripture, and of bringing out the truths intended to be taught. At the evening meetings several made open confession of their need of salvation, and of their resolution to give their hearts to Christ.

Mr. J. Crofton Rainey is beginning work for the summer at Paignton, South Devon. Open-air services are held on the Green after church hours in the evening. The Gospel tent is to be pitched at Denbury, eight miles off, for a month's mission, commencing next Sunday. Mr. Rainey writes: "The Y.M.C.A. Mission Band goes out into adjacent villages each Wednesday evening. In the holidays we look forward, God willing, to some joyous meetings on the sands with the Children's Special Service Mission. Christian workers and all other visitors will be heartily welcomed."

Mr. H. Maxwell Wright writes from Lisbon, on May 26:—I am just starting for a six months' evangelistic tour in Brazil. As many of your readers are, I am sure, interested in that country, I would ask their prayers. My headquarters will be 104, Rua de St. Pedro, Rio Janeiro.

REV. W. CROSBIE, of Brighton, has accepted a call from the Congregational Church, Park-hill, Nottingham, and is expected to leave Brighton in about a month's time. His departure will be a source of much regret to the whole Christian community in that place.

HOMES OF HOPE (Nos. 4, 5, and 6, Regent-square, Gray's Inn-road, London, W.C.).—Every day very painful applications for admission to these Homes are made, and the thought of refusing a helping hand to any young woman struggling to get out of her miserable life is very distressing, especially in the case of those who have made a first false step. Sad tales of suffering and wrong are told by these young women, many of them orphan daughters who moved in a good position, but were left friendless and wholly unprovided for. If your readers could witness the distress and anguish in many cases of those who apply, we are sure it would give them pleasure to aid us in restoring such young women to positions of usefulness. It has scarcely ever happened in the experience of the Committee that the mothers rescued have fallen a second time. We are in urgent need of funds, and any help will be most opportune.

HOME TEACHING SOCIETY FOR THE BLIND.—Books in Moon's embossed type are a great blessing to the blind people who are able to read them. A Society which teaches to read those who are sightless assuredly performs an important ministry. The thirty-fourth annual report of the Home Teaching Society for the Blind, makes it clear that unceasing endeavours are made to find out and instruct those who are thus afflicted. Eighteen teachers, all of them blind, are employed in the various Metropolitan districts, and regular visitation is carried on. The work is not confined to London, however, for the Society has started several country branches. Every year many persons of mature age lose their sight through accidents and various other causes; and as Moon's type resembles the Roman in many particulars, it is easily and very eagerly learnt by all, even by extremely old people. The secretary of the Society is Mr. Ralph Tait, 31, New Bridge-street, Blackfriars, E.C.

The Temperance Cause.

Temperance teaching has been introduced into the State schools of Queensland.

Mr. James Guthrie, of Brechin, a son of Dr. Thomas Guthrie, holds that every Christian church ought to be a temperance society.

Seeing no prospect of carrying it this session Mr. Stevenson has withdrawn the Sunday Closing Bill (England) for the present session.

Messrs. Bertram & Company, the refreshment caterers, state that two-thirds of the money received by them at the Crystal Palace is for temperance refreshments.

Puck, a comic paper, had a suggestive cartoon last week, in which "the drink fiend" and some of his ghastly doings are represented, with the pertinent question, "Don't you think you ought to take a day off on Bank Holiday?" We are glad at the same time to observe that the police-court charges for drunkenness following the recent Bank Holiday were fewer than usual.

Professor Long, Roberts College, Constantinople, says intemperance prevails there, not only among native Christian, Jewish, and foreign sections of the people, but also among the Moslems. He thinks Mohammedanism gets undue credit for its restraint in this direction.

At the recent Friends' Yearly Meeting it was stated that in Iowa and Kansas, the prohibition of the liquor traffic is a magnificent success. Out of ninety-nine counties ninety-six have it complete, but the other three suffer from importations from an adjoining State. Freedom from the drink curse promotes a vigorous Christianity.

Despatches from Iowa declare that the "original package" decision is already bearing fruit in that State. At Des Moines two "package houses" are already in operation, while Sioux City has eight or ten just opened. Beer is kept on tap and whisky sold over the bar precisely the same as in licensed saloons. Liquor dealers everywhere, given an inch, are taking an ell.

At the annual meeting of the United Kingdom Temperance and General Provident Institution, a strong point was made of the superior insurance value of temperance lives. During the year the expected claims in the temperance section were 307, for £75,916, whereas the actual claims had been 184, for £43,874. This afforded a remarkable contrast with the state of things in the general department, where the anticipated claims were 378 for, £89,448, whereas the actual had been 326, for £70,050.

The King of the Belgians, in an audience at the Burlington Hotel with Dr. Hannay, Secretary of the Congregational Union, and Mr. John Mackenzie, late Assistant Commissioner in Bechuanaland, hoped that the deliberations of the Conference would result in the restriction of the liquor traffic in Africa, which proved so harmful to the native races there. He gave an assurance of his sympathy with those who were labouring so earnestly for the material, moral, and spiritual progress of the native races of Africa.

"The Native Races and the Liquor Traffic United Committee" have passed a resolution expressing thankfulness that the representations made by them to the Anti-Slavery Conference at Brussels, with reference to the prohibition of the introduction of spirits into those parts of Africa which at present are free from them, have received such ample recognition at the hands of the Conference. They desire to tender their hearty thanks to Lord Salisbury, Lord Vivian, the British Ambassador at Brussels, and to Sir John Kirk, for the efforts made by them in support of their action.

ROYAL AGRICULTURAL SHOW.—During the present month this show will be held at Plymouth. One accompaniment will be the flocking of thousands of visitors into the town, affording a good opportunity for tract distributors to work for Christ. Mr. H. Oxby, evangelist, writes from 59, Mainstone-avenue, Plymouth: "If friends would supply us with tracts, work would be provided for many willing hearts and hands, who would help to sow the good seed of the Kingdom."

The Book World.

Sermon Literature.

VOL. ii. of THE BRITISH WEEKLY PULPIT (6s. Hodder & Stoughton) forms a very admirable and well-selected collection of sermons from eminent preachers of the day, without reference to denomination. The occasional pulpit prayers will prove helpful to the devotional reader, while a further variety is found in the sermonettes for children, and the complete reports of church services. The possessor of this volume may find some things in it that he thinks defective, but it will also help him to spend many a delightful and profitable hour.

VOL. v. of THE SERMON BIBLE (7s. 6. Hodder & Stoughton) begins the New Testament series, dealing with the first twenty-one chapters of Matthew's Gospel. The sermon outlines are drawn from very varied schools of theological thought. While the orthodox evangelical pulpit is fairly well represented by such men as Maclaren, Saphir, Arnot, Guthrie, W. M. Taylor, Champness, and others, the Broad Church School appears to predominate; the names of Maurice, Kingsley, Stopford Brooke, Farrar, Momerie, Tipple, Beecher, and others of the same type frequently occur, though the extracts, we are bound to say, show them in their sounder moods. Strange to say, while Mr. Spurgeon's sermons are often noted in the list of references, not a single outline discourse by him is given; to many this will indicate bias on the part of the compiler. To those who come for helpful suggestion rather than dogmatic comment, the book will furnish a mine of spiritual wealth.

The issue of vol. I. of Rev. John McNeill's REGENT-SQUARE PULPIT (3s. 6d. Nisbet & Co.) enables us pretty fairly to gauge the quality of his discourse and the bent of his pulpit mind. He cannot be classified; he is sui generis. Those who have heard him, if but once, will understand that the reader will be in no danger of going to sleep. We think, indeed, on the whole that we prefer reading to hearing Mr. McNeill. The unconventional colloquialism, and the somewhat forced humour, seem less pronounced in the printed page, and we are free to feel the force of the preacher's directness of utterance and intense practicality. Here there is no finely polished essay; no didactic argument; no profound disquisition on abstract doctrine; no airy speculation. The old-time stories of the Scripture are recast in a very modern verbal mould, and their outstanding lessons are driven home in a rough and ready, but a very real and earnest fashion. In McNeill's hands the Bible becomes a living book for the living men and women of to-day. Let nobody read these discourses who is unwilling to give heed and obey the message. If they do, they will be made eminently uncomfortable; but, probably, that is the very best thing after all that could happen to them.

MISCELLANEOUS.

BIBLE PICTURES. G. W. J. Morgan and W. S. Stacey. 3s. Religious Tract Society. Twelve attractively coloured Bible Pictures, mounted on rollers, representing Bible scenes, with explanations in the words of Scripture. It will be warmly welcomed by many little ones.

THE WORD IN THE SCHOOL. By A. S. Lamb. 1s. Nisbet & Co. Another concise, pointed appeal to Christian teachers and parents. Though Governments may think religious teaching of small importance, Christians do not, and if any desire to train their young for God, Mr. Lamb's hints will greatly assist them.

THE SUCCESS OF CHRISTIAN MISSIONS. Testimonies to their Beneficent Results. By Robert Young. 5s. Hodder & Stoughton. A well-known writer on Mission work has here collected important expressions of opinion by statesmen, lawyers, educationists, travellers, and others, in praise of Christian effort in heathen lands. He gives at the outset some unfavourable views and criticisms; these set off to better effect than otherwise would have been possible the eulogistic though discriminating extracts from Government Blue Books, works of travel, reviews, reports, &c. The pages are stimulating and cheering, and since it may be thought that clergymen, and especially missionaries, are, to some extent, disqualified by their calling from pronouncing an impartial judgment, the "Testimonies" have been confined to laymen. They cover a wide field of survey, including the great empires of Asia, Greenland, the South Seas, Africa, South America, and Turkey.

NOTHING LEFT FOR YOU TO DO, and other Gospel Stories. 1s. Holness. A volume of true tales, reproduced from out-of-print numbers of "Faithful Words for Old and Young." The pages bear testimony to the goodness and mercy of God to men, and make very plain the way of salvation. It is a beautiful little book, embellished with many illustrations.

A WOMAN'S WORK: MEMORIALS OF ELIZA FLETCHER. By Rev. C. A. Salmond, M.A. 2s. 6d. Hamilton, Adams & Co. A new and illustrated edition of a delightful piece of biography, which has already had large circulation both here and in America. For Christian workers it is a most helpful volume, including in its contents admirable specimens of addresses and letters written to old and young.

FROM PRISON TO PARADISE. A story of English peasant life in 1557. By Alice Long. 3s. 6d. Religious Tract Society. The last year of Queen Mary's life was a reign of terror unequalled in English history, and the writer gives but one page of its ghastly annals. Several characters, the eccentric basket-maker, the talkative wife, the high-minded priest, the mischievous spy, and the stout-hearted Protestants of Newhaven, are skilfully described. The illustrations are few but good. An excellent prize-book, and a worthy addition to home and parish libraries.

FROM HEART TO HEART. Sermons by Rev. A. G. Sowter, M.A., Chaplain of Missions to Seamen, Bristol. Nisbet & Co. A title well chosen and well merited. A sheaf of arrows, well pointed, gracefully feathered, and skilfully aimed at the heart and conscience. Many a captain will, we trust, read these earnest, searching discourses to his crew on Sundays, calm or stormy. Many a sailor will, we believe, be led past shoal and rock by these "lighthouse rays." Whenever, as here, Christ is fully preached, heaven and hell Scripturally described, the way of salvation and holiness clearly stated, and the Holy Spirit invoked, lasting good is sure to result.

"UNTIL THE DAY BREAK." By Horatius Bonar, D.D. 5s. Hodder & Stoughton. The last instalment of sacred song from the pen of the sweet singer whose exquisite lays have so long profited and gladdened the Church of God. Dr. Bonar's son has here gathered together a selection of the hymns and poems left behind by his revered father, and has given us a volume which will be highly prized, both as a memorial of one widely known and loved, and as containing pieces of special tenderness and worth. They comprise "General Hymns," "Christmas and New Year's," "Hymns of Israel," and "Fragments," all redolent of the Saviour's love, and calculated to inspire the heart with faith and hope.

MISTAKEN SIGNS, and other papers on Christian life and experience. By Rev. W. L. Watkinson. 3s. 6d. Charles H. Kelly. Twelve discourses, full of instruction conveyed in vigorous language. The style is uniformly frank, and the tone spiritual. "The Possibilities of Life," "Unaccomplished Aims," and "The Wealth of Life" are among the most inviting topics, each of which is elaborated in a very helpful manner. The book has messages of comfort for many who are exercised by the contradictions and disappointments of life. The address which furnishes the title is based upon Eccles. vii. 10 ("Say not thou, what is the cause that the former days were better than these?" &c.), in the course of which Mr. Watkinson points many valuable lessons from the confessions and regrets of those who realise that they have not as yet apprehended that for which they have been apprehended of Christ.

THE PHILANTHROPY OF GOD. By Rev. Hugh Price Hughes. 3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. In the preface the author says, "This volume is an attempt to define, and partially to illustrate and enforce, what St. John and St. Paul mean by love," and so in a series of twenty sermons "the distinctive and unique significance" of this grand word of Christian coinage is eloquently and ably set forth. The subjects of these discourses embrace a wide range, and deal largely with leading social and political questions, such as "The Military Profession," "International Arbitration," "Woman's Wrongs," "London Pauperism," &c. Marked by abundant evidences of the author's well-known individuality and independence of thought, and furnishing room for difference of opinion on some points involved, the volume is well worthy of careful reading, and throws no little light on themes calling for Christian inquiry and concern. It is par excellence a book for the times.

THE CREDIBILITY OF THE CHRISTIAN RELIGION. By Samuel Smith, M.P. 6d. Marshall Brothers. The substance of a larger book, giving "Thoughts on Modern Rationalism," is here presented in a compact form. By reasoning of convincing force, Mr. Smith shows revelation to be a necessity and miracle an inseparable element in Christianity. Intensely practical in character, his arguments cannot but commend themselves to thoughful readers. The pages bear evidence of their author's experimental knowledge of Christ, as well as his intellectual grasp of relevant facts. Therefore it is to be hoped that they will be perused by many inquirers, who may thereby be influenced in heart and mind, by the enlightening operation of the Holy Spirit.

A FRIEND OF MISSIONS IN INDIA. By Rev. H. S. Lunn, M.D. 1s. James Clarke & Co. This volume contains the twelve letters of a journal which its author wrote during his residence in India as a medical missionary. The substance of them was embodied in letters to The Methodist Times last year; those letters occasioned considerable comment (not yet at an end) mainly because of the freedom with which the methods of some Christian workers in the East were criticised. Having been requested to publish his journal, originally written with a cyclostyle and circulated among a number of English friends, Dr. Lunn has done so. He maintains that his criticisms have in some cases been misconstrued, and claims that he is a friend of missionaries as well as missions.

LONDON PICTURES, drawn with Pen and Pencil. By Rev. Richard Lovett, M.A. 8s. Religious Tract Society. Another volume of a very attractive series. The author's aim has been to give a satisfactory and accurate sketch of the present condition and past history of the great City, in relation to such subjects as the civic and commercial life, the Tower, the great ecclesiastical and governmental buildings, and the legal and literary life. Each separate item in this list has gathered quite a library around it, so that Mr. Lovett found it no easy task to compile this very readable account of them all. The illustrations, 130 in number, many of them the full size of the beautiful imperial octavo pages, well fit in with the letterpress. Alternately historical and descriptive, the pages are quite charming. The volume will assuredly recall many well-known haunts and pleasant experiences to those acquainted with London, while they will doubtless stimulate such as live within reach of its stores of interest and information more freely to avail themselves of those treasures.

THE SABBATH FOR MAN. By Rev. William Spiers, M.A. 2s. 6d. Charles H. Kelly. This is an inquiry into the origin and history of the Sabbath institution, with a consideration of its claims upon the Christian, the church, and the nation. It was awarded the first prize (£50) in a competition promoted by the Lord's Day Observance Committee of the Wesleyan Methodist Conference, through the generosity of Mr. J. T. Morton, of London. We know no treatment so satisfactory in every way. The pages bear witness to much reading and research; the style is flowing and clear; and the argument is cogent and convincing. The Sabbath is shown to have been a Divine institution, and, therefore, it is no mere holiday or ecclesiastical fixture. No point of importance seems to have been overlooked by the author. A remarkable interest attaches to the chapter entitled "Traces of the Sabbath amongst Primitive Nations." The book is likely to prove of great service in fortifying the convictions of Christian readers, and in encouraging them to increased efforts for the preservation of one of the most beneficent institutions of society from the disastrous influences of present day neglect and abuse.

PADDINGTON HALL AND HYDE PARK MISSION.—The report of last year's work is encouraging. Poverty and ignorance abound in the Mission district, and everything possible is done to assist the honest poor, as well as to direct wandering feet into paths of peace. The superintendent, Mr. John Davidge, is assisted by earnest fellow-workers in preaching the Gospel in the Park during the summer months. Unhappy men and fallen women thus hear words of hope and comfort, and it is gratifying to know that the labourers have evidence that in this they do not "spend their strength for nought." The Dorcas meeting and sewing class, conducted by Miss Jones, is a praiseworthy and useful work by lady friends and the senior girls of the Sunday-school. Mr. Davidge's address is: 90, Church-street, Paddington-green, W.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Dr. Vaughan has returned to the Temple, but he is still far from strong.

The annual demonstration of the children attending the Sunday-schools of the Church of England in Manchester took place last week. About 20,000 children walked in procession through the principal thoroughfares of the city, and afterwards attended a special service in the Cathedral.

The Bishop of Derry has been preaching a course of daily sermons in St. Asaph Cathedral to the candidates for holy orders and the clergy of the diocese. This "new departure" has proved so successful that it is intended to make the scheme an annual institution. The Bishop, in his sermons, dwelt with great vigour and eloquence on the question of inspiration.

The annual flower service was held on Tuesday week, at St. Katherine Cree Church, Leadenhall-street, by Rev. Dr. W. M. Whittemore, rector. This was the thirty-eighth anniversary, the festival having been originated by Dr. Whittemore in 1853. The church was crowded, and the majority of those present carried bunches of flowers, which were afterwards collected and distributed to poor people in the parish of St. Paul, Dock-street.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. John Forgan has returned to his pastoral care of Union Church, Simla, after a successful evangelistic tour of two months.

The Presbyterians in the north-western district of London have arranged for a united open-air service, to be held in Regent's Park, at the band stand, on the afternoon of Sunday, June 22. The ministers and choirs of St. John's Wood, Regent-square, Kentish Town, Haverstock-hill, Camden-road, and Somers Town congregations will take part in the service.

METHODIST.

Rev. E. Davidson, one of the Wesleyan connexional evangelists, has returned from his tour in the West Indies. Mr. Davidson has held a number of evangelistic missions, and his labours have been fruitful in good results.

The Lady-lane, Leeds, Mission of the Methodist Free Church is in danger of collapsing for want of funds. This Mission was begun as an experiment, and as the first "forward movement" of the Connexion. The debt of £1000 is strangling the new venture.

SALVATION ARMY.

The conviction against two officers for holding open-air meetings in Malines, Belgium, has been successfully appealed against.

Major Wilson, of Denmark, has four new openings in hand, as well as an important extension of the Copenhagen headquarters.

An appeal is made for £500 for the Whitchurch Defence Fund, but up to the present only £120 has been received or promised. The case is expected to come on shortly.

A new departure has been made in the Bombay Prison Gate Brigade. The natives go daily to the prison gate to lead any of their old mates, who may be discharged, to the Home.

A recent report from India tells of a native schoolmaster going to the Army meeting, getting saved, and filled with love for souls. Twelve of his Hindoo student-lads noted the change, and have also come out as converts.

The stone-laying of a new barracks at Wood Green recently took place. One of those taking part in the ceremony was Rev. W. D. Hathaway, a Church of England clergyman, on whose stone was the motto—"Let brotherly love continue."

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. W. Crosbie, of Clifton-road Church, Brighton, has been invited to Park-hill Church, Nottingham, in succession to Rev. J. Hirst Hollowell, now of Milton Church, Rochdale.

Rev. Joseph King, on his return from Europe, has entered upon his duties as agent for the London Missionary Society in Australia and New Zealand, in succession to the late Rev. J. P. Sunderland.

Rev. Thomas Hooper, late of Kingsland, has been recognised as pastor of Camberwell-green Church. The former pastor (Dr. Clement Clemance) presided at the meeting, and cordially welcomed Mr. Hooper.

At Albany Chapel, Camberwell, a few days ago, Rev. J. C. Postans delivered an address "A Trumpet Call to the Churches," the object being to bring about united action in special evangelistic and other work.

A school-chapel, erected at Barry last week, to accommodate 400 worshippers, was opened with a sermon by Rev. C. A. Berry. At the evening meeting Canon Allen delivered an address, in which he urged a better mutual understanding between all Christian bodies on the broad basis of Christian charity.

Rev. G. W. M'Cree, of Borough-road, South London, has expended since January last £116 3s. 4d. in relieving selected cases of sickness, and in sending invalids to the South Coast. This boon is not confined to members of his own church, but is freely extended to others. A part of a house has now been taken at a suitable seaside resort for invalids, and is now in full use.

BAPTIST.

Mr. C. H. Spurgeon and his congregation have applied for admission to the Surrey Baptist Association.

Monday, June 16, is the day set apart for united prayer by the churches connected with the Pastors' College Conference.

Rev. E. G. Gange, pastor of Broadmead Church, Bristol, will at the end of the summer start on a three months' visit to India. He will visit the Baptist mission stations at Calcutta, Agra, Delhi, and Bombay. His daughter is at one of the stations at Delhi.

At the weekly prayer-meeting at the Metropolitan Tabernacle, the other day, Mr. Spurgeon spoke of the many thousands who had been converted in that place. There was not, he said, a single day but he heard of two, three, or four having been converted through hearing the Gospel preached there, and that not for one, two, or three years, but for the last ten years.

A new building is to be erected for Rev. J. W. Boud's congregation at Penge. During Mr. Boud's pastorate, of a little over eight years, nearly 700 persons have been received into church fellowship, and the present tabernacle is far too small for the growing congregation. The school accommodation is also quite inadequate for the 500 scholars, and a staff of over forty teachers and officers. When the new tabernacle is completed, the old building will be devoted to the work of the Sunday-school.

Revs. W. J. Mayers and F. B. Meyer conducted an important series of special services at the Baptist Chapel, Westbourne, Bournemouth, from Tuesday, May 27, to Sunday last. Mr. Meyer was able to be present only on Thursday, when he gave three addresses, of a most helpful character. The Bible-readings by Mr. Mayers were greatly enjoyed, all of them dealing with some aspect of practical Christian living. His sweet and effective singing of the Gospel added interest to the meetings. An address to young people on "Some of God's babies, and how they are nursed," gave an excellent picture of one important branch of Dr. Barnardo's work. The mission has been mainly for the help of Christians, and has been marked throughout by quiet power. In the better life, and more efficient work of Christians, it is hoped that the fruit of the mission will appear.

NOTES FROM SCOTLAND.

Renfield congregation, Glasgow, have unanimously agreed to call Rev. W. M. Macgregor, of Troon, to succeed Dr. Marcus Dods.

Lord Rosebery paid two visits to the Free Church Assembly last week, first during the debate on the Dods case, and next during a discussion on the conversion of the Jews.

Rev. C. G. M'Crie, of Ayr, has been unanimously appointed the next Cunningham lecturer. His subject will be "The Public Worship of Presbyterian Scotland, Historically Considered."

Mr. Arthur Robertson gave an account, before the Established Assembly, of the operations of the Scottish Christian Club in London, by which he said young people going to the City were received on their arrival, and afforded social and religious advantages.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

The Belfast Home Mission to the Blind has 230 blind persons under its care. They are encouraged to help themselves in a great variety of ways.

Major Whittle paid a farewell visit to Belfast on Saturday and Sunday last, when he addressed several crowded evangelistic meetings, under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A.

Rev. Dr. Leon Checkemian, formerly a Roman Catholic priest, is at present holding meetings in the North of Ireland, in the interests of Protestant mission work in Constantinople.

The Belfast Sailors' Home is doing a most useful work, and continues in a very prosperous condition. During the past year 614 sailors availed themselves of its benefits, being an increase of fifty-four on the previous twelve months.

At the recent annual meeting of the Irish Baptist Association, held at Ballymena, under the presidency of Mr. R. S. Glendinning, Pastor H. D. Brown announced that Mr. R. Cory, of Cardiff, had given £2000 of debenture stock for the support of an evangelist in connection with the Evangelistic Society, of Harcourt-street Church, Dublin.

The Methodist Colportage Society for the Cork district has issued its first annual report. During the year a large number of Bibles, Testaments, and other religious publications were sold, many cottage meetings were held in remote districts, and several were spoken to personally about their souls. Altogether the report is very cheering.

A disgraceful instance of religious intolerance and bigotry has occurred at Arklow. On Sunday week, Revs. R. C. Hallowes, rector of Arklow, J. Hoffe, rector of Kilbride, J. W. Harrison, curate, and William Harpur, Methodist, proceeded to hold an open-air service in a part of the town chiefly inhabited by fishermen and their families. A vast crowd assembled, and used the most abusive and blasphemous language, flung filth and stones at the preachers, and broke up the service. The ministers had issued a most moderate appeal to the townspeople, setting forth their object in holding the meeting, but it was treated with contempt.

NOTES FROM WALES.

Wales was en fête Whit Monday; scores of Sunday-schools had chosen that day for their demonstration and outing.

The annual meetings of the Baptist Association were held at Blaina last Tuesday. A new home mission organisation was formed, and ministers were appointed to visit the weaker churches.

At Blaenavon a special mission for the deepening of spiritual life in believers has been conducted by Rev. F. C. Spurr, of Cardiff. Meetings were held in the various chapels, which were largely attended, and the interest sustained throughout.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

While in England on furlough, Rev. Henry Williams, missionary of the C.M.S. to North India.—Rev. J. W. Ellis, late of Walthamstow, who had just entered upon the pastorate of the Congregational Church, at Acton, Middlesex. — At Aberystwith, aged 84, Rev. Tracts for Trinidad.—Rev. J. L. STEELE writes from the Wesleyan Mission House, Prince's Town, Trinidad, that there is a vast uncultivated field around him in which to sow the seed of the kingdom, and appeals for a good supply of tracts for distribution. The island, he says, is so largely Roman Catholic, and bids fair to become so atheistic, that good, pointed messages left in the homes may be a power for good to many.

Buenos Ayres.—The Missionary Bureau appeal for £50 in aid of the evangelistic work being carried on by Mr. Torre at Buenos Ayres in connection with the Y.M.C.A., and amongst the Spanish and Italian Roman Catholics. The Committee need another £50 in aid of the work amongst sailors about to be commenced at that port. Mr. Walker, who has been labouring among seamen for several years at Pernambuco, is now leaving to take up the work at Buenos Ayres.

The Children's Country Holidays Fund. — Last year, by the agency of this Fund, 20,772 little ones from the Metropolis spent a fortnight in cottagers' homes. In all cases parents contributed something towards the cost. The advantages of this boon are manifold. There are still, says a recent circular, many thousands of children who depend upon our visitors for their holiday, but many a hope will be broken if the public do not provide us with the money. For the sum of 10s. a fortnight's holiday is secured for a city child. The treasurer is the Hon. ALFRED LYTTELTON, 10, Buckingham-street, Strand, W.C.

Evangelistic Mission.—Christian friends are earnestly invited to assist in evangelising the unreached masses in London and the provinces by means of tent services, open-air and indoor preaching, Bible carriage, colportage work, &c. Several marquees are ready for use during the present summer, and will be sent out as soon as funds are forthcoming for the necessary working expenses. In the several halls of the Mission funds are also much needed to cover the current expenses. Contributions will be gratefully received by Mr. C. RUSSELL HURDITCH, 164, Alexandra-road, St. John's Wood, London, N.W.

The Doorstep Girls' Mission.—Mrs. BROWN, 123, Wilberforce-road, Finsbury Park, N., seeks help in carrying on work among the little doorstep cleaners. Some time ago she opened a mission for them, and eighty girls attended one evening each week to be instructed in making their own clothes and reading. The work had to be discontinued, but Mrs. Brown hopes soon to accede to the desire of the girls and resume the work. She can hire a room, but requires some furniture, also flannel, unbleached calico, holland, print, and other materials to be made up. Persons willing (in any way) to help in the Mission may have further particulars by communicating with Mrs. Brown.

ROMISH INTOLERANCE.—The occasional attendance of Romanists at Protestant marriages and interments, has afforded many of them opportunities of learning something of evangelical teaching. As a consequence it has become customary on the Continent for these occasions to be improved by the pastors of the Reformed churches. The Holy Office at Rome (Congregation of the Inquisition) has recently adopted measures whereby the consciences of "the faithful" will be effectually relieved from disturbance. This has been done by the promulgation of an order to the fact that Papists are not allowed to attend the "religious ceremonies of other forms of worship."

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

These Notes run concurrently with the Readings of the "Bible and Prayer Union," founded and conducted by Rev. Thomas Richardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Mile End-road, London, E., of whom card of membership may be had for 1d., and Monthly Notes, prepared by himself, for 1s. per annum, post free. We hope many of our readers will become members of the "Bible and Prayer Union," and take its Monthly Notes, which of course are entirely different from these.

SUNDAY, JUNE 8.—Psalm XXX.

IT becomes the child of God to dedicate to Him the house in which he lives, so that each room of it should be part of his temple, dedicated to his service and used for his glory. David wrote this psalm and song on the occasion referred to in 2 Sam. v. 11. It records the emotions which befitted the transition from the cave of Adullam to the splendour and comfort of a house of cedar.

1. Lift Him up in song, who has lifted thee up in mercy. Exalt Him, from each eminence to which He has exalted thee.

2, 3. It may be that David celebrates here his recovery from some deadly sickness. At such times we must not put the physician or remedy in the place of God (2 Chron. xvi. 12).

4, 5. No one saint, though he were a sweet singer like David, always engaged in it, could tell forth all God's praise. In what arrears then must most of us be! Weeping is here personified; she is a lodger, who tarries for the brief Eastern night, and then, veiled, glides out of the house before daybreak. And with the first ray of light joy comes to stay, and there is a shout in the vestibule.

6-9. When our circumstances are prosperous, we begin to rest in them rather than in God; and we forget Him, by whom alone our mountain is made to stand strong. Then He hides his face. The Chaldee says, "His shechinah." And the soul, panic-stricken, turns from the creature to the Creator.

10-12. "Lord, be Thou my helper," is a prayer which will well befit our life this day. How swiftly the prayer was heard; in these words the past tense is used of Him who turneth the shadow of death into the morning. Christ might have used their rapture on the Resurrection morning. Each penitent may use them. And we shall use them when we have put off the body of our humiliation, and stand before God in his sanctuary (1 Cor. xv. 54).

MONDAY, JUNE 9.—Psalm XXXI.

In vv. 9-18 we have a picture of unusual grief. Some have thought the Psalm was written during the Sauline persecutions; but it is more likely that it dated from the rebellion of Absalom. It alternates from depths of despondency to heights of sublime trust; and well befits the experiences of any who walk in the darkness and have no light (Isa. l. 10).

1. God's answer to his people's trust is guaranteed by his righteousness (Joel ii. 26).

2. Hidden with Christ in God, the believer, apparently defenceless, lives, walks, and has his being, within an impregnable defence. You go into the day, enclosed in God, just as God's life is enclosed in you.

3, 4. When we are wholly given up to God, our cause is his, and the honour of his name is at stake (Josh. vii. 9). God's pulls are sometimes rather sharp.

5. The last words of Stephen, Polycarp, Bernard, Huss, Luther, Melancthon, and of many more, and, above all, of our Lord (Luke xxiii. 46; Acts vii. 59). The Psalter was our Saviour's prayer-book. This is a suitable petition for every morning, ere we go forth to the day's war and work. What a claim we have on God. He must keep what we commit, because we are his by redemption, and because his truth cannot fail (2 Tim. i. 12).

7. Faith will find material for her songs in the darkest days. God can recognise us though our beauty have vanished and our friends hardly know us (Job ii. 12).

9. This and the following verses tell a sad tale. There is a special disease of the eyes brought on by excessive weeping; and we all know how the digestion, &c., is affected by mental emotion. Yet, amid all, the believer realises that each moment of suffering is allotted by the dear hand of God. Not one unkind thing can be said or done, unless by his permission. The refiner sits beside the crucible, his watch in hand, his other hand on the patient's pulse. "My times are in thy hand."

19. As God hath laid up ore in the earth, but man must dig for it; so hath God laid up unsearchable riches of goodness in Christ, and all spiritual blessings, but we must first know what they are, and then take them (Prov. ii. 1-5).

20. What a compensation for slandered saints. Perhaps we never know that hiding until we have tasted the proud hatred and contempt of man. Do you know the royal withdrawing room? God's pavilion is sound-tight; the strife of tongues cannot invade.

21. Was this Mahanaim? (2 Sam. xvii. 27). It is a mistake to speak in haste. Oh for love that we may cast it at his feet, who is so infinitely lovable! And out of love shall spring hope, strength, and courage.

TUESDAY, JUNE 10.—Psalm XXXII.

David evidently wrote this Psalm (Rom. iv. 6, 7, 8). It gives more minutely the story of his experience after his great sin. Maschil means to give instruction. So our sins may be the eater out of which meat comes for others (Luke xxii. 32). This was one of Luther's favourites.

1, 2. We never know the blessedness of forgiveness so sweetly as when we have known the burden of unforgiven sin. The word is plural, "Oh the blessednesses!" Transgression is passing over a boundary. Sin is the missing of a mark. Iniquity is what is turned out of its proper course and perverted. The first must be forgiven, i.e., borne away (John i. 29). The second must be covered, i.e., hidden from sight (Rev. iii. 18). The third must not be imputed (2 Cor. v. 19). All these things are true of each believer in Jesus. And in such, forgiveness begets guilelessness.

3, 4, 5. For some time after his sin, the tempter so gagged David that he strove to hide it. Ah, how bitter was his anguish then! He was silent in confession, but not in grief. Under the remorse of conscience he suffered as if the combined agonies of ague and fever had smitten his physical strength, and laid him low. At last he could stand it no longer; but confessed, and instantly experienced the joys of God's forgiveness (1 John i. 9). There is no cure for the soul like the instant confession of sin.

6, 7. Godly people should take courage at the Lord's deliverances to their fellows. Godliness is God-likeness. Do you resemble your Father (Eph. v. 1)? There are times when He seems especially near—nearer than the floods of great waters. Oh to be God-enclosed, God-encompassed! Then deliverances, with linked hands, shall encircle us with songs.

8, 9. Three precious promises—for instruction, teaching, and guidance. If the vision tarry, wait for it. If the cloud still broods over the Holy Place, do not strike your tents. Throw on God the responsibility of making his way plain. It is not that God will indicate our duty by the slight movement of the eye, but that He will watch us so as to stop us taking a wrong turn, or making a false step. The bit is an ordinary curb, the bridle is equivalent to a muzzle, to hinder vicious horses from biting.

10, 11. Compassed just now with songs, and here with mercy. When one asked Haydn why his church music was so cheerful, he said, "I cannot make it otherwise, I write as I feel. When I think upon God, my heart is so full of joy that the notes dance and leap, as it were, from my pen" (Phil. iv. 4).

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 11.—Psalm XXXIII.

This Psalm incites to praise. Let us note the subjects enumerated for this holy exercise. Surely it shall not be long ere, touching one of them, our soul shall ignite.

1. We cannot rejoice in ourselves, but we may in Him. Such an exercise is eminently befitting to those who owe to Him all they are and hope for.

2. Sweet-toned instruments and the voice of song will often stir the lethargic soul.

3. New hearts may use the old words, but ever with fresh emotion.

4. Think of his words, of creation, of promise, of teaching. Recall his works. Surely in some of these there is food for song. Muse, and the fire must burn.

5. His goodness is always passing before us (Exod. xxxiii. 19). The evil of the world is due to the devil's intrusion upon God's work (Matt. xiii. 28).

6-9. An epitome of creation.

10-15. His providential government. We may know the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the saints (Eph. i. 18; Titus ii. 14), and drink the blessedness of ver. 12. The 15th verse does not mean that all hearts are alike, but that all are equally fashioned by his hands.

16-19. We are possessed neither of a host, of much strength, nor of horses; humble and despised; and yet we need not regret the absence of all these things. They do not really avail in the day of battle. God's unslumbering eye sees our need, and if only we dare to trust Him, He will deliver us from death and famine.

20-22. Let us patiently tarry our Lord's leisure, and occupy ourselves as we do so with glad songs of praise for what He is going to do. Trust is certain to bear fruit in joy. The grave must lead to the songs of the resurrection morning. And we may well begin to rejoice in the prospect of joy, and to praise for the praise which we shall be shortly offering.

THURSDAY, JUNE 12.—Psalm XXXIV.

The event which this Psalm celebrates is recorded in 1 Sam. xxi. It was not a very creditable incident. David, however, realises the goodness of God, in spite of his own failures and mistakes. The Psalm clearly falls into two divisions, the first ending at ver. 10. In the original, the verses begin with the letters of the Hebrew alphabet.

1. It is a sign of great grace to bless always, in dark times as well as in bright.

3. We learn from 1 Sam. xxii. 11, who they were to whom David spoke. "Birds," says Trapp, "when they come to a full heap of corn, will chirp, and call in their fellows." Charity is no churl.

4, 5, 6. Whilst feigning madness, his soul was going up in prayer, and we can never turn our faces to God to be disappointed.

7. Compare Acts xii. 6.

8. Some experiences must be realised before they can be understood, and even then cannot be expressed. The rapture is unspeakable. But however rich the provision of God's goodness, it will avail nothing until we open eye and mouth.

10. "We will leave thee nothing," said plundering soldiers to a widow, "to put in thee or on thee. "I care not," said she, "I will not want as long as God is in the heavens." Columba spent his last afternoon in transcribing this Psalm, saying when he reached this verse, "I will stop here, the following verse will better suit my successor."

11-22. The purport of this exhortation is well summed up by Peter in his First Epistle (iii. 10). We need not fret to defend ourselves, or answer false accusations; let us refrain our lips, and go on doing what is right and good. So shall we find our needs supplied, our enemies silenced, and our soul redeemed. Note the Lord's eyes, ears, face, presence, deliverance, and redemption.

FRIDAY, JUNE 13.—Psalm XXXV.

Dates from the Sauline persecution, or from the disturbed state of the kingdom in David's later days. Each of the three divisions into which the Psalm naturally falls ends with praise (9, 18, 28).

Continually in this Psalm we meet with imprecations on the wicked. The spirit of the New Testament teaches us a higher law, the law of love and forgiveness (Luke ix. 56). But perhaps it is better to read these verses as predictions; thus, "Let them be confounded," would read, "They will be confounded."

3. What a thrill passes through the soul, when God whispers this assurance. God Himself is even more to us than what He has done. He is in us, around us, for us, and He is our salvation.

17. How truly might these words have been appropriated by the dying Saviour.

24. It is a comfort to appeal from the judgments of men to the bar of God, and claim his interposition and vindication, which must come, though years pass on without an answer.

28. What might not life be, if this were our resolution. Such is the spirit of heaven, of which it is said, "they rest not day and night" (Rev. iv. 8).

SATURDAY, JUNE 14.—Psalm XXXVI.

By the inscription we are specially led to think of service in connection with this Psalm. It is, indeed, a blessed service and perfect freedom. Christ's household servants all become nobles (Acts xxvii. 23).

CONTRASTED SERVICE (1-4).—When there is no fear of God before the eyes, a man is free to flatter himself in his own eyes. It is a terrible thing when a man becomes headstrong in wickedness, and abhors not evil.

THE MASTER'S CHARACTER (5-9).—All natural symbols fail to set forth the glories of Nature's Lord. We cannot scale his heights, or plumb his depths, or see his last star. His loving-kindness is precious (1 Pet. ii. 7). If you want men to leave other refuges, so as to shelter there, begin to talk of his love, that will draw them (7). Those who thirst for creature delights have yet to learn something of the meaning of this abundant satisfaction (John x. 10). God gives sorrow by cupfuls, and pleasures by riverfuls. Pleasures is the Hebrew word for Eden.

9. The deepest teachings of St. John lie folded in this marvellous verse, as the forest in the acorn.

THE SERVANT'S PRAYER (10-12).—Set thy loving-kindness abroach, so that we may drink, and drink again; start the flow, that it may be like some fountain of oil, which, the more it is drawn upon, the more it yields. The man who knows God is upright in heart, and vice versâ. But the servants of sin incur irrevocable ruin, while the servants of God stand in their integrity, unmoved (Isa. liv. 17).

Sunday Afternoon, June 15.

THE RICH MAN'S FOLLY.—LUKE xii. 13-21.

GOLDEN TEXT: LUKE xii. 15.

ONE OF THE COMPANY.—"He had no more use for the Redeemer's word than to gain by means of it a few more acres of earth for himself."—Arnot. He was simply one of that great multitude who listen to Gospel teaching and preaching with hearts and thoughts preoccupied with worldly possessions, pleasures, or cares. "Even under the preaching of Jesus there were unreceptive and inattentive listeners."—Lange.

TAKE HEED, &c.—"That love of the world which, keeping itself within the limits of decency and legality, yet takes all the affections of the heart from God, and robs Divine things of all their interest; against that men have need to be warned."—Trench.

COVETOUSNESS.—Is not desire merely, either to have or to hold; but desire uncontrolled by (1) conscience, and (2) the Word of God. To wish for anything (not sinful in itself) is not coveting; but to wish for it regardless of God's will, our neighbour's interests, or our soul's good, this is covetousness.

FOR A MAN'S LIFE CONSISTETH NOT, &c.—Underneath all covetousness is "a superstitious confidence in worldly goods, which are instinctively identified with happiness."—Godet. "The cause of all covetousness is a deteriorated moral sense, which regards possession as more than character; having as more than being. For a comparison of the two kinds of wealth, that of property, and that of character, see 1 Tim. vi. 9-11. "The commonness of this disease is indicated by the question so often asked, 'What is he worth?' as though men's worth were measured by their purse."—Lyman Abbott. "How poor a rich man, and how rich a poor man, may be!"—Lange. "It would be pleasant to have the outward possessions of an angel, his crown, harp, voice, shining raiment, and home in paradise, but it would be a thousand times better to be the angel. For one might have all his possessions, and yet be in the very focus of wretchedness."—Pelonbet.

A CERTAIN RICH MAN—made rich by successful husbandry, the result of (1) favouring circumstances, and also of (2) diligence, good business faculty, and foresight. There is no hint whatever of fraudulent wealth.

WHAT SHALL I DO, BECAUSE I HAVE NO ROOM? &c.—"The first thing lacking to this fortunate rich man is complete contentment." "Thou hast barns—the bosoms of the poor, the houses of widows, the mouths of infants...these are the barns which will last for ever."—Ambrose. The pronouns of vv. 17-19 are significant—the godless "I" that speaks and plans in total disregard of the great Ruler of all; and the selfish "my" excluding the claims of both God and man. "The four times repeated 'my'—my fruits, my barns, my fruits, my goods—strikes the key-note of his selfishness."—Curry.

SOUL, THOU HAST MUCH GOODS.—What sublime but terrible irony! As though the soul could be fed by the mere gratification of natural appetite!

FOR MANY YEARS.—The blind presumption of ungodliness. Are we entirely free from it? (Prov. xxvii. 1; James iv. 13-17; v. 1-3).

TAKE THINE EASE, EAT, DRINK, AND BE MERRY.—More energetically in the four words of the original: 'rest, eat, drink, enjoy.'"

BUT GOD SAID.—Awful "but"! Terrible contrast between the vain plannings of human selfishness and God's voice of power!

FOOL.—Yet he had always thought himself so shrewd and sagacious; and the world had called him wise. "In Biblical language the true fool is the man who wants the moral sense; i.e., the proper good sense in moral and religious matters."—Whedon.

SHALL BE REQUIRED OF THEE.—"As if it was a loan, which is now to be paid back."—Whedon.

SO IS HE THAT LAYETH UP TREASURE FOR HIMSELF.—"He that loveth his life shall lose it." "What is life for, but to be given away?" "God's rich man, and man's rich man may be paupers to each other."—Whedon.

RICH TOWARD GOD.—See 1 Tim. vi. 11. Rich (1) in character, which is beautiful to God; and (2) "in good works" (1 Tim. vi. 18). We may all be "rich toward God." We have but to accept "his unspeakable gift," "the unsearchable riches" of Christ. Thus we become rich. Then as we live Christ for Him and by Him, moment by moment, we become richer.

LESSONS.

(1) The gate of this parable is verse 13. How dreadful to be wronged of one's living—of one's patrimony! and by a brother! Would not wrong warrant absolution of soul? Will the compassionate, justice-loving Saviour blame him for this?

(2) The fact that Jesus does rebuke him so sternly, in spite of his great wrongs, shows, as few things could, the stupendous importance of spiritual things.

(3) How hopeless the case of pre-occupied hearers of the Gospel! Nothing can save the soul that is so taken up with its care and possession, sorrow or pleasure. Yet how common such are! They are found in every school.

(4) Note the highly respectable character of this farmer. His honourable calling; his success and general repute. Nothing against him, except godlessness, selfishness, and utter worldliness.

(6) His folly.—(1) He ignores the claims of God. Though not immoral, he is utterly godless. He says, by his whole life, "There is no God," for "God is not in all his thoughts." He neither accepts his prosperity as from God, nor has any belief in his dependence upon Him. (2) He ignores the claims of his neighbours, and thus shows want of moral sense. His thoughts were: "What I have is mine, to do what I like with." The duty and privilege of neighbourly service never occurs to him. (3) He ignores the claims of his soul. He thinks he can feed it with "goods"! Does not know that God's love and friendship can alone satisfy the soul. Press home the questions: "Do I acknowledge the claims of God, of my neighbour, of my soul? Or must I say I have Thought of myself, and wrought for myself — for myself, and none beside,

Just as if Jesus had never lived, and as if He had never died?

ILLUSTRATIONS.

(1) "Here and there is a man found who does not count money everything. For example, Professor Agassiz, when offered a large sum for lecturing, said: 'I have no time to make money.'"

(2) There is a story told of a shipwrecked and starving sailor who found a bag full, as he thought, of bread. Alas! it had in it only pearls—pearls great and priceless, but how useless to him dying of hunger. The body needed that which would support its life: so does the soul.

(3) "How much did he leave?" was the eager question concerning a rich man who had just died. "Every cent: he took nothing with him," answered the man questioned.

DR. MOON'S TYPE FOR THE BLIND.—The forty-second annual report of the Society for Embossing and Circulating among the Blind the Holy Scriptures, and other useful books, tells of cheering success attending a work of great interest. Dr. Moon has now completed the Jubilee year of his labours for the blind. Including the books sent out during last year, the total number issued from the commencement of the work exceeds 180,000; and more than 46,000 stereotyped plates have been prepared. The report says: "The Word of God to these poor sightless ones is truly 'a light to their path, and a lamp to their feet.' So happy has the embossed Bible made some, that they have altogether lost their care for sight. God has so richly compensated them by the sweet communion they have been enabled to hold with Him, through his Word, that they have been able to rejoice in their affliction." The system has been adapted to four hundred languages and dialects, for use in the mission field. Several volumes have recently been prepared in the Tamil language, with the assistance of Miss Askwith, from India. It is supposed that no less than 30,000 of the blind of India speak Tamil, and important results are expected from this effort. Dr. Moon's address is 104, Queen's-road, Brighton.

SHORE MISSION, NEW BRIGHTON.

THE eighteenth season of this Mission, which is held under the auspices of the New Brighton Y.M.C.A. and Christian Mission, was inaugurated on Whit Sunday, when the tent was erected on the shore near the Pier. Between the afternoon and the evening services the wind was so high that the tent was blown down, and the evening meeting had to be held in the Victoria Hall. The damage done to the tent was such that it could not be re-erected for Bank Holiday; but as the weather had moderated, and the sun was shining brightly, the services were held in the open air on the shore, when many thousands heard the Gospel message. The preaching commenced at 2.30 p.m., and continued without a break until 7.45, when an adjournment was made to the Victoria Hall, where a testimony meeting was held, which concluded the day's labours at about 9 o'clock.

Mr. Thos. A. Leigh, who conducted the services, was assisted by a large number of helpers, Scripture readers, members of the Liverpool Y.M.C.A., as well as Mr. Charles E. Faithfull, of Marseilles, and Dr. Bond, of the Liverpool Medical Mission. At times as many as 500 people were gathered together at once listening attentively to the words spoken, and as they dispersed others filled their places. It seemed quite a providence that the tent was injured, as far more people attended the open-air services than could or would have come to the tent had it been erected. Mr. Lydiatt, of the Liverpool Evangelisation Society, who for so many years has assisted in this work, was unable through illness to take any part this year.

The tent is now undergoing repairs, to be ready for future services.

MISSION TO ZULU KAFFIRS.—The report of the eleventh year of Elbert S. and Emma Clark's unsectarian work at Ixopo, Natal, South Africa, is specially interesting. The stations are four in number, and not only is there a more general desire to listen to the missionaries, but men, women, and children have yielded to spiritual impressions, and several have come out from heathenism and boldly declared themselves on the Lord's side. Mr. W. H. Bailey, of Stoke Newington, has joined the Mission. He is a trained carpenter, and will, it is hoped, render important help in giving industrial training to the boys. The school children have in many cases shown a true love for the Saviour, and are eagerly receiving Bible teaching. Communications with regard to the work may be addressed to Mrs. S. Fothergill, Pierremont-crescent, Darlington.

THE STUDY OF PROPHECY.—The seventh annual Conference for the study of Prophetic Scripture, to be held in the Conference Hall, Clapham-road, S.W., will take place on June 17, 18, and 19. The circular opens with the words of our Lord to his disciples: "And now I have told you before it come to pass, that when it is come to pass, ye might believe." Prophecy, then, is God's aid to faith. The proposed subjects and speakers are:—First day—Morning, "The Waiting of Creation and of the sons of God for the Coming of the Lord," by Rev. F. A. C. Lillingston; "The Return of Christ Personal and Pre-millennial," by Rev. G. D. Hooper. Afternoon, "The Second Advent in its Relation to the Jews," by Rev. J. Wilkinson. Evening, "The Pope and the Antichrist," by Rev. Dr. Sinclair Paterson; and "The Treading of the Winepress," by Rev. N. S. Taylor. Second day—Morning, "The Movements and Tendencies of To-day regarded as Signs of the Approaching End," by Mr. L. Liesching; "The Song of Moses" (Deut. xxxii.), by Mr. G. H. Pember. Afternoon, "The Great Prophecy on the Mount of Olives," by Rev. Dr. Bullinger. Evening, "The Antichrist and the Jews," by Mr. G. Warrand Houghton; and "The Reign of the Saints of the Most High," by Rev. J. Gosset Tanner. Third day—Morning, "Prophetic Warnings in regard to the Special Dangers and Temptations of the Church in the Latter Days," by Rev. J. Fuller Gooch; "The Judgment of the Great White Throne," by Rev. Charles Graham. Afternoon, "Mission of English Deaconesses in Jerusalem," by Deaconesses from Jerusalem; "Work in Moab," by Major-General Haig. Evening, "The Parable of the Tares, and its Historical Fulfilment," by Mr. G. H. Pember; and "The Kingdom of this World is become the Kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ, and He shall Reign for ever and ever," by Rev. Marmaduke Washington.

The "COMPACTUM" UMBRELLA.

UNIVERSALLY ACKNOWLEDGED TO BE THE GREATEST TRIUMPH OF INVENTIVE GENIUS IN UMBRELLA MANUFACTURE.

April 12, 1889.

"About eight years ago, when you first opened your shop at 13, Poultry, for the sale of 'COMPACTUM' Umbrellas, I bought one, and although I have had it in constant use ever since, the frame has only just given way, and that through old age; in fact, it is quite rusty, and cannot be re-covered.

"I have much pleasure in stating that the advantages you hold out of the "COMPACTUM" Patent are quite correct in every point. I shall recommend them everywhere.

"I have just bought another, and am pleased to hand you the old one to make what use of you like, together with this letter.—"Yours faithfully,

"Please re-cover the 'COMPACTUM' I left you, with the same material as it was originally covered with. I take this opportunity of expressing my satisfaction with your Umbrellas. After using one all day and every day for two years, it would not have required re-covering now, but for coming in contact with a refractory nail.

"The 'Compactum' is therefore the cheapest as well as the most sightly of Umbrellas.

JUST READY.

"THE CHRISTIAN" BIBLE READINGS.

BEING NOTES AND READINGS ON THE FIVE BOOKS OF MOSES.

Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, Deuteronomy.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

THE NOTES AND READINGS contained in this volume originally appeared in the pages of THE CHRISTIAN week by week. The interest taken in them at the time of their issue has led to re-publication in their present form.

It is believed that these NOTES and READINGS will be found of service to Sabbath School Teachers and to Bible Students: Ministers and Evangelists will also be able to gather help from their pages.

It will be observed that the Chapters have been considerably extended since their appearance in THE CHRISTIAN; and some new features have been added.

It should be understood that the present work is intended to be a HELP for Bible Students. It is not, therefore, prepared with a view to being read through like an ordinary volume. But as chapter after chapter of the Pentateuch is perused, it is hoped that Bible Readers will have this book open at their side for reference. In this way the use and value of the work will be most fully realised.

Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth limp, 1s. 6d.
Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 2s. 6d.

Scroggie, and in which Mr. W. D. Dunn and Mr. S. McKenzie will also take part.——Tent services at Cerleigh, near Honiton.

INVALIDS' AUXILIARY TO THE EDINBURGH MEDICAL MISSIONARY SOCIETY.—But few remain of the invalids who twelve years ago banded themselves together to help medical mission work abroad. Several have completely recovered, and are now in the ranks of those who are actively working for the Master: others have been called to their rest. With fresh helpers the auxiliary continues to cheer many workers. The invalids make articles which are sold at an annual bazaar, and the proceeds distributed among various missions. Last year £711 was apportioned between sixteen institutions in many lands. Communications may be addressed to Miss Bishop, 6, Brunstield-place, [illegible].

ROME IN AMERICA.—We have often asked ourselves (says a writer in Our Day) if this American Protestant nation has ever realised to what an alarming extent it has been a partaker in the sins that can be directly traced to the false teaching of Romanism. It has been shown that eighty per cent. of the illiterate and paupers of this country are Romanists. Every nation on the face of the earth that has been under Romish rule has been made poor, ignorant, and degraded. Bloody revolutions, such as that of France, can be traced to Romish absolutism, as well as the infidelity which is devastating that fair land. Yet we say we have no special mission to the Romanists of our country. May God open our eyes and help us to do our duty.

THE CHILDREN'S FRESH-AIR MISSION affords poor London children a fortnight or three weeks' summer holiday in the country. The children are taken mainly from the districts of Holborn, Clerkenwell, and St. Luke's, preference being given to those who are in feeble health, and who, otherwise, could not obtain such an outing. The little ones are boarded in cottages at a cost of 5s. per week, under the supervision of responsible persons resident in the neighbourhood. The report for 1889 states that last summer 2623 children enjoyed the benefits of the Mission, being an increase of 400 over the previous year. The income from subscriptions and donations was £1581, which was clearly spent to admirable advantage. The hon. treasurer is Mr. Walter Hazell, 15, Russell-square, W.C.

IN ST. PETERSBURG there are 80,000 Protestants. They form one-tenth of the entire population of the Russian capital, and belong, for the most part, to the Lutheran Church.

THE OLD CATHOLICS in Central Europe are said to number 100,000. Of these about 75,000 are in Switzerland, 15,000 in Germany, and 12,000 in Austria-Hungary, besides many in Bavaria.

"This very handsome volume on a subject of perpetual importance will be welcomed, especially by those who are acquainted with Dr. Culross's other excellent works. Dr. Culross has here pre-eminently exhibited his usual excellence as a religious writer. Clear in style and eloquent in argument, striking in illustration. Rev. C. H. SPURGEON says:—"Preachers abound; but divines are few. The printing press pours forth a mass of matter; but a real book is a phenomenon. We count ourselves happy, for we have met with a divine in Dr. James Culross; and in his work, entitled 'John, Whom Jesus Loved,' we have found a book. Many writers are mere echoes of other men's voices—they imitate the good steward in bringing forth things old, but things new are quite out of their way. One of the excellences of Dr. Culross is the freshness of his thought. The dew is on his branch; he is no withered bough of the autumn frost. His mind allows young flowers to break through its soil after their own fashion, and to blossom in their own sweet way."

"It is altogether without reserve that we commend the work before us. It is not a bottle of milk for babes, but a portion of meat for men. A half-dozen readings will only make it more interesting to those who meditate upon what they read."
The Sword and Trowel.

"We can most heartily commend this most refreshing and helpful book to all our teachers. It is full of carefully selected information, most valuable to those who have to use the writings of John as a text-book. It is the work of one who is evidently in close sympathy with the ardent loving nature of the beloved Apostle. ...It is a most healthy book for quiet, meditative moods. . . . CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

(THIRTY-THIRD SERIES.)

CASE COMMUNICATED BY REV. W. R. CAPEL, formerly of BICKENHILL VICARAGE.

This clergyman is an old patient of mine. His case was one of severe bronchitis and asthma, and was published in the weekly papers of October, 1888 (27th Series). Writing me January 6th, of this year, he says:—"I am thankful to say that since I was under your treatment I have had no return of bronchitis." He then adds:—

"I enclose you a letter I received from a stranger, to whom I recommended your advice and medicine."

The letter is from another clergyman, near Clevedon, and is dated December 23rd, 1889, and is as follows:—

"I thought that you would be pleased to know at this glad season, that your kind advice given last August, was acted upon in the young farmer's case for whom I wrote to you. He has derived so much benefit from Mr. Congreve's medicine, that even the doctor here is constrained to acknowledge its efficacy. He was able to walk 18 miles last week, and was none the worse for it. His aged widowed mother feels very thankful that there will be no vacant chair as she feared, and every one else anticipated."

Mr. Capel writes me from Poole-road, Bournemouth.

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

The "COMPACTUM" UMBRELLA.

UNIVERSALLY ACKNOWLEDGED TO BE THE GREATEST TRIUMPH OF INVENTIVE GENIUS IN UMBRELLA MANUFACTURE.

April 12, 1888.

"About eight years ago, when you first opened your shop at 11, Poultry, for the sale of 'COMPACTUM' Umbrellas, I bought one, and although I have had it in constant use ever since, the frame has only just given way, and must go through old age: in fact, it is quite rusty, and cannot be re-covered.

"I have much pleasure in stating that the advantages you hold out of the "COMPACTUM" Patent are quite correct in every point. I shall recommend them everywhere.

"I have just bought another, and am pleased to hand you the old one to make what use of you like, together with this letter.—"Yours faithfully,

Signed, "FRANCIS [illegible],
"Mr. H. A. Davis."

November 27, 1882.

"Please exchange the 'COMPACTUM' I left you, with the same material as it was originally covered with. I take this opportunity of expressing my satisfaction with your Umbrellas. After using one all day and every day for two years, it would not have required re-covering now, but for coming in contact with a refractory nail.

"The 'Compactum' is therefore the cheapest as well as the most sightly of Umbrellas.

"You are at liberty to make what use you like of this letter.

Yours truly,

Signed, "[illegible] A. [illegible]."
"Mr. H. A. Davis."

The Patent "COMPACTUM" is the MOST COMPACT and at the same time the STRONGEST UMBRELLA.

"THE CHRISTIAN" BIBLE READINGS.

JUST READY.

BEING NOTES AND READINGS ON THE FIVE BOOKS OF MOSES.

Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, Deuteronomy.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

THE NOTES AND READINGS contained in this volume originally appeared in the pages of THE CHRISTIAN week by week. The interest taken in them at the time of their issue has led to re-publication in their present form.

It is believed that these NOTES and READINGS will be found of service to Sabbath School Teachers and to Bible Students: Ministers and Evangelists will also be able to gather help from their pages.

It will be observed that the Chapters have been considerably extended since their appearance in THE CHRISTIAN; and some new features have been added.

It should be understood that the present work is intended to be a HELP for Bible Students. It is not, therefore, prepared with a view to being read through like an ordinary volume. But as chapter after chapter of the Pentateuch is perused, it is hoped that Bible Readers will have this book open at their side for reference. In this way the use and value of the work will be most fully realised.

A CHILD OF FAITH IN AN AGE OF DOUBT.

MEMORIALS OF ANDREW KENNEDY BREMNER. BY HIS BROTHER.

Sword and Trowel:—"The title well describes the youth whose brief life is herein lovingly set down. . . . Will Scotland or any other land produce such holy youth when the new unbelief has won the day? Our young brother, who has now gone up higher, knew the reality of the great truths, which, to many around him, were mere names and dreams."

Christian:—"A career of singular promise was cut short by the early death of the young Scotch student whose brief, beautiful life is embalmed in these pages. But he left a noble testimony behind him, and its influence will be perpetuated by this simple, fraternal memoir. The book is invested with a special interest because of the references to recent religious movements."

The Christian.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Mr. JAMES DUPE, evangelist, Nottingham.

At the present season many earnest Christians find themselves in foreign lands seeking rest and health. Visitors to the Continent will be glad to learn that "The Christian Traveller's Continental Handbook" (6d. Elliot Stock) is quite a directory of Protestant institutions and places of evangelical worship in many lands. Edited by Rev. R. S. Ashton, Secretary of the Evangelical Continental Society, it will be found a very useful manual.

It is intended to hold at the Westminster Town Hall a universal Congress of the friends of Peace during the week, July 14 to 19. A large number of delegates and visitors, both English and foreign, are expected, to whom the Committee is anxious to extend hospitality during their stay. Any of our readers who may be willing to entertain a guest for the week over which the sittings of the Congress extend, are invited to communicate with Mr. W. Evans Darby, Secretary to the Congress Committee, 47, New Broad-street, E.C.

The Nonconformist and Independent has a kindly written paper on a very homely text—"To owe no man anything." The temptations of the "hire system," and of the money-lending advertisements that occupy such a large space in the daily papers, give force to the caution. The writer does not exaggerate when he warns against the disastrous effects of debt upon ministers of religion, and against a too prevalent notion that their usefulness depends upon their style of dwelling, clothing, and living. Equally just is his caution against a mistaken belief that expensive magazines must be purchased for the sake of cultured hearers. We add the closing words, to young pastors, of this practical paper:—

> Follow the advice. "Never owe a penny," and you will avoid one of the worst evils that can befall a minister. Get into debt, and most likely your influence is gone. Follow this maxim on beginning your ministry, and you may be saved from years of misery.

One point touched upon by the Moderator in his address at the close of the Free Church of Scotland Assembly may seem to some ordinary, but in view of present discussions it is most vital. Tens of thousands of Christ's followers in the different churches will approve of the words that the all-important thing respecting candidates for the ministry is that they should have experience in their own souls of the saving grace of God. It would be like life to the dead everywhere if Church authorities, and college committees, would insist upon this. The heart, and not the head, makes the sound theologian, and it is to be hoped that Dr. Brown's emphatic words may be pondered when he affirmed that conversion is much more essential than talent and education in the minister of the Gospel.

It was a welcome change from party strife to find the House of Commons last Friday in such harmony of satisfaction with respect to the New Educational Code. If education becomes more attractive to children and less irksome to teachers, as such legislators as Mr. S. Smith and Sir L. Playfair pointed out; if inspectors are not to be mere assessors but the friends and counsellors of managers and teachers; if the teacher is made less a machine, and able more to rely on his own powers; and if agricultural labourers and workmen are trained to a higher fitness for their special callings, the country will unite with Parliament in the general congratulation.

"A working people's mission to the working people" is the definition which The Quiver for June gives of the Church Army. Work in the streets enters largely into its method. Of the 12,000 members of the Army, the majority, we are told, were drunkards, thieves, and gamblers. An instance is given of a clergyman who put his arm round a man's neck to dissuade him from entering into a tavern. Nor did the action fail to win the man's regard. It is this brotherly compassion, this Christ-like method of speaking to men on the thoroughfares of life that will best answer the query, "How to reach the masses?"

The desirability of emigration in the case of many of our workhouse children has been shown very forcibly by Miss Hall, of Eastbourne, through whose praiseworthy efforts numbers of lads have been sent from Sussex to Canada. Nearly all the young emigrants have written letters, which Miss Hall has published. These communications uniformly testify to the success which has followed the little fellows' labours in the far-off land. By-and-by we shall probably arrive at a State arrangement of the kind; for surely it would be more economical, leaving aside moral considerations, for the nation to advance the sum which the establishment of these little paupers would cost in the first instance, than to dribble it out in instalments, with the possibility of larger amounts to follow, in the relief of poverty or the repression of crime.

A gentleman who has been one of our readers hitherto, writes as follows:—

> We have decided to discontinue taking THE CHRISTIAN after this week, as we so strongly disapprove of the intolerance shown in its pages towards the Roman Catholics.

We regret this far more on the writer's account than our own. He entirely misapprehends the case. It is our sympathy for Roman Catholics, as our fellow creatures travelling to the same eternity as ourselves, which constrains us to lift up our voice against the priestcraft of Rome, which has always been the deceiver of souls and the persecutor of the saints. Popery is nothing but veneered heathenism; we have very recently seen with aching heart the idolatry of Mary on the Continent, and we are appalled at the strides this evil system is making among our wealthier classes. The human conscience craves a priest. God has abundantly provided for this necessity in Jesus the Son of God, our Great High Priest. Rome substitutes men in sinful flesh for the Holy One, harmless, undefiled, and separate from sinners.

The following passage from an address by Lord Coleridge to the Law Students at Birmingham which appears in extenso in the June Contemporary Review, is an excellent deliverance on the ethics of advocacy:—

> A man may not lie for himself, neither may his advocate for him; a man may not deliberately deceive, or accuse a man of a crime of which he knows him to be innocent, or devise, or without careful inquiry and reasonable belief disseminate, a slander, and neither may his advocate. Now, I think it cannot be denied that the English system greatly increases the temptation to do these things by dividing the responsibility for them. A man makes a deadly attack upon the character of another, which turns out to be unfounded. He says he followed his instructions. Granted that he did: if he took reasonable care to inquire into the nature of the evidence, and the character of the witnesses, he is no more to be blamed than any man who repeats something to the discredit of another which he has heard upon authority, which he knows, or has satisfied himself to be unimpeachable. But if he makes no inquiry, the mere statement in the brief is absolutely no excuse whatever, and he deserves the scornful condemnation of all honourable men.

It is stated that Baron Rothschild, acting in accordance with a resolution passed by the Council of the United Synagogue, has issued a circular to every Metropolitan and provincial synagogue, requesting them to appoint delegates to a Conference, which will soon meet, to prepare a scheme of communal union. The Jewish World remarks that a successful Conference will result in the most powerful combination of Jewish congregations that has ever been known, and one which must necessarily exercise a tremendous influence over the entire future of Judaism and the Jewish people.

Not only the medical, but also some of the religious and secular papers have uttered a protest against one of the latest developments of that eagerness to follow after some new thing, whether in science or in theology, which is characteristic of these latter days. The Spectator some weeks ago uttered a telling warning against that latest sensation fad called "hypnotism," which is, after all, but an old phenomenon under a new name. A recent correspondent of The Times has protested "in the name of common propriety, if not of common sense," against this increasing craze:—

> The exercise of this power I hold to be wholly without justification, unless the circumstances be altogether exceptional. The effects produced on the subject or victim are disastrous in the extreme: and those who subject themselves to a mischievous and demoralising influence ought at least to be warned, so that it shall be with their eyes open, and knowing the evil that they are doing and daring, they make the surrender of their self-control and all reasonable claim to the privileges of self-respect.

The peril attending the exercise of such a strange and dangerous power by unscrupulous persons is obvious; but it is on higher grounds than this that the practice is deprecated. There is One only to whose infinite wisdom, guidance, and governance we may safely commit ourselves in body, soul, and spirit.

It seems a mysterious, and it certainly is a melancholy fact, that many movements professing to have—perhaps at first really having—holiness for their object, have contrariwise seen some of their votaries led into sin. How is it that men professing to follow after holiness have become evil men and seducers, waxing worse and worse? If, as at least many have, they began well, how was it that Satan hindered them? What was the rock upon which they split? What the false doctrine by which they were deceived? The Scriptural and prayerful consideration of these questions may lead to some useful conclusions.

YOUNG MEN OF MADRAS.

In January last, as some of our readers will remember, Mr. David McConaughy, of Philadelphia, arrived in Madras, on a definite mission to promote Y.M.C.A. work among students. An Association was formed without delay, and during the first three months of its existence it has made steady and cheering progress.

The building which forms a centre of operations is admirably situated; it was previously occupied by the Church of England Temperance Institute, and adjoins the Christian College, as well as being near the Church of Scotland, the Hindu, and the Medical Colleges. The opening was under very auspicious circumstances, the Bishop of Madras presiding. During the first month 35 members were enrolled, but there has been steady growth, and in the middle of May the roll contained 115 names. Mr. J. Guanamuthu, a student of the Christian College, has accepted the post of assistant secretary, regarding it as offering great opportunities of work for God.

From the commencement, Saturday evening has been devoted to a Bible-class, conducted by Mr. McConaughy. Hindus as well as Christians attend, and nearly all take their Bibles and note-books with them. The average attendance for the quarter has been very good. A Bible training class has also been organised, with seven members, picked men, and pledged to three hours a week careful and prayerful study of the subject.

Mr. W. R. Arbuthnot, Madras, writes to us:—"We are feeling the want of a good library, and we shall be very grateful to any kind friends who will send us suitable books. In order to avoid unnecessary expense for carriage, books should be sent care of the Young Men's Christian Association, 186, Aldersgate-street, London, E.C. There is a large scope for the expansion of the work of the Association. There are in Madras ten colleges, with 5,500 students, besides numerous high schools and others of lower grade. All of these students understand English. God has blessed and prospered the work above the expectations of the most sanguine, and we are already beginning to find our present quarters too small. We propose with God's help to make the work locally self-supporting; but we look to Him to put it into the hearts of his servants at home to come forward with the necessary funds to erect a suitable building which may be ready for us to step into as soon as our present two years' lease expires. Madras is but a small part of India, and the example set here is already being followed by Colombo, Calcutta, and Allahabad, from the missionary conferences at which places calls have come for well-trained secretaries to start the work."

Religion or Christ.

Much is being written and spoken at the present time with regard to the difficulty of filling our churches, and inducing in the world at large a greater inclination to religion. Many causes are brought forward to account for the lack of interest in such things, such as an unpopular style of preaching, too long services, unpalatable doctrines, &c. Our pastors are brought to book for their lack of visiting, for a want of real interest in their congregations, for a failure to adapt themselves to an altered style of thought, and for not keeping up with the times. Doubtless some of these reasons are causes real and tangible; but are not we as Christians, Church-members, striving to cast out the mote from our brother's eye, and, behold, a beam is in our own? Is the daily life of Christians as a body calculated to inspire in ungodly people a desire to imitate them and to serve their Master? Are we Christ-like in our daily occupations, and in our dealings with others? We often ask of ourselves or others—may a professing Christian do this, or engage in that? Should we not rather say: Lord, what wouldst Thou have me to do? And turning from our relations to the world at large, are we manifesting a Christ-like life in our churches?

When as Christians we meet together, how often does it occur that we speak together about our Lord, of his love and preciousness, or that we strive to learn from each other some Christian grace? Is it not far oftener the case that the sermons of the previous Sunday are discussed, not with a view to deriving from them all possible instruction, food, and help, but rather as those criticising the lecturer upon a purely secular subject, the length of discourse, manner of delivery, the favourable or unfavourable comparison of our own pastor with the Rev. So-and-so? All these find places in our conversation, to the exclusion of spiritual and helpful converse.

Again, do we bear our full share of the responsibility resting upon every church to do all that is possible to win souls for Christ? Is it not too often that this is considered entirely the work of the pastor, and the part of the congregation felt to be the coming to church to get helped and comforted by the words spoken, and then to go away to rest?

Especially, do we pray as we ought, continuously and fervently, for the whole Church of Christ in general, but especially for that particular branch of it with which we are connected? Many, many there are who do this and far more, and who are on fire with love and zeal; but, as a whole, do we not live religious rather than Christly lives?

May not we ourselves, each professing Christian, do much to bring about a better state of things? Let us in our private prayer seek not merely for general blessings upon our church, but let us plead earnestly with our Father on behalf of special persons, and special objects. Let us ask the aid of the Holy Spirit for our pastors, day by day, that they may receive direct from God the thoughts and words they shall give out to their people, that they may indeed feed the flock of God. And for each hearer, that they may come with hearts hungering and thirsting after righteousness, and be filled; that sinners may be convinced and converted, and God be verily amongst us.

If prayer such as this be offered unceasingly from the depths of the heart, we shall find no inclination for criticism; but, with hearts fully expecting the blessing, we shall ourselves be drawn very near to God; and the world, seeing us to be in real earnest, will be led to inquire into the source of our joy and strength. Churches thus bound together cannot fail to be a power for good, both to the religious world and to the masses. J. R. G.

RELIGIOUS LIBERTY IN SPAIN.

Dear Sir,—You have, on some recent occasions, allowed us to refer in your columns to cases of religious intolerance in Spain, and we have also indicated, in a general way, that the efforts of the Evangelical Alliance were being directed towards obtaining relief from the persecution to which Protestant Christians are subjected in that country. We have now the pleasure to communicate to you the results of steps taken within the past few weeks, and we are sure that your readers will rejoice with us in the blessing which God has given to those efforts.

It will be remembered that at Criptana, in the province of Cuidad Real, Mr. G. Lawrence, a Protestant minister, has suffered much from opposition which has been stirred up against him by the priests, and with the connivance of the Alcalde. Mr. Lawrence and his family have been constantly exposed to insult, and even bodily injury, while the Protestant chapel, which was opened a few months ago, was arbitrarily closed by order of the authorities after a violent mob had surrounded the place and threatened death to the Protestants. Appeals have been made by Mr. Lawrence to the Evangelical Alliance, and the matter has been brought before Sir Clare Ford, H.M. Ambassador at Madrid, on the ground that the rights of a British subject have been infringed. Sir Clare Ford has shown a friendly spirit, and has done all in his power for Mr. Lawrence.

The newly formed Spanish branch of the Evangelical Alliance have also taken special action, and quite recently a deputation waited upon the Spanish Minister for Home Affairs. The deputies were courteously received by his Excellency, Señor Capdebon, and he read the memorial which was presented to him. He immediately called a subordinate, and he ordered him to transmit it to the Governor of the province in which Criptana is situated, with instructions that within five days he should report upon the matter. Señor Cabrera, who subsequently had an interview with the Minister, was shown by his Excellency the answer of the Governor of Cuidad Real. In that communication the Governor acknowledged the justice of the complaints, and stated that, in obedience to the orders of the Minister, he had forwarded an official despatch to Criptana directing that the Gospel Hall be re-opened, and likewise that the civil guards be instructed to protect the Protestants, and to uphold them in their rights of free exercise of worship in the Hall. The Minister assured Señor Cabrera at the same time that he was disposed to do all in his power to ensure the practical and free course of religious tolerance in Spain.

The Secretary of the Spanish branch of the Evangelical Alliance, writing from Madrid on this subject, says:—"So far as both the Minister and the Governor are concerned, we have every reason to be much gratified at the results of our appeal."

It is remarkable that some of the Madrid papers had favourable articles upon the subject, and this fact no doubt had its influence upon the Home Minister. However, it should ever be borne in mind that evangelical Christianity is only tolerated according to the Spanish Constitution.—We remain, dear Sir, yours faithfully,

J. Field, General, C.B.

ALGIERS.—An incident full of interest took place recently—the baptism of Sidi Abdel-Kader-Ouled Bouzian, a native of Morocco, educated at the Lyceum at Algiers, and now a medical student. The young man applied to the minister of the Scotch church, and, having passed a satisfactory examination as to the grounds of his faith, he was baptized in the presence of a large congregation.

THE THREE GARDENS:

BY REV. JAMES CULROSS, D.D.

THE GARDEN OF EDEN.

IV.—The Fallen State.

"SHE took of the fruit and did eat, and gave to her husband with her, and he did eat." What followed? Shame, fear, hiding from God, self-justifying, blame thrown on others. Shame: Their eyes were opened—ah, how differently from their expectations! Opened to their own nakedness, and to a future that lowered drear and sad; a hitherto unknown sensation is awakened in their breast; and for covering, these "would-be gods" sewed fig-leaves together for aprons. Fear: Their guilty consciences have forebodings none the less terrible that they are vague and shapeless; the voice of the Lord God among the trees of the garden awakens dread and trembling. Hiding from God: Instead of going forth with ready steps and joyful hearts to meet Him, the guilty pair lurk for concealment amidst the thick garden foliage, in trembling anxiety, lest they should be discovered and punished. Self-justifying and blame for others: It was not I, but the woman whom Thou gavest me. It was not I, but the beguiling serpent, created by Thee, and placed in Paradise. All this is the natural consequence of sin; and men are doing over again to-day just what our first parents did yesterday.

The biologist tells us that "living" is the continuous adjustment of internal and external relations; that a being "lives" just so long as he keeps in harmony with the successive changes in his environment; when he ceases to do so, he "dies." So we understand what is meant when we are told that one is dead to sweet sounds—dead to the intellectual world—dead to natural affection. Now, man's true environment—the environment of his spirit—is GOD. Being out of harmony with God, not loving Him, not trusting Him, not responding to his will, not abiding in his fellowship, not even recognising Him, except, perhaps, in words, man is declared by the New Testament writers to be dead. They do not set themselves to prove this; they assume it as indisputable; it is an axiom with them. Man, they say with one consent, man as grace finds him, being "alienated from the life of God," "has no life in him." Culture, guidance, teaching, development will not suffice for man's true well-being: God must quicken, if He would save.

Begin with their record of the words of Jesus. He said that He came to give life to men—"eternal," or "everlasting," life. He described that mysterious change which men undergo in conversion as a passing "from death into life." In his interview with Nicodemus He announced that man's real need is the need of life, and He told how this new life is kindled. "Ye must be born again," He said. The first birth is our coming into a world of sense and intellect and human affection—to breathe, and eat, and drink, and labour, and enjoy, and sleep. But the mere continuance of all this would not be what Jesus means by life eternal. True, we have got greatly into the habit of conceiving of it as nothing more; of thinking simply of deliverance from punishment, and the enjoyment of never-ending happiness in some place vaguely called "heaven." But this is not what Jesus means—at least, not all. He means not only something unspeakably greater and nobler, but something of a different kind, corresponding to what is in God Himself. And He begins his teaching of Nicodemus by announcing to him: What man needs is life—not merely a fresh and further revelation of duty, not merely a perfect example of moral excellence set before him with a summons to its imitation, but new life. I can conceive of some sinful man, who has wearied himself in vain striving after what he calls "nobleness" listening to the word of Jesus for the first time, and exclaiming, "Yes; Jesus understands my case; He has put his finger upon my deepest need—the need of life." Now, whatever interpretation may be given of our Lord's words, they carry in them the assertion that man's condition, as grace finds him, is one of death.

The Apostles of our Lord say the same thing; and even when it is not said in so many words, it is deeply implied. "Death passed upon all men." "Yield yourselves unto God as those that are alive from the dead." "You hath He quickened who were dead." "We know that we have passed from death into life." God loved us with a great love, "even when we were dead in sins." "He that hath not the Son hath not life."

The New Testament will be unintelligible to us, unless we accept the truth that man, as Divine grace finds him, is in a condition of death—not in some boldly figurative sense, but in a sense most real, profound, and awful: he is fatally out of harmony with his environment, which is God. And the world is not the "scene of man's probation," but the theatre of redemption, where the glory of grace is disclosed. All this teaching of the New Testament is confirmation of the Genesis record, which tells how man came under the power of death.

SEAMEN AT FALMOUTH.

FALMOUTH, being a large harbour, and one of our principal "ports of call," is visited annually by about 17,000 seamen, besides a large number of fishermen. Among these a most interesting work is being carried on, under the care of the "British and Foreign Sailor's Society." Services are regularly held in the Bethel on Sundays and during the week, which are well attended, and frequently times of much blessing. Classes have recently been started for boys and girls (children of those connected with the sea), and are much appreciated. At the earnest request of the boys, a meeting is held on Sundays for them, which we trust may prove a blessing, as many of them do not attend any other place of worship. Sailors in hospital are visited, and seem always willing to hear the good news of salvation. It is often a touching sight to see them, some only able to speak a few words of broken English, and perhaps dying far from home.

The work "afloat" is most important, and has been greatly owned of God. The missionary spends much of his time visiting from vessel to vessel in his boat, the Messenger, speaking to the men, distributing Bibles, books, tracts, &c., which are eagerly sought for, and holding services as way opens. Sometimes a simple text, or the singing of a hymn, will touch their hearts, and is the means of bringing them to their Saviour. Letters are frequently written to those visited, and the replies are often very cheering.

The last report mentions 774 ships visited, 431 letters written to sailors, 237 services held, 133 visits to sick sailors during the year. Much more could be said of this deeply interesting work, but this slight sketch is given, trusting it may arouse some interest among those who have not known of it before, and that any who can will visit it for themselves. Earnest prayer is asked, and substantial help will be gladly received by Miss E. M. Fox (Hon. Sec.), 41, Market-street, Falmouth. R. G.

WORDS TO OPEN-AIR WORKERS.

ALWAYS go to God about sinners before you go to sinners about God.

Go with God rather than with your fellow-labourer, ready if called upon to stand up alone for Jesus.

Go in the deepest humility, realising that all results are with God, and do not be depressed or unduly elated by outward appearances.

Do not go with a settled plan of your own, but look to the Lord to arrange and order everything. He may bring to you adults or children, or both, a settled crowd or a moving one, few or many, tumult or quiet.

Be ashamed of yourself, but do not be ashamed of the Gospel. Therefore let self have no prominence, and speak boldly as you ought to speak.

For your encouragement bear in mind that God takes up poor, weak, and despised things to effect his glorious purposes.

Be most reverent in your preaching and manner.

Remember that you do not come out to prove anything, but to deliver a message whether they will hear it or not.

You cannot be too simple. Try and not use any peculiar phraseology. Do not stretch beyond your measure. Be real.

It is well sometimes to begin by simply quoting texts; one may then strike you, and you may be led to comment upon it.

Preach Christ, his person and work, in connection with his death, resurrection, ascension, and coming.

Put yourself, as it were, right down at the sinner's side, and where you can do so use the word "we" as well as "you."

Avoid carefully all appearance of lightness. Remember it is a most solemn thing to preach or to hear the Gospel.

Directly one speaks, let the other workers, as far as possible, arrange themselves in an orderly manner around or in front of him, and show earnest attention themselves to what is said.

Workers should not engage in conversation with one another, so as to appear inattentive themselves or distract the hearers.

Do not give away tracts, &c., during the preaching, to those who are evidently listening. It is well, on the outskirts of the crowd, to look after any who are leaving, and judiciously and quietly give them a word or a tract.

If any worker come or go during the meeting, let them do it as quietly and unnoticeably as possible; not shaking hands all round, &c.

Let our object ever appear to be the glory of God and the good of the people, not to bring ourselves into prominence in any way. Be ready to be "fools for Christ's sake."

As a rule do not deal with any interruption in a direct manner. Ever show a spirit of grace and love.

If any persistently interrupt, requiring answers to (perhaps infidel) questions, ask such to kindly wait until you have finished, and say you will then speak to them by themselves.

Be very careful how you attempt to answer infidels publicly during your preaching.

Remember that preachers and all who occupy a public position are in danger from special temptations. Keep under your body, mentally and physically.

It is happy sometimes to offer little books to those who will come and take them after the preaching.

Do all for the glory of God, the honour of Christ, and the eternal blessing of souls. O.

WELCOME HOME, RATCLIFF HIGHWAY.—At the meeting last week sailors from many parts of the world, and other friends, mingled their praises and prayers. Miss Child gave the text for the month: "Return unto thy rest, O my soul," and spoke of the dove who could find no rest but in the ark; a true type of the believer who can find rest alone in the Great Ark. Mr. Legg founded his address on "A double-minded man is unstable in all his ways." He gave instances of those who have failed in carrying out God's purposes by never being able to make up their minds, and showed the importance of depending upon God's strength to carry them through. During the three meetings, which lasted from seven to eleven o'clock, there were much prayer, praise, and testimony.

Work Among French Priests.

The work of M. Eugène Reveillaud among French priests of the Church of Rome is not so well known as it deserves to be. An esteemed correspondent sends to us the following abstract of the last report:—

How is it possible to withhold sympathy from such a work as this? Are not the priests the first victims of the ecclesiastical system, which they are accused of spreading for their own profit, but into which they were initiated in their early years of simplicity and ignorance? True, in many cases, their chains of captivity are lightened by the conviction that, as defenders and proselytisers of the Roman Church, they are serving a grand cause, and their pride and vanity are flattered, in the exercise of their priestly functions, by the importance accorded them in the eyes of the "silly souls" to whom they minister; yet it is none the less true that those priests who have learned to discriminate what is false, anti-Christian and anti-social, in the presumptuous pretensions of Rome, suffer terrible mental agony. They feel riveted by heavy chains they know not how to break, and bound by circumstances whose development it is impossible to foresee, to serve a system of whose errors and vices they are only too well convinced. Ah! we need in truth more earnestly than ever to proclaim, in the name of Christ, liberty to the captive and redemption to the oppressed ones.

Who is ready to work for their deliverance? Who, then, will refuse to co-operate in a work whose aim is to "help those who from conscientious motives wish to come out of the Church of Rome into fellowship with evangelical Christians and the holy liberty of the children of God"? Our work is not an aggressive one. We do not seek the priests to induce them to leave the Roman Church, but we wait for them to come to us, and even then we have too much regard for the rights of individual conscience to use moral pressure on those who may still hesitate. We can well understand this hesitation; yet, while sympathising with their sufferings, and giving them all the advice and assistance in our power, we wait until they are themselves convinced of the impossibility of finding in their own church the doctrines of evangelical truth and respect for the Word of God, ere we encourage them to shake off the last prejudices which keep them away from us. This final rupture with Rome is not easy, and we have received from several who have been urged to make it, expressions of feeling showing how their fetters have sunk into their flesh in their efforts to get free.

A PROTESTANT AT HEART.

We are obliged, for obvious reasons, to withhold the names of our correspondents. The following cases are cited:—The priest whom we have called A——, having for domestic reasons postponed his open profession of the Protestant faith, "sighs for the time when he can give public expression to his convictions." Alas! like the young man who said to our Lord, "Suffer me first to go and bury my father," we greatly fear that by continued procrastination he may lose the opportunity of gaining his independence. We extract the following from one of his letters:—

"I am a Protestant at heart: I have long been so, and shall always remain so. In vain have I tried to shut out the light, and struggle against the grace of God. They have penetrated my heart in spite of myself, and destroyed for ever any attachment I may have had from childhood for the Roman Catholic Church. I remain, alas! in that church, but I entreat you to believe that I am only constrained to do so by circumstances. Had I neither father, mother, brother, or sister, or were my relatives wealthy and independent of persecution, I should not hesitate for a moment. I do not dread persecution for myself, but I dread it for my father, weak, and in bondage to the opinion of his village; for my mother, having no really evangelical pastor at hand, who could give her consolation and exhortation; for my poor invalid sister, who could not exist in the midst of troubled surroundings without greatly increased suffering."

We cannot but sympathise with this poor brother, who beholds in front of him a gigantic mountain of difficulty to scale. Nevertheless, his reasoning brings forcibly to our mind our Lord's words: "He that loveth father or mother more than Me is not worthy of Me" (Matt. x. 37). And again, in contrast to St. Paul's decisive action when he tells us, "I conferred not with flesh and blood, but I went" (Gal. i. 16). It is doubtless this which holds captive up to the present time the Abbé F—— in the system of a Church he almost hates. He reads his Bible carefully, knows well the errors of Rome, and it seems to us as if it were impossible that he should not emerge triumphantly from this crisis to which his conscience has brought him. Nevertheless, we can only state with deep regret that the decisive step is not yet taken, and the position becomes increasingly painful. Twice or thrice the Abbé has tried to burst his chains, but the necessary courage has failed him, and he writes as follows:—

"My preparations for departure, and the packing of my goods, gave the alarm about my intentions. My relations were informed, and I had to endure from them remonstrances which well-nigh broke my heart. Again, I yielded to temptation, and you have indeed every right to despise me; I am ashamed of myself. I recoil from a relapse into my former condition, and the exclamation of R—— comes back to me, 'This then is clericalism, which blights both intellect and character!' I am then such a slave as to love my chains, while all the time groaning under their weight. I am humiliated before God and man! Shall I then doubt the Christ to whom I have so often prayed? It seems as if I had widened the abyss between me and freedom? You will doubtless pity me, when you learn that here I am treated as a madman; indeed, there are times when I fancy myself one. Yet I am still a Christian, and repudiate with horror the temptation to believe in nothing, and reject a religion which has

TORTURED TO MARTYRDOM.

No! I still believe in Jesus as my Saviour. I have confidence that He will help me, but I am very low. Pray for me!"

How can we refuse our deep pity for this poor prisoner, from whose cell, as it were, proceed these agonising cries of mental suffering? He has indeed good reason, in spite of all, to trust that Saviour who "will in no wise cast out him that cometh to Him." And we feel convinced that He will come to the help of this poor brother, and strengthen, with his Divine power, his broken and contrite heart.*

EX-PRIESTS.

We must now give a few particulars about some ex-priests, from whom we have recently heard. Others not mentioned here are we have no reason to doubt, doing well, and adorning their profession, in fellowship with other evangelical Christians.

M. J—— is still pastor in Belgium, the Belgian Committee having never had reason to regret the confidence they have placed in his prudence and piety. They report as follows:—"Notwithstanding some hindrances, the church at W—— makes progress, and 86 new members have joined, so that in three years the congregation has increased by 136 members, although many old families have emigrated. The annexe of H——, composed of thirteen families, possesses an ardent missionary spirit. Our ex-priest writes:—

"'Although but quite recently converted to the Gospel, our friends use all their efforts to bring others to our services. They spread around them the light of faith and hope, and that in the face of great difficulties, and amid cold scepticism, fanatical bigotry, and enmity to the Bible, contempt, injury, and harassing persecution. They remain firm in the faith, and strengthen one another by meeting together for prayer and praise, in addition to the meetings I conduct on Sundays and Wednesdays.'"

M. P—— is still a schoolmaster in the West of France, where he has, through the influence of a Protestant Prefect, been appointed to a post of public instruction. We were able to send him a gift in money, to defray his expenses of moving into another Commune. He is now married, and has a young family, and expresses his gratitude as follows:—

"I have just received from your treasurer the gift of —— francs, very acceptable to me. My new post is an improvement on my old one. I have lately seen Pastor B——, and spent two good hours, which seemed to me all too short. I hope to see him often, and get my faith strengthened in the company of this servant of God. He has given me a Family Bible, and a number of tracts to distribute. Let me again express my gratitude for all you have done for me."

(To be concluded.)

* We rejoice to hear, since the above was written, that this priest has decided to leave the Church of Rome.

CEYLON'S GREAT NEED.

DEAR SIR,—In September, 1888, you kindly inserted our appeal on "Ceylon's Great Need," pointing out the openings which existed for work amongst the upper-class women of the Kandian country. That appeal met with a most hearty and liberal response. As a result, we had the joy last October of speeding forth three ladies, who are now in Kandy and already entering on their work. They write most brightly of their surroundings and prospects of usefulness. A suitable house has been taken, which will accommodate twenty pupils, and several girls of high-class families are already entered. Such an undertaking needs continued support. At least £100 is needed this year in addition to what we have already received.

The medical board of the Church Missionary Society have at last sanctioned our own return to Ceylon, and we are looking forward thankfully to the joy of resuming our labours there in the coming autumn. Very earnestly we are longing to find a lady full of the love of Christ and of souls, and possessing, if possible, some medical knowledge, who, at her own charges, would be ready to accompany us, and to join Miss Denyer in her work of itinerating among the Kandian women in the villages. One gifted with a good constitution and physical strength would indeed find it a sphere of most interesting usefulness.

A wave of spiritual blessing has been passing over the island of Ceylon, and there are many indications that we need only men and women sent forth by the Holy Ghost to reap among the natives a rich and abundant harvest. Any further information I shall most gladly give; and if friends would care to see letters and journals from our ladies, I shall be very pleased to send them on application.—Yours sincerely,

(MRS.) FRANCES M. IRELAND JONES,
C.M.S., Ceylon Mission.

THE ROSS BIBLE CARRIAGE is the medium of much good work in scattering Christian literature, and in holding Gospel services in remote country places in the West of England.

In London Slums.

The following incidents of London life form part of a chapter of Rev. H. E. Stone's book, STRANGELY LED: the Personal History and Experience of Arnold Edwards. 2s. Marlborough & Co.

ONE evening as I was wending my way through the street leading from Gray's Inn-road to Field-lane, I saw a notice of an empty brewery to let. The door was open, and I went in. I found it to consist of three stories, each containing a large open room. Upon inquiry I found the rent was not heavy for the size of the building, but I was informed that the public-house must be taken with the brewery. Day after day I found myself thinking of this building. I passed it often, and always turned in if the door was open. I spoke to some friends, and at last, after much negotiation and innumerable delays, secured its occupancy, without the public-house. Much had to be done to render it habitable. The floors were pierced with holes about two inches apart, which gave it the appearance of an exaggerated "cullender." These holes were stopped, seats were made, and at last we opened it for service.

I visited the neighbourhood, found my way into the courts and alleys which abound there, and came into actual contact with the criminal and loafing class. Accompany me, if you will; only be prepared for much that will shock your sense of propriety.

We turn down a court about fifty yards from the old brewery. Walk gently. We are descending a much-worn flight of stone steps, and now we are in the centre of a block of houses (!) running right and left, no thoroughfare either end. Entering the house immediately on our right, and stepping down, we are in the room on the ground floor. In one corner is an old truckle bedstead; straw, naked straw, on the bed. Old sacks serve as a counterpane. Two of the window-panes are broken and stuffed with rags. An old woman, begrimed with dirt, is seated on the only chair. Two children are crawling upon the floor at her feet. On the edge of the bed a much younger woman sits, rocking herself to and fro, with that quiet, desperate "set" of the face so common to this class.

"Are times any better with you, Mrs. A——?" These words we addressed to the younger woman.

"Wus, sir; wus, a deal."

"Why, what's amiss? Anything fresh since Sunday?"

"Bill's in th' 'orspital; took yesterday; and Sal ne'er earned a penny this week."

This woman is a widow; the old woman by the fireplace is her mother. Bill is the eldest boy, who does "odd jobs," holds horses and carries luggage; Sal, the eldest daughter, sells bunches of flowers.

"What happened to Bill?"

"Fell off a ladder an' broke 'is leg; I on'y jest come from th' 'orspital."

"How many weeks are you back with your rent?"

"Two, goin' on three, and he'll turn us out next Monday if he isn't paid, and God knows whe'er it's to come from."

Wan and worn, consumption eating her life, unable to do "washing," though she tries; I have seen this woman often at the hall. Body and soul have been kept together with Bill's earnings and Sal's profits. What are they to do now? In her grief the woman snatches up her youngest child and hugs it to her breast, while a low wailing "Oh!" breaks from her lips.

"Do not worry; we will see to the rent for you," and we pass upstairs.

This room is a copy of the one downstairs, only we miss the bedstead. We see some sacks on the floor; doubtless, these form all the bed they have.

Sitting cross-legged on the floor is a man. Vicious black eyes gleam upon us from a brutal face. Hair, close cropped; clothes, ragged. A woman is ironing some articles of clothing at the table (!), which is a board placed across two boxes. She is a living skeleton. It is positively painful to see her thin arms moving to and fro with her work.

"How do you do? Any work?" and I shake hands with the woman and the man.

He replies, "Ain't none. Bin out all day and hain't seen tail of any."

"I'm hurryin' this 'ere ironin' to get summat to eat," says the woman.

"How long 'll you be?" This from the man to the woman.

The woman sighs wearily. "Not long now, Jim. Ten minutes or more."

The man rises, passes me, goes downstairs.

"He's only waitin' till I been 'ome with these 'ere, and he'll take the browns to the 'tap.'" She lowers her voice. "He's worse nor ever sin' he come out."

Reader, this means that the man is fresh from gaol, that he will make his wife give him the money she so hardly earns, and he will spend it in drink.

"But I would not give it to him," you cry in virtuous indignation. O ye who stand off and philosophise about these matters, how you would alter your speech if you came nearer to them!

He will follow that poor creature to the house when she carries the ironing home, wait until she comes out, then with a gruff "Gie it me," snatch it from her hand, giving her back a penny, maybe, to "get somethin' with." Should she refuse? Ask her. If you are a woman she will show you her breast, blue and yellow. Lifting her ragged skirt she will show you the mark of his boot on her leg, and if you are bold enough she will take your hand, and, lifting her tresses, run it over a scar, which her hair hides from view.

One room more, the top one. What a change! Here a wooden bedstead and a bed, a table, three chairs, and other little pieces of furniture, old, it is true. Two young women are stitching away at some men's clothing. They rise and shake hands as we enter. "We heard your voice below and thought you would be coming up."

"Still at work, I see?" for they are plying their needles. They have no time to sit idle; every moment is something to them.

"Yes, and glad enough to get it, sir."

These girls are needy orphans. They both attend the mission-hall. Mother is dead; they know nothing of their father, he left them seven years since. By dint of dogged perseverance they have maintained themselves; and two more respectable girls it would be hard to find.

Do you ask why they live in such a place? The accommodation is the best they can get, for the rent they can pay. They live unharmed and unmolested, for which, no doubt, their ready acts of kindness to their neighbours partly account, but the chief reason is that they are sincere Christians. Amid what strange surroundings grace can flourish!

Across this court and down another. We push open a door. A candle in the mouth of a bottle is burning on the chimney board. What a fearful smell! Step back for a mouthful of the fresher air outside, then be careful as you step down into the room. Two heaps of straw, one on either side. On the heaps, uncovered, save for their clothing, are two men. They are moaning uneasily, and now and then a thick incoherent sentence escapes their lips. I am about to go nearer, when a woman enters, and taking hold of my arm, she drags me into the court.

"Yer can do 'em no good, Mr. Edwards. They be both ''lirious,' and they be comin' to fetch 'em directly."

I know the woman: who that visits the court does not? but she is sober now. "Why, what is the matter, Eliza?"

"They are both down wi' black typhus. If they was conscious yer might do 'em good. Comin' from the house directly for 'em."

This is in London! Yes, and much more. Cover it? No, *un*cover it. Let the light in. It is the light of the kindness of God's love shining upon these, his creatures, which they need.

WESLEYANS IN MANCHESTER.

OUR Wesleyan Methodist friends are doing a very encouraging work in Manchester and Salford, several mission districts being combined with that of which the Central Hall, Oldham-street, is the interesting rallying point. The area of operations is steadily extending, and the second annual report gives details of great success. The labourers include three ministers, six lay missionaries, and one evangelist.

The congregations at the Gospel meetings are for the most part made up of artizans, domestic servants, the labouring classes, and some of the rougher element from the street corners and lodging-houses. By visitation and other means of investigation, it has been ascertained that at least 75 per cent. are persons unaccustomed to attend a place of worship. Registers are kept of all who profess conversion, and helps to godliness are numerous in connection with the halls. Temperance work is kept well to the front, and it is found that nearly every anxious inquirer wishes at once to sign the pledge against intoxicating drinks. Not only were hundreds of individuals rescued last year, but in some instances public-houses were closed altogether. As in many other places gambling permeates the population at Manchester, war against the vice has become inevitable. An anti-gambling pledge has been issued and largely signed.

Open-air work is carried on all the year round, and no branch of the mission is more successful. The slums are visited, cottage meetings are organised, and the lodging-houses are entered. Moreover, there is a sad call for all the endeavours that are put forth to rescue the fallen, and protect the tempted. Here is one of the incidents, of which the report gives a number:—

"A young man, born of godly parents, fallen by dishonesty, left his home in disgrace; after wandering in quest of work through the provincial towns, shoeless, footsore, without means to obtain food or shelter, he sought our 'hospital for the needy.' We helped and encouraged him, led him back to Christ, and found him partial employment under our own care. After this we secured a situation for him. He began at the lowest level of menial work, and has risen to the sub-managership of a good business in the city. He has since married a Christian young woman, and both delight to return the help received in devoted service to Christ."

Clearly the work of the Manchester and Salford Wesleyan Methodist Mission is a good one. We trust it will continue to be greatly owned of God. The hon. secretary is Rev. Henry J. Pope, Central Buildings, Oldham-street, Manchester.

ALGERIA.—An esteemed correspondent writes to us, reminding visitors of the facilities with which Christian work may be prosecuted in Algeria. On a recent visit he was provided with leaflets in Arabic and French, from the Children's Special Service Mission, and a number of text cards in the same languages, and Hebrew, from Mrs. Grimké. These, and some Gospel portions, he gave away to such Arabs and Jews as were able to read. Almost invariably they were well received, and the uneducated listened to the message as it was read aloud, in café or shop, by the more learned members of the community. He says:—"When one hears of Arabs who have been brought to the Saviour, or aroused to a sense of their need of Him, by means of a Scripture portion, one feels what a privilege it is to have the opportunity of scattering the precious seed in the dark places of the earth."

Believers' Meetings, Dublin.

[JUNE 2—6.]

FOR the exhibition of brotherly love and Christian unity; for a spirit of devotion and the opening up of the hid treasures of the Word of God; and for the manifestation of sympathy in the progress of Christ's kingdom on the earth, the "Believers' Meetings" in Dublin stand second to none of the conferences that are being held at this season all over the country. The influence of these meetings extends far beyond Dublin and Ireland; some speakers and many hearers came from different parts of England and Scotland.

There was a large gathering at the preparatory prayer-meeting on Monday evening, and, although there were no addresses, it was one of the most blessed meetings of the Conference. The spirit of praise and prayer, of humiliation and confession, filled the hearts of the brethren who led us to the Throne of Grace. Major WHITTLE struck a right key-note for the whole Conference by reading a few verses from Luke xxiv.

Tuesday morning was the first of the Conference meetings proper. There was a large attendance. Mr. F. E. MARSH, of Sunderland, presented the special requests for prayer. Mr. WRIGHT, of the Orphan Homes, Bristol, gave the first address on the subject put down on the programme—as the ground of our relationship with Him, in peace and completeness." He pointed out the distinction in the use of the expression, "Righteousness of God," as used in Scripture. It is used (1) in the sense of describing an attribute of God's character; (2) in the sense of imputation, as the ground of our peace with God (Rom. v. 1). This imputed righteousness consists in the transference to the believer of the whole infinite value of the passive and active obedience of Christ, even unto death; just as the whole of the guilt of original sin and all the consequences of the sinner's actual transgression are transferred to Him. "For He hath made Him to be sin for us who knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him" (2 Cor. v. 21). The righteousness we are made in Him is not infused into us any more than the expression, "He hath made Him to be sin for us," means that our sin was infused into Christ, the very idea of which is abhorrent. It is not character that is dealt with in this passage (2 Cor. v. 21), but relationship—the position assigned by God to the sinner who believes in Christ. The infusion of righteousness in our hearts is the work of the Holy Spirit, and is a gradual process. It is faith that links us to Christ's righteousness as to all his fulness. In concluding his powerful address, Mr. Wright compared the expression, "Old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new," with Rev. xxi. 5, where exactly the same words are used: "He that sat upon the throne said, 'Behold, I make all things new.'" A time will come when the outer creation will also be renewed, corresponding to the new inner creation in the believer's heart.

"THE RIGHTEOUSNESS OF GOD:

Dr. MCKILLIAM, of Blackheath, followed with an earnest and stirring address. He said Satan from the beginning had endeavoured to impugn God's perfect righteousness on the one hand, and his perfect love on the other. In the Gospel we see the perfect harmony between grace and truth; between God's perfect righteousness and perfect love. This harmony is brought about by the Cross. Apart from Christ's work, judgment can be the only outcome of righteousness; but to those who believe, the very outcome of God's righteousness is love.

Rev. F. B. MEYER gave the closing address. His subject was "Righteousness: its claims upon us in respect of CHARACTER AND CONDUCT."

There is nothing that the world needs so much to-day as the personal righteousness of those who believe in Christ—that employers should be righteous in paying their employés; that Christian ladies should be righteous in paying their sempstresses, and that righteousness should be the rule in our every-day dealings with our fellow-men. If Christians would only live righteously, we might drop a good deal of our preaching. We must not present one half of truth. Righteousness has its subjective as well as its objective side. God has not saved us that we might go to heaven and sit and sing on banks of roses. Oh! no; it is that we might delight God, and that God might, so to speak, be able to demonstrate to Satan, and to the principalities and powers in the heavenly places, that He can work righteousness and holiness in human hearts. The very purpose for which the grace of God that bringeth salvation hath appeared to us is to teach us "that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world." Mr. Meyer dwelt on Christ's words in Matt. v. 6: "Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled," and mentioned the following conditions under which the Holy Spirit will thus fill our hearts: (1) John vii. 39: As it was dispensationally, so it must be in our individual experience, Jesus must first be glorified—made King—before the Spirit can be given to us in such fulness; (2) Acts v. 32: "The Holy Ghost, whom God hath given to them that obey Him"; (3) Eph. v. 18: Be not filled with anything wherein there is excess. Excess even in things right and innocent in themselves will counter-work the blessed influence of the Holy Spirit; (4) Luke ix. 13: To them that ask; (5) Gal. iii. 14: "That we might receive the promise of the Spirit through faith."

THE BOOK OF JOB.

The Bible-reading from 5 to 6.30 p.m. was conducted by Dr. ELDER CUMMING, of Glasgow, and a very profitable season it was. The Doctor took for his subject the Book of Job. In many respects, he said, it is a remarkable book. (1) It is the only book in the Bible in which a great truth is brought out in the form of a discussion; (2) It is the only book outside the covenant with Israel, except, perhaps, the Book of Esther; (3) It is a book going more deeply than any other into the subject of, (a) Providence, (b) affliction, (c) pantheism. Can we put the spiritual meaning of the book in a sentence? It is the history of a believer in great affliction, tried by God in order to break him down utterly in his self-righteousness, and to lead him into the fulness of life and light.

On Tuesday evening the hall was well filled. Pastor F. E. MARSH, of Sunderland, gave the first address, on "Christ our Substitute." He gave a chain of Scriptures where the words "For us" occur as illustrating the subject. Christ is the God-appointed substitute (Rom. v. 8); the God-approved substitute (Eph. v. 2); has given perfect satisfaction to Divine justice as to our sin (2 Cor. v. 2; Gal. iii. 13); protects from Divine wrath, for He was slain for us (1 Cor. v. 7); brings us into union with Himself (1 Thess. v. 10); gives no unlimited blessing (Rom. viii. 32).

Dr. NEATBY followed with an address describing the sufferings of our Saviour Jesus Christ in a manner which moved many in the vast assembly. The closing address, one of great power, was delivered by Major WHITTLE. His subject was: "The judgment of God upon the impenitent." He dwelt on three points: (1) What sin is; (2) The necessity that sin should be punished; (3) God has no pleasure in the death or punishment of the wicked. It is because people do not know what sin is that their consciences are not aroused as to the necessity for punishment. Their sympathies are with the criminal instead of with the righteous Judge.

THE CHRISTIAN'S WALK.

On Wednesday morning Dr. ELDER CUMMING gave the first address. He took as his text Ps. lxxxix. 15: "Blessed is the people that know the joyful sound: they shall walk, O Lord, in the light of thy countenance;" and connected it with 1 John i. 7, and Gal. v. 25. Those to whom blessedness is ascribed are they who walk in the light of God's countenance; walking then is a picture of the Christian life. (1) Walking means constant progress—there ought to be no standing still for Christians. (2) It means humility—the rich drive in their chariots; only the poor have to tread the dusty road on foot. (3) It means activity: the spiritual life requires exercise. Walking is a defiling process, for the road is dusty.

Walking in the light: what does that mean?—(1) It means walking in knowledge. Only the Christian knows God. What a poor idea the world has of God. (2) It means walking under the searching eye of God; for light makes manifest. (3) It means also that he can see. But there is something still more in the passage; it speaks of walking in the light of God's countenance. That means (1) That God's face is visible. (2) That God's face is not averted from us. (3) That our walk is become pleasing to Him—that there is no breach of communion between us and our God.

Mr. T. B. MILLER, of Barnet, spoke on Rom. iii. 2; 2 Tim. i. 14; and 1 John i. 1, in relation to national prosperity in possessing the Word of God; family prosperity in teaching the Word; and soul prosperity, as we see Jesus in the Word by living in the Spirit.

After earnest supplication for the circulation of the Word of God among Jew and Gentile and for Ireland, Mr. MACVICER gave the closing address, which was full of unction and power. The subject was "The truth of God: subjectively as to our character and testimony." He maintained that God has not put us into a position without being ready to give us the needed grace and help to live according to that position. It is not what we are or are able to do, but what God is able to do in, for, and through us.

The Bible-reading was given by Mr. DAVID BARON, of the Mildmay Mission. From a number of Scriptures he illustrated the subjects of the Conference — Righteousness, Judgment, Truth, and Grace — in God's dealings with Israel. The woful annals of Israel's long-continued sufferings bear witness to the righteous judgment and severity of God; while the nation's existence proclaims God's faithfulness, and the truth of his Word, in which we have the guarantee that not until the sun ceases to be a light by day and the moon and stars for a light by night, will Israel cease to be a nation before God for ever (Jer. xxxi. 35, 36). As to his long-suffering mercy, where do we see it so marvellously brought out as in God's dealing with this rebellious and stiffnecked people, which still He has not cast off, and concerning which He says: "And yet for all that" (in spite of all their great and manifold transgressions) "when they be in the land of their enemies, I will not cast them away, neither will I abhor them to destroy them utterly, and to break my covenant with them, for I am Jehovah their God" (Lev. xxvi. 44). The large audience followed Mr. Baron with rapt attention; after he had spoken for nearly an hour, he was asked to continue for half an hour longer.

The subject of the evening meeting on Wednesday was "Grace: What it teaches believers; its manifestation in our bearing in our homes, in the Church, and in the world."

Mr. J. BARTON, of Dundalk, took as his text Rom. v. 1, 2, and dwelt specially on the second verse, where grace is spoken of as a place. "By whom also we have access by faith into this grace wherein we stand." David says (Ps. xxxi. 8), "Thou hast put my feet in a large room," and truly the grace into which we have access is a large room. It is a magnificent palace. Grace is the outpouring of God's love. We only see now some of its manifestations, but the purpose of it was in God's heart from all eternity.

Pastor W. FULLER GOOCH spoke on the practical results of grace as seen in the believer's life. The knowledge of doctrinal truth, and acquaintance with the prophetic word, are only of value so far as they induce obedience to the will of God and diligence in view of the coming of the Lord. We do well to remember that grace alone can make us practical. The key-word in the New Testament to represent the results of grace is "Fruit." This is often employed by our Lord, as in John xv. 1-10; and in nearly all the Epistles.

Mr. R. J. MAHONY followed with a very suggestive and beautiful closing address. He showed that the chief feature of this dispensation is that

GRACE REIGNS.

In the Old Testament we see some wonderful exhibitions of the grace of God. As for instance, in God's dealings with Israel, or in the story of Lot. But it was not until Jesus rose from the dead and ascended to the right hand of the Father that grace was exalted to the throne of God, to reign supremely until this dispensation of grace shall be ended. Hence the message which is to be taken now to every creature is the Gospel of the grace of God. It was shown that, in spite of the ruin Satan has wrought in the world through sin, God's purposes of grace have not and will not be frustrated, and in the end will triumph.

MISSIONARY DAY.

Thursday was the missionary day, and was perhaps the most blessed day of the Conference. From 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. short reports of Christian work at home and abroad, varying from five minutes to a quarter of an hour, were given by different brethren. Captain O'ROAKE spoke of the work among the bluejackets in the Royal Navy. Until recently there were few signs of spiritual life among the men, but now there is scarcely a ship commissioned in which there are not bright witnesses for Christ. Mr. T. B. MILLER put in an earnest plea for the Deep Sea Fishermen, and described the operations of the Mission among them. Constable WILKINSON, in uniform, and Head-Constable SMITH, spoke of a remarkable work of grace among the City Police and the Irish Constabulary. They expressed gratitude to God for the devoted labours of Miss Fry. Mr. REGINALD RADCLIFFE gave a stirring word about work for God carried on in different Strangers' Rests; and Major WHITTLE spoke of a good work among Italian soldiers which he had witnessed during his recent visit to Rome. Mr. C. INGLIS spoke of his recent visit to America and Canada, and also asked prayer for Miss Macpherson's work in Bird Fair.

A most interesting account of work in Brittany was given by Pastor LECOAT, who related some touching cases of conversions among Roman Catholics. Mr. GILLINGHAM referred to the work carried on in the autumn among the hop-gardens in Kent. Mr. HENRY DYER gave a deeply interesting account of his recent visits to India and Burmah. Mr. MACAULEY spoke of the distribution of the New Testament among the Roman Catholics in the South of Ireland; and Captain BEATH, of Australia, of the work among the Aborigines carried on by Mr. Matthews.

A specially large gathering assembled again at five o'clock to hear an account of God's work among his people Israel from Mr. DAVID BARON, of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews. This was the only meeting at which Mr. George F. Trench (who, with Mr. W. Fry, is the convener and soul of these meetings) was able to preside. We are sorry to learn that he is much out of health. Fresh from his recent long tour in the East, Mr. Baron spoke of the wonderful way by which God led him and his companion, Dr. Dixon, and of the work they have been enabled to do, especially in the way of circulating the New Testament among those who in many cases had not before seen that blessed book. He gave a number of interesting facts in connection with the opening up of Palestine, and the return of the Jews to the land of their fathers. He spoke for an hour and a half, and there was a general feeling that the time was all too short.

In the evening there was the usual praise meeting, led by Mr. CHARLES INGLIS, who read out a great many notes of praise, some being for blessings and answers to prayer received since the beginning of these meetings. Mr. REGINALD RADCLIFFE followed with a heart-searching and rousing appeal for the evangelisation of the world.

At a special meeting of evangelists and Christian workers on Friday morning, addresses were given by Mr. Wright, of Bristol, Mr. J. R. Mahony, Mr. Miller, Mr. Henry Dyer, Mr. David Baron, and Major Whittle.

Letters from France.

III.—EMIGRANTS AND SAILORS AT HAVRE.

OVERLOOKING an important part of the port of Havre stands a tall building, on the top of which the words, "Sailors' Coffee Bar" are inscribed, in letters so large that they can be easily read from vessels coming into port. The building is chiefly interesting as an important witness to temperance and godliness in a district where drinking-shops abound. Sailors find in the bar, not only a great variety of refreshments, but illustrated English papers, draughts, and other games for an evening of innocent enjoyment. In some rooms above the bar Lady Beauchamp has taken up her residence; and here, during our brief stay in Havre, we were hospitably entertained. At night her Ladyship may be found among the sailors in the bar, talking familiarly with them, showing the deepest interest in them, and ever aiming at their conversion to God. We could not but rejoice in such an exhibition of the power of God's grace. The spirit in which she devotes herself to the work may be judged from her reply to one who urged her to "keep her position." "If our Lord had kept his position, what would have become of us?" In his spirit she seeks to do his work of seeking and saving the lost.

Nor is this all her work. Round the corner is the Sailors' Welcome, which provides sleeping accommodation for a large number of sailors. This is skilfully managed by Mr. and Mrs. Lennox, and is an absolute necessity in Havre, if English sailors are to be saved from the dangerous lodging-houses with which the port abounds. Workers from these two places visit the vessels as far as possible, and Gospel tracts are distributed, not only in English, but in fourteen different languages. Besides all this, Lady Beauchamp takes a deep interest in work amongst the Bretons, of whom there are many thousands in Havre, and once a week she goes over to Honfleur to her meeting with the Charbonniers there. We commend her and her helpers to the prayerful sympathy of all Christians.

We saw other kinds of work on Sunday. Our first visit was to the little Wesleyan service. This was held in a small, inconvenient room, situated in an unsuitable locality. It was not easy to find, and when found was not easy of access. We are thankful to know that a better building in a more suitable district is in prospect. The attendance was better than at any English service we had witnessed in France, and Mr. Morgan's lucid and practical exposition of Heb. iv. was much enjoyed. The subject of the priesthood of our Lord is one in which French people need much instruction, and even in our own country it is evidently not much understood; therefore, priestcraft flourishes.

In the afternoon, we had a very brief look into the same room, while a French prayer-meeting was being held. In a district where there was little or nothing to remind us of the Lord's Day, it was delightful to find such a goodly company met together for prayer.

In another part of the town, there is a commodious Wesleyan chapel, where an English service was held in the evening, followed by a good after-meeting. What we saw of the work of Rev. George Whelpton encouraged us greatly. We remember both him and his work with thankfulness and prayer. He is fully alive to the difficulties of the work; but there is an earnest, prayerful spirit among his people, which is itself an assurance of blessing. His missionary had to depart early from the evening service, in order to take a large Breton meeting in another part of the town.

There was a meeting at the Seamen's Mission, of which we resolved to see something before returning home. We found the building occupying a suitable position, and made our way up flights of stairs to the meeting-room. Here we found about sixty persons—mostly English seamen; almost every available seat was occupied. Mr. Street, the earnest and able missionary, was preaching to them on the text, "Jesus only." He stuck to his text, and commended the Saviour to his hearers from a heart that evidently felt the truth he preached.

Our last look was at the Breton service in the Sailors' Home. We were delighted to find more than 100 present, who listened most attentively to addresses given by Miss Bonnycastle and Mr. Morgan. It was a study to watch the faces of some of these people while the simple Gospel message was being delivered.

We retired to rest that night wearied in body, but rejoicing in spirit over the good work we had been permitted to see. The rest of the previous night had been disturbed by sad thoughts of the sin and vice which flourish in Havre. On this Sunday night our thoughts were of a different character. Thank God for such faithful witnesses amidst so much of darkness and sin.

We counted it a privilege to meet for Bible reading and prayer the workers representing these various agencies. Two meetings were held in Lady Beauchamp's room, and on both occasions Rev. Mr. Cheshire, of the Reformed Protestant Church, was present with us.

We would suggest to Christian workers in England that a visit to Havre would be an interesting holiday to them, and would minister encouragement and help to a devoted and earnest band of workers. About 2000 emigrants pass through Havre every week, and Gospels are given away in about twenty languages. Sometimes over 250 English sailors from different parts of the world enter the port in one day. Active young men are needed, who will board each vessel for the Lord's sake. Foreign Gospels or tracts can easily be disposed of without any danger of the field being already occupied. If any Christian would like a little work among the French or the English sailors, Lady Beauchamp has a little house close to the Rest at Honfleur. Address, Lady Beauchamp, 23, Quai Casimir, Delavigne, Havre, France. GEORGE WAINWRIGHT.

FUND FOR THE ASSISTANCE OF LADIES IN REDUCED CIRCUMSTANCES.—Miss Smallwood, of The Lees, Great Malvern, has issued a report of her fourth year's work. By subscriptions and orders for work, help is rendered to many ladies who are suffering real poverty, in most cases brought on by no fault of their own, and very hard to bear by such as once enjoyed the comforts, if not luxuries, of life. Miss Smallwood has some heart-rending cases on the books, and she invites ladies in different parts of the United Kingdom to assist her, either by organising working parties, or by collecting money or receiving orders for articles sold for the benefit of the fund.

WORK AT EPSOM RACES.

THE cordial reception which Mr. Josiah Nix and his mission band received on the Epsom racecourse last year, led him to organise another expedition this year on a somewhat larger scale. On application to the Grand Stand Association, they granted him a site for a large tent close to the racecourse, free of charge. This not only served as the hotel of his company, forty strong, but, as it happened, rain fell so heavily on the Derby day, two or three hundred crowded in for shelter, and so it was made available as a Gospel hall.

During the four days of the races, at every suitable moment, the company took up a position on the racecourse opposite the grand stand, and, with the aid of harmonium, cornet, and violins, the good news of salvation was sung with a will to a wondering and wonderful audience. They received a characteristic welcome as "sky pilots," and before all was over some who heard were constrained to acknowledge that what Mr. Nix and his company had to tell of heaven and earth and sky was the best news they had ever heard. Mr. Gawin Kirkham, of the Open-air Mission, who has visited the racecourse these thirty years, paid Mr. Nix a visit on Derby day, and gave a short address. He was delighted with the new campaign, and he expressed the hope that Mr. Nix would continue to carry it on.

It rained so heavily on Wednesday afternoon, that the tent, which held from 200 to 300, was always filled. This gave Mr. Nix the very opportunity he wanted, and his mission band gladly took turns in telling what God had done for them. One, the grandson of the great prize fighter Bendigo, was able to tell something of his family history, and his personal knowledge of God's goodness. Two were able to tell that it was through Mr. Moody's preaching that they found pardon. Others, who had once visited the racecourse on the Derby day, on a far different errand, testified to the blessing they had received through the West London Mission. Many of those present were drenched to the skin with rain; others were foot weary, but all appeared intensely interested in the recital of histories they little expected to hear on Epsom Downs. Tears were seen on many a face as salvation was proclaimed, and a goodly band made confession that they were tired of the service of Satan, and that they gladly accepted service under a new Master. A telegram was sent to the President of the Council, "God is with us: souls are being saved on Epsom Downs." Much sympathy and goodwill were expressed by gentlemen who came to see what was going on, and some donations were handed in to help expenses.

Mr. Nix is much impressed with the encouragement he has received, and hopes yet to hear of the result of many of the silent messengers that were distributed to both the cream and the scum of the British nation. More than 200,000 leaflets, booklets, and portions of Scripture were given away among the multitudes of people who day by day sought pleasure at the races. The effort required most judicious management; the only opposition that was apparent came in the form of apples and oranges thrown with considerable force from the corner of the grand stand. This only happened during one forenoon, and fortunately no serious injury was done.

Now that Mr. Nix has shown what may be done in such a field as this is, doubtless he will receive not only much material help towards the expenses he has incurred, but some assurance that the Derby week will in future be observed in a similar manner.

BY MR. CHARLES COOK.

Our brethren who were preaching on the Downs last week report a rough time. "Show-out" Sunday, having no fair nor amusements, left the rough element at liberty to molest the preachers. Wednesday was indeed a wet day, but it did not hinder in the early part of the day from speaking on the course. Mr. Kirkham, and a few others with us, had a good hearing before dinner, and in the afternoon the tent pitched by our Wesleyan brethren was filled by persons who were glad of a shelter from the rain.

Friday, the Oaks day, was fine, and as the Open-air Mission had been reinforced by the Jubilee Choir of the City Mission, we were singularly strong, and a vast crowd listened intently to the Gospel in song and sermon. "That hymn has unnerved me—'O Calvary, dark Calvary, where Jesus shed his blood for me'—I don't know what I am doing. I have been an officer in the army; have just run through £4000. Oh, pray for William Stapleton. Good-bye." Such was the testimony of one who, for a living, was selling songs at two a penny.

The number of backsliders we met with was appalling. One well known to me, whom I had often seen busy in the Master's work, had brought his wife to the races, and confessed he had blackslidden. Another of our brethren met the man who was the means of his conversion, and who had left the Lord and was now a bookmaker. Another man, deeply convinced of sin, asked us to pray for himself and his wife. There was a splendid spirit of hearing, and the brethren did their work admirably. I was specially encouraged, as I saw one good brother hard at work, and remembered he was converted in Hyde Park; and heard another—a converted comedian—speaking in the tent of Mr. Nix, tell of his conversion in the Metropolitan Music Hall.

The afternoon of Friday was rough work; one or two drunken men assaulted several of our brethren of the choir, who had grace to turn the other cheek; but the police were obliged to interfere. Good meetings were held in the town each night, and I think our good sister, Miss Alexander, who originated these meetings over thirty years ago, and who still maintains them, was greatly encouraged.

INDIGENT BLIND VISITING SOCIETY.

THE annual meeting of this Society was held in Grosvenor House, last Friday afternoon, Dr. T. R. ARMITAGE presiding. The admission of seventy-seven new cases last year raised the total number of persons now under visitation to 964. Sixty-four persons trained at the classes are employed by the British and Foreign Blind Association, and were able last year to earn over £400 in embossing books. Seventy women are engaged in knitting, &c., and they also are able to realise a considerable amount.

The Chairman said three qualifications are demanded of every teacher: He must be converted; he must have a thorough knowledge of the Scriptures; and he must be endowed with common sense. Every deserving person nominated by a subscriber is elected without canvassing.

Canon BARKER said it must be gratifying to find that Christian benevolence prevented the distressing spectacles of blind crowding the streets of London appealing for alms, as might be witnessed in cities like Constantinople. Rev. F. J. HOBBINS, who had spent twenty-five years of his life in the East of London, testified that by the operations of the Society a great deal of brightness and happiness had been carried into the lives of blind persons in his district. Canon LEIGH said those who could see the pleasant sights around them should give liberally in support of a Society that did so much for the blind. Mr. Gainsford Bruce, Rev. J. L. Brooks, Professor Flower, and Mr. W. J. Armstrong also spoke. A sale of articles, made by the blind, was held in a large adjoining apartment.

Coastguardsmen.—Miss E. M. Jackson, hon. sec. of the Coastguard Mission, Valetta, Coombe-road, Weston-super-Mare, writes in the hope that during the summer holidays many will feel moved to seek out these men, especially in lonely seaside places, and further their spiritual welfare by the distribution of Gospel literature.

Notes from Cambridge.

LAST Sunday was "Hospital Sunday," and collections were made for Addenbroke's Hospital particularly, in the afternoon, at the University Church, when the Archbishop of Canterbury preached. The Archbishop spoke from the words, "If God so loved us, we ought also to love one another" (1 John iv. 11); he urged the duty of the wealthy classes doing more for the poor, and the need of greater sympathy towards the masses in our large towns.

The Social Purity Society is well supported in Cambridge; meetings were held during the winter months in the hall of King's College, over several of which Prof. Macallister, M.D., presided. The late Dr. Lightfoot was much interested in it, and his successor at Durham warmly supports the Society.

Dr. Butler, Master of Trinity, has been elected Vice-Chancellor for a second year.

An interesting work is carried on by Mr. Hart, Fellow of St. John's College. He has a schoolroom, into which he gathers some of the children of a low part of Cambridge, every Sunday morning, for an hour's teaching and hearing God's Word.

EMMANUEL COLLEGE.

During the week this College has a Bible-reading and prayer-meeting combined, held on Thursday evening. The Sunday summer evenings are occupied with an open-air mission at Sturton, a suburb of Cambridge, where some very real work has been done. The Pastoral Aid Society is supported by some of the members of the College, while others have taken up the Army Scripture Readers' Society. The College has no Mission as yet in London, but efforts may be made later on to found one. This College has a peculiarly interesting history. It is styled the "Protestant and Religious Foundation of Emmanuel College," being founded in 1584 for the maintenance of Puritan principles. The charter granted by Elizabeth states that the College was founded "for the propagation of the pure Gospel of Christ." Laud speaks of it as "a nursery of Puritanism." When men left, "for conscience sake," to found New England, Emmanuel sent out a large contingent, among them John Harvard, the founder of Harvard University.

Countess of Huntingdon's Connexion.

REV. J. B. FIGGIS, of Brighton, writes respecting the brief paragraph in our last issue as to a reported union between this Connexion and the Church of England. He says that the recent conference at Lambeth between representatives of the two churches was merely a sequence of the resolution at the Pan Anglican Synod in 1880, inviting co-operation with other communions on the basis of a common faith and order. At the conference there was no concession of principle on either side, but those who represented the Countess of Huntingdon's Connexion expressed readiness to enter into such friendly relations with the Church of England as already exist between them and their fellow Nonconformists.

PRIESTS AND PEOPLE IN BELGIUM.—The conflict between priests and people is becoming very acute in several parts of Belgium, to a large extent consequent upon the energy of the agents of the Belgian Christian Missionary Church. A recent issue of Le Chrétien Belge, the organ of the Society, gives several illustrative incidents. At Bésinne, in the province of Namur, a girl of thirteen was refused absolution because she would not promise to keep away from Protestant meetings. Her parents have since, to the disappointment of the priests, resolved that she shall no more go to the confessional. A woman admitted to her confessor that she was in the habit of hearing the addresses of Protestants. On being told that while persisting in such a course the priest would not give her absolution, she replied, "Well, God Himself will give me absolution," and forthwith left the confessional.

LETTER FROM A MISSIONARY.

BY MISS JENNIE JAY.

I AM told that you would like to hear something about the work for Christ in dark Morocco, and I very gladly send you a letter from that country. It is a hard battle that we are fighting here against sin, ignorance, and superstition. From their infancy the people are taught to believe in the false prophet Mohammed, and only put our Lord Jesus on a level with Abraham and the prophets. The boys go to school, and all the better-class men can read; but the girls are kept at home, and neither taught to read, write, or sew. They are seldom allowed to go out, and, as the houses they live in have no windows, they lead very dreary lives. We visit many of these poor women in their homes, and always receive a kind welcome, but it is difficult to gain their attention. When we speak to them of their souls, they have often said to us, "Go and speak to the men—they will understand what you say; but we are only animals." As they cannot read, we must tell them one by one of Jesus, or they will never hear of Him, and as there are many thousands of them in Tangier and the villages round, you will understand how it is we are always so busy.

Besides the visiting, we have a medical mission open here every day from nine to twelve, and a dear little hospital, in which at present we have twenty patients. I wish you could see them; they are so happy with us, and often tell us it is like heaven. Every day we commence with a Gospel service in Arabic Many have learned the hymns, and now join in them heartily, and all who can read receive Gospels and tracts to take away with them. They often come to us from long distances, and have carried God's Word into many far-off places, which we may never be able to visit. While they are waiting their turn to see the doctor we read and talk to the patients about Jesus. Sometimes they listen gladly; at others are angry at even the mention of his name. The people here are indeed in great darkness, but you will rejoice to hear some have found the true Light. Many, we feel sure, now believe in Jesus, but fear to let others know of it. Some have publicly confessed by baptism that they are his; to do so means persecution, and, possibly, death.

The converts here greatly need the prayer of God's children; will you remember them, and ask that the courage to die for Christ, who died for them, may be given them? Pray, too, for the thousands of dead souls in this poor land. There is a legend which tells of a distant land where there springs from the earth a fountain of purest water, and all who drink from it are healed of whatever diseases they have; but more than this: if but a few drops of it are sprinkled on the earth, wherever it falls a fountain rises, so that all who are healed can carry with them the means of refreshing all around. I am sure you will see the meaning of the story. Who will help to send the Water of Life to those who are dying of thirst in Morocco?—North Africa.

CHRIST AND THE LITTLE ONES.

"The Master has come over Jordan,"
Said Hannah the mother one day;
"He is healing the people who throng Him
With a touch of his finger, they say.

"And now I shall carry the children,
Little Rachel and Samuel and John,
And likewise the baby Esther,
For the Lord to look upon."

The father looked at her kindly,
But he shook his head and smiled:
"Now who but a doting mother
Would think of a thing so wild?

"If the children were tortured by demons,
Or dying of fever, 'twere well;
Or had they the taint of the leper,
Like many in Israel."

"Nay, do not hinder me, Nathan,
I feel such a burden of care;
If I carry it straight to the Master,
Perhaps I shall leave it there.

"If He lay his hand on the children,
My heart will be lighter, I know;
For a blessing for ever and ever
Will follow them as they go."

So over the hills of Judah,
Along by the vine-rows green,
With Esther asleep on her bosom,
And Rachel her brothers between;

'Mong the people who hung on his teaching,
Or waited his touch and his word,
Through the row of proud Pharisees listening,
She pressed to the feet of the Lord.

"Now, why shouldst thou hinder the Master,"
Said Peter, "with children like these?
Seest not how from morning till evening
He teacheth and healeth disease?"

Then Christ said, "Forbid not the children,
Permit them to come unto Me."
And He took in his arms little Esther;
And Rachel He sat on his knee.

And the heavy heart of the mother
Was lifted all earth-care above,
As He laid his hands on the brothers
And blest them with tenderest love.

As He said of the babes in his bosom,
"Of such are the kingdom of heaven."
And strength for all duty and trial,
That hour to her spirit was given.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sun., June 15, Gen. xix. 1—14; Mon., June 16, Gen. xix. 15—29; Tues., June 17, Gen. xxi. 1—13; Wed., June 18, Gen. xxi. 14—34; Thurs., June 19, Gen. xxii. 1—19; Fri., June 20, Gen. xxiii. 1—20; Sat., June 21, Gen. xxiv. 1—16.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.—The twenty-third anniversary of the Central South London Services, Hawkstone Hall, Kennington-road, was held on Tuesday, June 3, when the hall was well filled with children and adults. Helpful and stimulating addresses were given by Messrs. Swinfen, H. Hutchinson, W. R. Moore, and G. Goodman, interspersed with plenty of bright singing. The superintendent (Mr. E. Hughes) reported that services had been held every Sunday and Tuesday evening throughout the year, and had been well attended. It was a matter for deep regret that Mr. Samuel Tyler, who with his brother, Mr. J. S. Tyler, commenced these central services twenty-two years ago, was for the first time unable to be present owing to ill-health, and earnest prayer was offered on his behalf.

BETHEL SANTHAL MISSION.—Dr. Haegert writes, on April 28:—On the 19th instant we laid the foundation of a new mission station—viz., "Bethany," twenty-five miles north of Bethel. The buildings under erection are a church, schoolhouse, and a ward for patients. In March I attended, among others, twenty-six cases of pneumonia, successfully. This month we have had eight cases of typhoid fever. Thank God, none died. In one family we had seven patients last week. On Tuesday, at noon, a change for the better came all round, and most have recovered now.

POOR CHILDREN'S HOLIDAYS.

THE Ragged School Union has now six holiday Homes, and the advantages these offer to children are so much greater than such as can be enjoyed at cottages on the boarding-out system, that the number deserves to be increased. At the outset, the difficulty of clothes had to be confronted; but this has disappeared now that lady volunteers find a congenial recreation in making such garments as the boys and girls require.

An illustration of what is being done in this direction was given on Thursday week, when a number of friends assembled at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Watts, at Chiswick, to see a show of clothes that had been made during the past few months, and to hear statements regarding the holiday movement. Mr. John Kirk, secretary of the Ragged School Union, presided. After a devotional service, Mrs. E. H. Watts explained that she had recently employed the members of her mothers' meeting in making up the garments. Some eighteen or twenty women assembled at the house, and besides their tea there, had received a small sum for their services, all the meetings being so enjoyed that everyone was sorry when they were over. Last year she accompanied a number of ladies to one of the Holiday Homes, when all were delighted with what they saw.

Mr. John Kirk spoke of the Homes. At present some 30,000 children are sent to them each season. He could tell of young men, now prospering in business as changed characters, whose hearts were first influenced in the Homes.

Rev. E. Lorraine, Mr. Charles Montague, Mr. Councillor Orsman, and Mr. Smith, the local evangelist, also spoke in commendation of the work.

American Presbyterians & Temperance

AT the temperance meeting of the Presbyterian Assembly at Saratoga, Dr. I. N. Hayes, the secretary, said the drink question is the great unsolved problem. Every other interest is imperilled by it—family, nation, and missionary work. It will not be restricted or killed. The liquor power sets all laws at defiance, and is one of greed. It is un-American. Of the hundreds of liquor-sellers in Pittsburg, only two are Americans. The money power behind it is mighty. We must stand together on this subject. The open sale of liquor should go, and the children must be educated, and existing laws be enforced. The Church is one grand temperance Society. A Congressional Committee to inquire into the liquor traffic was favoured, and the enactment of a law to counteract the late decision of the Supreme Court on the inter-State traffic.

Dr. Cuyler said: Everyone who loves his country and his kind should labour for the suppression of the liqour traffic at home, in the Congo State in Africa, and in every other part of the world. Turn all the power of the pulpit against the bottle. Shatter the bottle. Teach the children total abstinence, show the dangers of the wine-cup, teach them from the pulpit, teach them in the Sunday-school. Put the temperance pledge in your home and the Church. Save the boys and the girls. The bottle ruins health. Teach this truth: the man who never drinks will never be a drunkard. Dr. Crosby was glad to see no intoxicating liquors at a public dinner he attended in New York. I rejoice with him. Practise abstinence. Educate, educate, educate the people. Practise self-denial. Have a spirit of consecration. Let us give ourselves to the overthrow of the liquor traffic. Thank God for what the women are doing. The skies are brightening. The Church of the living God must do her duty.

Rev. J. B. Gribble, Temora, New South Wales, appeals for a supply of tracts for distribution amongst pioneer settlers in the part of Australia where his work lies. Parcels for him sent to care of Messrs. Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C., during the next fortnight, will be forwarded.

Conferences & Conventions.

THE multiplicity of conferences and conventions seems to be a special feature of this generation, and one of the signs of the times. And truly the times call for them. There is much in the Church, in Christendom, and in the world, that demands the united counsels and prayerful, serious consideration of all those who believe that help and wisdom can come only from above, even from Him who has promised, if we ask, to give liberally and not upbraid; and that the solution of all the difficult problems that confront us is to be found, not in man-invented fancies and speculations to which so many have turned aside, but in the Word of God, that living, ever-speaking oracle in the midst of the Church which is alone able to make us wise unto salvation.

It might be said, and perhaps with truth, that there has not been much in the way of practical result from all these special assemblies—that there is much conferring and little doing; that the responsibility and guilt of the Church are heightened by stopping short at an increased acquaintance with the will of God without a readiness to obey. For instance, after all the light thrown, and information given, and the rousing appeals made at these conferences on behalf of a perishing world—on behalf of God's work among Jew and Gentile—what has been the outcome? Where is the large army of men and women that should have enlisted for the noble work of carrying the Gospel of Christ's love to the regions beyond? The work of the evangelisation of the world is still left in the hands of a few societies whose combined efforts can reach but the smallest fraction of those hundreds of millions who are fast hastening into eternity without even having heard that there is a Saviour who died for sinners. Where are the gifts for the advancement of Christ's kingdom that should have come pouring in from Christians who attend these conventions and consecration meetings, and who acknowledge that all they are and have belongs to the Christ who has bought them with his precious blood? The great missionary agencies are still crippled for want of means, and some of Christ's servants who have left all for the Gospel's sake suffer need.

But although these reflections are true, and although we are in great need of the rousing exhortation given by God through the prophet Haggai: "Now, therefore, thus saith Jehovah of Hosts, Set your hearts on your ways" (Hag. i. 5)—let the matters brought up at these conventions and conferences be more subjects for heart searching and heart application rather than for mere debate or mental speculation — yet we thank God that these special assemblies of God's people in different parts of the United Kingdom have generated and caused to spread many powerful forces for good both in the Church and in the outside world.

First, they are the occasion, and have been the means in God's hand, of breaking down a good deal of the evil spirit of sectarianism. They are representative assemblies recognising the unity of the Spirit. Brethren and sisters in the Lord, laying aside their denominationalism, at any rate for the time being, meet on one common platform and declare to one another that, in spite of all partitions set up by man, there is one Church, one body of Christ, just as its Divine Head is one. It gives the world, too, an object-lesson in Christian unity. This is no small result in itself. And although the more tangible results in relation to the world's great need have not been as great as we might have wished, we thank God that these conferences have given a stimulus to the work of God among Jew and Gentile, and that many have at such assemblies first heard the call to enlist in the great work of the world's evangelisation.

TURKISH MISSIONS AID SOCIETY.

THE promotion of evangelical missions in Bible lands occupied the attention of Friday afternoon's meeting in Exeter Hall. After Rev. Dr. T. W. BROWN, secretary, had read from the report a few particulars of Christian enterprise in Greece, European Turkey, Constantinople, Asia Minor, Persia, Syria, and Egypt, Lord KINNAIRD, chairman, bore testimony to the need of the Society, and defended the principle of aiding those who already occupy parts of the Eastern mission field, doing educational work in faith for spiritual results.

Rev. Dr. MONRO GIBSON said the mode of work is not only good, but the absence of rivalry indicates a principle worthy to be more widely acted upon. The report was the most cheering and engrossing that had fallen into his hands for years. He had seen and could bear independent testimony to some of the work. He had only time to speak of the important city of Beyrout. Here the missionary's brother had such faith in the work that he built, at his own expense, a large separate Sunday-school. When Mr. Dale, the missionary, took home a bride, they were welcomed by six hundred natives, and when he had occasion to lament the absence of a Christian cemetery, he was offered a piece of ground in the Greek one. A hospital erected by the Knights of St. John was handed over to the missionaries. There was a printing office from which Scriptures and general literature issued in large quantities. The Protestant College would be no disgrace to Oxford or Cambridge. The magnificent home of Dr. Bliss, Principal of the College, being a gift, had not cost a penny of missionary money; but it suggested how some criticisms come about. At an optional religious meeting, 175 students assembled to listen to Dr. Gibson.

Rev. W. SPENSLEY regarded the work as an important illustration in a strange land of the essential oneness underlying all the work of different Protestant churches. He thought the report when read would have a reflex spiritual influence at home. Rev. W. ROBERTS believed that if European missionaries were in the place of Americans, they would provoke Turkish jealousy. Rev. Dr. EDMOND considered it harder to evangelise Mohammedans than South Sea islanders; but the former field was more hopeful than the latter.

Rev. JAMES NEIL had lived and laboured in Palestine, and found that Americans possess the practical wisdom which is required in regard to missionaries intended for work among cultured races. It is well to help struggling missions that follow Christ's example in taking material advantages to the people, providing good schools and medical skill as well as the blessings of God's Word. As the Jews continue to hasten back to their own land, how important it is to second the efforts of men who are ready to remove by Gospel light the hindrances which are found in the superstitions of the land.

NORTH CAMP, ALDERSHOT.—The Town Hall has been taken and opened as a mission hall. Although the work has only recently begun, we have had tokens of good. There are three infantry regiments and artillery in North Camp, besides a large civilian population. Gospel meetings are held, Bible-classes, Sunday-school, and Band of Hope. I shall be grateful for tracts, Gospel books, or any assistance that friends may render.

CONFIDENCE IN GOD.

See the spider casting out her film to the gale—she feels persuaded that somewhere or other it will adhere and form the commencement of her web. "CLEANSE THOU ME FROM SECRET FAULTS."

That word which David did so much commend, he did commend from an experimental efficacy; he had found it to be a righteous, and holy, and pure, and discovering word, laying open not only visible and gross transgressions, but also, like the light of the sun, those otherwise unobserved and sacred atoms of senses flying within the house: I mean in the sacred chamber of the soul.

The law of the Lord is so holy that forgiveness must be prayed for, even for hidden sins.

THE WORLD' SNEED.

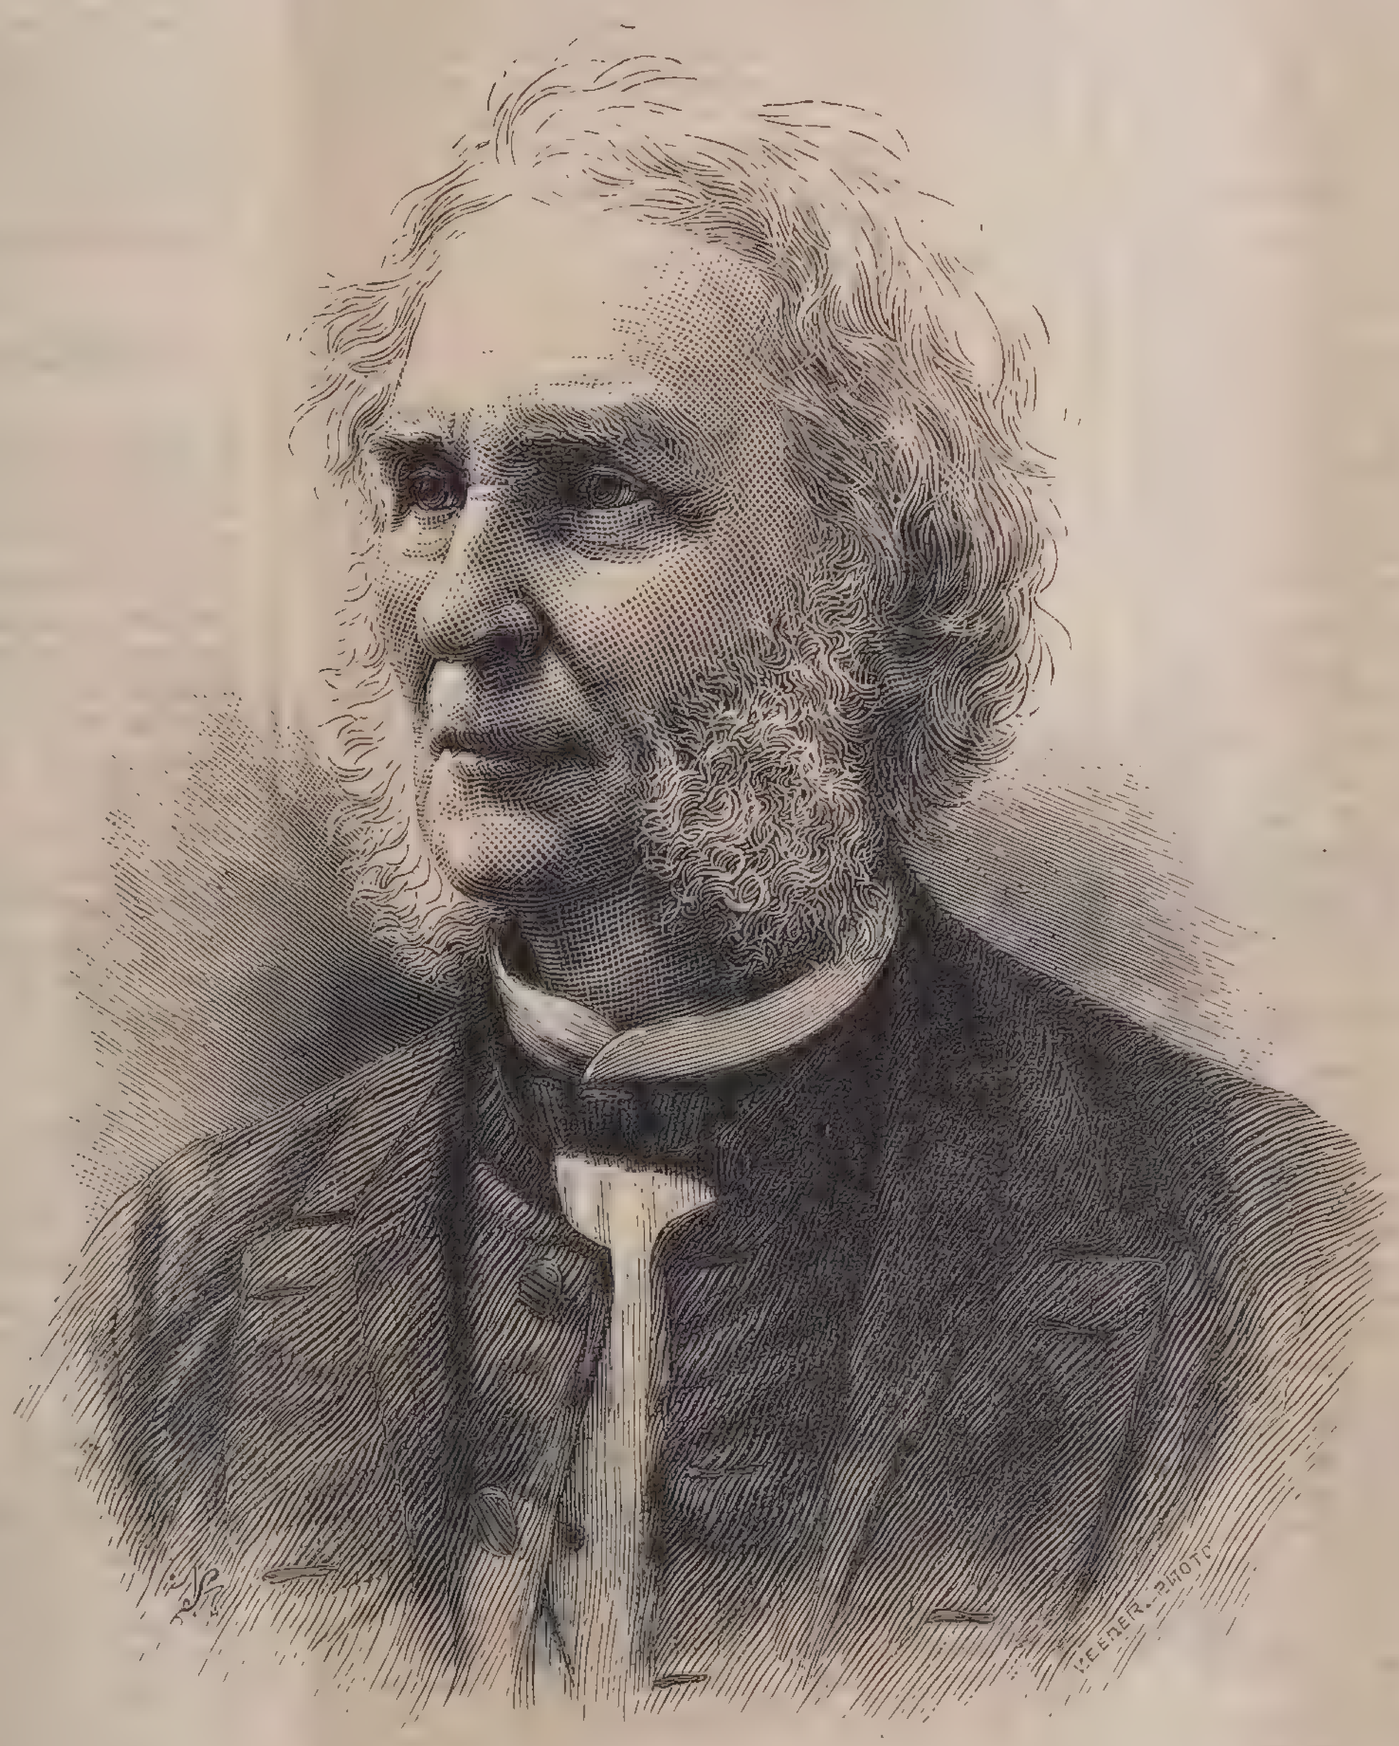
There are two departments in soul-saving; the Scriptures recognise them both: "And He gave some evangelists, and some pastors and teachers." The former office antedates the latter. In the one, the worker must know how to diagnose and battle successfully with deadly disease itself; in the other, after the malady is broken, he must know how to treat convalescents and bring them on without relapse towards perfect health. The masses of unconverted are the dead and dying; the churches contain convalescents. The great demand of the churches is for pastors; the great need of the dead and dying is evangelists. For every pastor that is called for, ten evangelists are needed in the field at large. Christian lands may be suffering for want of pastors; but heathen lands and neglected places in our land are dying for want of evangelists.

Rev. W. Ashmore, D.D.

THE HON. NEAL DOW,

Originator of the Maine Liquor Law.

AS a comparatively new country, North America has been the battle-ground of many and varied experiments in social reform. The absence of prejudice, and of objection to change arising from the deeply rooted customs of older nations, has been a favouring element in the case. In combating the evils of the drink traffic, especially, the United States have provided many valuable object-lessons for the world. In that determined struggle, the State of Maine, which lies nearest to the Old World, has shown the way. "The Maine Liquor Law" was the precursor of many movements for the legal repression of the drink curse, and the chief agent in the framing and passing of that law was Mr. NEAL DOW, whose portrait we give to-day. At a time when our own land is in the throes of a conflict with the giant demon alcohol, it may be interesting and instructive to review, in brief, the life history of one who ranks so high in the list of temperance champions and reformers.



Mr. Neal Dow is nearly as old as the century, having been born in March, 1804. He is a native of the city of Portland; his father was an industrious member of the Society of Friends, who carried on the business of a tanner. The son Neal followed the same occupation, and in doing so he had many opportunities of observing the results of the drink among the industrial population around him. His youthful heart was very deeply stirred, and he enrolled himself in the ranks of the militant abstainers. The strong convictions he had formed were strenghtened by his experiences in the direction of an almshouse and a house of correction, and he resolved to give his best attention to the removal, so far as he could, of the social canker that was eating so deeply into the heart of the community.

From an examination of the question, especially in its legal bearings and aspects, he came to the conclusion that it was wrong to sustain, by the sanction of law, a system that had done and was doing so much to impede the prosperity of the people, and to bring about their ruin. In the words of a historian of The Maine Liquor Law:—

> He saw that the legislatures of many of the States, as also the Governments of Europe had, time after time, devised plans and enacted laws for the regulation of the liquor traffic; and as drunkenness, in spite of legal enactment on the one hand and persuasive appeals on the other, still continued to increase and to fill the world with misery and woe, it was natural for his practical mind to conceive the idea of the total prohibition of the liquor traffic by legal enactment.

To the realisation of this idea Mr. Dow devoted himself heart and soul, and with such success that his name and achievements must ever be a tower of strength to those who do battle with the great and deadly evils of their time. But the fight was long, and there were many repulses before partial victory could be written on the banner of prohibition. Mr. Dow began his advocacy of the principle in 1839 before the Board of Aldermen in Portland. The question of licence or no licence was submitted to popular vote in the city, but in the first instance without success. Shortly after, the famous "Washingtonian" reform sprang into being, and its aid was invoked. Mr. Dow visited every part of the State, rousing the dormant or half-hearted public opinion; and this he did with so much effect that in 1843 the authorities of Portland refused to grant any new licences for the sale of intoxicating liquor. Mr. Dow's next step was to secure a municipal regulation declaring the traffic illegal. That point was also referred to the people for decision, and this time prohibition won the day. From the vantage ground thus gained, the indefatigable reformer pushed on the attack; by public petition and by personal speech he sought to secure the assent of the State legislature to the prohibition principle. He was successful in the House of Representatives, but failed in the Senate. The fight went on throughout the State year after year, Mr. Dow putting forth almost superhuman efforts to influence his fellow citizens on behalf of repression. In 1846 he saw the fruit of his toil and devotion, in the passing of a Bill through both Houses abolishing the licence system, and forbidding the public sale of intoxicants.

This law produced good results, but was defective in some respects, and it was evaded in various ways. The liquor sellers, whose baneful occupation was placed in such jeopardy, were most unscrupulous in their opposition, and it required no small courage to take a prominent part in the agitation. Mr. Dow, however, by the display of wonderful zeal and calmness of demeanour, was able to encourage his helpers, and passed through the civic strife unharmed. An attempt was made to get the law repealed, but it ignominiously failed. A more stringent measure of prohibition was introduced, and passed in both houses in 1849, but was vetoed by the Governor.

Nothing daunted, Mr. Dow drafted another measure, which was only lost in the Upper House by a tie vote. This bill was the same as that passed the following year as "The Maine Liquor Law." In the early part of that year he was elected Mayor of Portland, and was able to appear before the legislature, not only as an advocate of reform, but as the elected head of the chief city in the State. His Bill was carried with acclamation; and through good and evil report it has remained on the statute books of Maine as the deliberate judgment of the people on the question of prohibition.

The arduous and unsparing labours of Mr. Dow on behalf of the highest interests of mankind were widely appreciated and recognised, and his services were in great demand in other parts of the Union. How much he has helped on the cause of temperance throughout the world it would be impossible to estimate. In 1855 he was again elected Mayor of Portland, and through his official position was enabled, as before, to see that the law was faithfully applied. In 1857 he visited England, where he was very warmly received, and where his powerful voice was raised, up and down the land, in favour of temperance principles, and the legal repression of a trade that works such havoc in all sections of the community. During the great Civil War he was appointed to military office, and had his full share in that sanguinary conflict. He only consented to take an active part in it on the understanding that he was working for the freedom of the slave; and in this respect, also, he saw the realisation of his wishes. During the war he was taken prisoner by a stratagem, and had to bear eight months' confinement in Lubby prison at Richmond before an exchange was effected. Since the war he has been as active in the promotion of his life-work as growing years and circumstances would allow. It was hoped that he would pay another visit to England last year, and his plans had been made, but failing health rendered them impossible of accomplishment. As he is now eighty-six years of age it is unlikely that we on this side shall ever see the doughty old warrior in the flesh. But surely his undying zeal, and his priceless services on behalf of the race, will ever remain as a bright memory and an inspiration to those who come after him. Many have taken up the struggle which he has waged so long and so ardently, but none who have shown greater devotion or courage against unequal odds. His life shows what can be achieved by one man who is whole-hearted, and who unswervingly believes that God and right are on his side. Would that we had many such men in these days of abounding indifference and iniquity.

There have been many criticisms on the working and on the efficacy of the Maine Law; and the question is often asked as to whether Prohibition does really prohibit. No better answer to such questions could be found than in the words of Mr. Neal Dow himself, in an article contributed to The Alliance News, as late as November last. After describing the social condition of the State of Maine as brought about by the prevailing evils of the drink, he says:—

The Maine Law came and let in the sunshine upon this dark and gloomy picture. How did it come? Not with banners and trumpets and loud huzzahs, but with long, patient labour among the people. In their little country meeting-houses, their town houses, their school-houses, in their larger barns, in their shady groves, we met them with their wives and sons and daughters, and laid out before them plainly the relation of drink and the drink traffic to their good and to the general welfare. This work was patiently continued for many years, until these people saw clearly that the grog-shops were a curse to them, putting them down and keeping them down, them and their children after them; unless emancipation should come; and that this could come only by letting their wish and their will be known through the ballot-box. This they did, and lo! the sun of deliverance burst through the heavy clouds which seemed to shut heaven against them.

Every distillery and every brewery was hermetically shut. No more West India rum came into the States—not even one puncheon. Nineteen-twentieths of the liquor traffic was speedily extinguished. To-day more than three-fourths of our territory, containing more than three-fourths of our people, is practically free from the liquor traffic, so that an entire generation has grown up there, never having seen a grog-shop or a drunkard. Our State saves annually, directly and indirectly, more than twenty-four million dollars, which, but for Prohibition, would be spent, lost, wasted in drink.

The manners and habits of the people as a whole in the matter of drink are entirely changed. There is no longer "drink" at public gatherings of the people. We have annually many very large agricultural and mechanical fairs and expositions, but never drink. We have many public dinners, but drink never forms part of the menu. The President of the United States and members of his cabinet are entertained at dinners, public and private, but "drink" is never even thought of. An English gentleman said on one of these occasions: "I do not see how you can get on without wine." The reply was: "Why should educated and intelligent men need intoxicants at an entertainment?"

The liquor traffic yet lingers in our cities and larger towns, upon a small scale and on the sly. This is not at all the fault of Prohibition as a public policy, but is solely due to certain defects in the law, which will be corrected by and by.

The whole face of the State has been entirely changed for the better. Before the Maine Law, signs of poverty and unthrift were seen everywhere about the State: signs of thrift and prosperity very few, if anywhere. Now there is indication of intelligent and active industry—thrift and prosperity everywhere, while no sign of unthrift is seen anywhere. Nothing is presented to the eye of the observer which does not indicate enterprise, activity, and prosperity among the people.

In 1884 we had a popular vote in this State on a proposition to add to our Constitution an Amendment prohibiting the manufacture, sale, and keeping for sale, of intoxicating liquors. We had already an experience of thirty-three years of the benefits of that policy, and the result of the vote was an affirmative majority of 47,075, being three times larger than the negative. This result ought to be accepted by all unprejudiced and disinterested persons, as conclusive that Prohibition is a good thing, and not a measure bad, or of doubtful utility, as many people suppose it to be.

Would that some God-sent and God-equipped man, or men, would arise in our midst to bring about like results throughout Old England. If it can be done on "the other side," why not on this?

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE CONVENTION.—After much prayer and counsel the way has been opened in this city to hold a Convention for the deepening of the spiritual life, on October 28, 29, and 30. The circus, which holds some three thousand people, has been secured, and everything points to a successful Convention. The following friends have promised to attend:—Revs. Evan H. Hopkins, F. B. Meyer, J. T. Butlin, Dr. Elder Cumming, J. Gelson Gregson, and Mr. Robert Wilson (Carlisle). United conferences of ministers and others are being held to make arrangements.

THE BRIGHTON MEDICAL MISSION is situated in the midst of the densest and poorest population of this great town. Dr. Prankerd regularly ministers to the physical and spiritual wants of those who gather at the Hall. Other friends help in a Sunday-school, evening services, temperance and mothers' meetings, and Bible-readings. There were four thousand attendances at the Hall last year; the doctor paid 2000 visits, and Miss Good, the Mission nurse, paid 2700 visits to patients at home. Dr. Prankerd gives attendance also at the Connaught Institute. Last year the committee were only able to give the medical missionary £178 instead of £200, his usual salary, and the state of the funds this year threatens a still larger deficit, so that the friends appeal for help. Major-Gen. D. Hoste, 23, Sussex-square, is hon. treasurer.

SEAMEN AT CONSTANTINOPLE.

The Rest for seamen which Miss Green Armytage opened about five years ago at Constantinople, has proved a great blessing. Many a sailor on landing for a "look round" has been enticed into dens of sin, and before being fully aware of it, come under the power of the agents of the devil. The Rest is situated close to the British shipping offices, so that sailors are almost bound to see it. Gospel meetings are held every evening.

Ships simply calling for orders and discharging their cargoes in the stream, and so not coming into port, are visited by the ladies of the Mission, or their boatman. A hearty reception is invariably accorded, the sailors declaring that they do not know what they would do without the books and papers which are so kindly distributed. The boatman fetches the men who are otherwise unable to get ashore to attend meetings, and takes them back again afterwards.

One of the workers writes:—"A few years ago, by the help of some kind friends in England, Miss Green Armytage was enabled to purchase a boat, which, though a good one, was not new; and now, after a great deal of hard work, it is past further repairs. The need therefore for a new one is great."

MISSION-HALLS FOR LONDON.

A very interesting réunion took place at 4, Trafalgar-square, Charing Cross, on the evening of Tuesday, June 3, when the Committee and supporters of the Ragged Church and Chapel Union celebrated another anniversary under the chairmanship of Major John Smith. This Society is a memorial of the late Earl of Shaftesbury. The aim of its founder was to provide mission-halls for the exclusive use of the destitute poor of the Metropolis, some of whom will not, and many of whom cannot, for want of decent clothing, attend regular places of worship. More than one hundred of these extemporised sanctuaries have been called into existence, and in them the pure Gospel is preached by unpaid evangelists. The basis is unsectarian, and the success of the movement is undoubted. Other agencies have arisen since 1853, but the distinctive claim of this Society to special recognition is unimpeached and unimpaired. The work done is well done by earnest men who have at heart the spiritual well-being of the outcast poor.

In the report read by the hon. sec., Rev. Burman Cassin, the claims of London were powerfully pleaded, and instances of saving results were supplied. Rev. Dr. Tyler, one of the original promoters, being too ill to attend, sent a cheery note and forwarded a welcome cheque. The income is less than £250 per annum, and therefore totally inadequate to the end contemplated. The chairman spoke well, and was followed by brethren intimately conversant with the work. Among those who took part in the proceedings were Revs. R. W. Allen, W. Frith, J. S. Stanion, W. A. Blake (secretary), Messrs. John Kirk, R. J. Curtis, W. Bramston, and Major Evered Poole. A delightful tone pervaded the gathering.

WALTON-ON-THE-NAZE.—Mrs. R. H. Moore, of the Home of Rest, has had it laid upon her heart to do something for the young fishermen who have been in the habit of dividing their leisure between the public-houses and the corners of the streets. Together with her daughter, she has organised Gospel temperance meetings, which have been well attended, and as a result of which a goodly number of the men have signed the pledge. Mrs. Moore writes to us: "We have seen suitable premises for reading and recreation rooms, and for Gospel temperance meetings. The sum of £100 will enable us to furnish and pay the rent for one year. We shall be glad of good temperance literature." Mrs. Moore's address is 102, Regent's Park-road, London, N.W.

Visiting Russian Prisons.

I.—ST. PETERSBURG.

Leaving Berlin, a journey of eighteen hours brought us to the frontier town of Wirballan, in Russia, where all passports were rigorously examined, and whither, after an hour or more of delay, we proceeded. The traveller at once sees he is in a different country; the well-dressed and tidy peasant of Germany has given place to the signal-woman without shoes and stockings; the red-tiled houses and trim gardens of Prussia are exchanged for the dirty grey log huts which form a Russian village, and which I at first took to be so many cattle-houses. Instead of landscape made up of hill and dale, rivulet and valley, and the tilled fields of a contented people, there is simply a clearing in the interminable forests of trees along which the lines of rail run from the frontier to St. Petersburg, with here and there a sight of open flat country with the unpicturesque villages above described, but with hardly a man or woman to be seen for miles together. Nature seems to have dealt hardly with the Russian peasant, there being nearly eight months of winter. Certainly the authorities who rule him deal hardly with him, and yet he takes it with true Eastern indifference, for I know no people who are capable of enduring so much hardness and suffering as the Russians. "Oh, it is nothing," is the expression you often hear.

St. Petersburg was reached after forty-three hours of travelling. My object was twofold. I wished to distribute the Word of God among the prisoners in Russia; but I also desired to find out by investigation whether the reports as to in some of the prisons were true. If one quarter of what we have recently heard were true, surely there is need for something to be done; and there was more likelihood of getting at the truth in Russia than in England. For the present I desire only to speak of the work I was permitted to do in the prisons by preaching the Gospel, and by the distribution of the Word of God.

My first step was to obtain permission from the authorities to visit the gaols. As so many disclosures had recently been made, friends both in England and Russia prophesied failure; but M. Galkine Wrasskey, the head of the exile system, on my producing my credentials from other Governments, at once gave me permission "to visit the prisons, to speak to the prisoners, and to give away copies of Holy Writ." This was more than I had even asked for, and I praised the Lord for his guidance and his blessing. Our beloved brother, Dr. Baedeker, had arrived in the city the day before, and went with me to the official I have named. The following day, accompanied by a Russian lady, who interpreted for us, and whose carriage we filled with Testaments, we began

OUR PRISON VISITATION.

Visiting first the large Litofsky prison, we were taken round by the Governor. Here I would like to say that I have never met with kinder officials than I have met in the prisons of Russia. They seem to have as much interest in the men as ourselves. "It does our hearts good to see you come and visit our men and give them these books," said the Governor of one prison. I am aware that many of the sufferings of the exiles in Siberia are due to corrupt officials; that invariably an honest and conscientious governor has to leave the position, as his life is made intolerable, and he is suspected by the St. Petersburg authorities of favouring the prisoners. I can only say from my own experience that those I have met with were good specimens of prison officials, who were not acting a part to deceive us; for I noticed how the very prisoners themselves were pleased with the company of the man who had to rule them. The matron accompanied us to the ward of the habitual criminals in the women's department, and the hard faces told of a life of sin and sorrow.

None of the inmates were provided with the Word of God, and when we had given Testaments to all who could read (75 per cent.), Dr. Baedeker and I spoke to them of "Jesus and his love." These poor people, who had never heard of such love, and who experienced very little of any sort of love, sobbed and wept till the hardened countenances were softened. It seemed as though the tears had worn all the hard lines away, and the story of grace had awakened hope where all seemed dead, and thoughts of a new life, brighter and sweeter and purer, was dawning on their souls. We left them reluctantly, they thanking us as we went, and we, thanking God for the power of the "old, old story" which could soften such hearts and bring tears from the eyes of habitual criminals.

Accompanied by the Governor we visited all the wards and departments — work being stopped for the time—while all heard the Gospel of the grace of God fully and freely preached, and the prisoners were all supplied with a copy of the New Testament. The Governor had kept one copy, which he said he wanted to give to "a very bad man," and whom, he said, "he wanted us to see and talk to." He said the man had had recently killed a father, mother, and daughter, and had drunk their blood, which, according to their custom, such men say "makes them strong"; since he had been brought to this prison he had killed a fellow prisoner. We entered the cell where he was, spoke to him of his awful crimes; told him that every man he had stabbed had been a stab in his own breast; and then spoke to him of the love of the Saviour, who prayed for his murderers, and who, having died for such as he, loved sinners, and was desirous of saving the worst.

The love of Christ seemed to break this poor criminal down, he softened and listened, till presently the tears began to fall; at last he broke down and wished to confess to us, but we told him that he must go straight to God and confess to Him. Dr. Baedeker read to him the story of the Prodigal Son, and after an interview of over an hour which was closed with prayer, we left him, after putting into his hands a copy of the Word of God.

This was one day's work, and a sample of what followed; for the next day we went to another large prison and did similar work. How eagerly they listened, how gladly they took the books which we gave them. Truly, as one said, "It is easy work to feed the hungry."

My thanks are due to the members of the English-American Church, who were most kind to me. I was enabled to preach there on three Sundays, and would here like to speak of the good work they are doing in St. Petersburg. The hospitality I received, the assistance I experienced, and the help given to me by our English friends, I cannot be too thankful for; specially am I grateful to Mrs. Robertson, secretary of the Society for the Free Distribution of the Scriptures. I was enabled, also, to do a little quiet work in distributing the Word among the droskymen, who cheerfully accepted the books given them.

Of the prisons themselves I cannot complain; they are far better than others I have visited in Europe, and if those in Siberia were as well kept and managed, there could not have been the outcry which has so startled the civilised world.

LET HIM SHARE ALL.

Filled with anxiety
And pressed with heavy care,
I brought my load to God
For Him to bear.

Tenderly He lifted
The care that did annoy;
Instead of mourning, gave
The oil of joy.

But, lo! the joy just given
Began to fade away
Like Jonah's gourd, a thing
Of but a day.

So to the Lord I went,
And asked the reason why
This joy, that He had given,
So soon should die.

Then, answering, He said,
"Thou broughtest Me thy care,
But didst not bring the joy
For Me to share."

With tears of penitence,
"Forgive," I cried,
"Henceforth both cares and joys
We will divide."

OPENINGS IN SYRIA.

Dear Sir,—Will you allow me to appeal to your readers for help and workers for Syria, where there are great openings for work both in schools and among the women, who are most accessible and anxious to be taught. Seeing the great need, I was induced to go out there some years since, at my own expense, and begin work in one of the largest of the Lebanon villages. The Lord raised up faithful native teachers to help me. We began in a very small way. Then, as we became known, we were pressed to open a boarding-school. This has prospered beyond our most sanguine expectations, in the numbers who are anxious to come, the progress the children have made in their studies, and the spiritual results.

Finding how much suffering was caused among the women and children through the want of medical advice, we sought to do what we could for them. This has led to our opening a dispensary two days in each week; it was attended last year by 472 patients, most of whom were greatly benefited by the treatment received. We have gathered the women into Bible-classes, and have formed a branch of the Bible and Prayer Union. We have now about eighty who are regularly reading with us. We have also a Young Women's Christian Association for those who are decided Christians. As the work increases, I find it more than one lady can carry on, so I have come to England to seek for a fellow helper who would come out at her own expense, and devote herself to the work as I am doing. We have gained the good will of the inhabitants, and can promise a hearty welcome and ample opportunities for work.

Our school is beautifully situated, on one of the spurs of Lebanon, commanding a fine view of the sea and only a short distance from Beyrout. The climate is most healthy and agreeable; living and house rent are reasonable; so that money will go further than in England. A helper could live with me, so there would not be the expense of a double establishment. I feel sure the other workers in Syria will be ready to hold out to her the right hand of Christian fellowship, as they have done to me. Will not some to whom the Lord has given a willing mind, and desire for foreign mission work, come and help us?—Yours obediently, Louisa Procter.

THE EMIGRANTS' HOME, BLACKWALL.—An emigrant detained for a time at this Home speaks in very high terms of the good work being done. "From the present party I can count from thirty-five to forty who have within the last three or four days, and in this Home, decided for Christ, and converts are coming over to the Lord's side night by night. This, I believe, is a fair sample of the work being done among each party as they pass through the Home."

SUPPRESSION of the OPIUM TRADE.

THE annual meeting of the Society for the Suppression of the Opium Trade was held in Exeter Hall on Tuesday evening last week. Unfortunately the subject does not so weigh on the public conscience as to occasion widespread interest, to say nothing of enthusiasm. Yet there was a goodly attendance of earnest friends of the cause, which the several speakers showed to be essentially righteous from a Christian point of view, as well as highly important in its various political bearings.

Mr. J. G. ALEXANDER, Secretary, read a report which showed that the Committee had been very busy during the year. Dealing with the need for suppression in India, it stated that throughout British India no fewer than 19,395 licences for the sale of opium and other narcotics were in force for the year 1888-9. Of these, 8827 were for opium, exclusive of the two provinces of Bombay and Berar, the returns for which do not distinguish between the different drugs. Figures such as these, admitted by the Government itself, show how great is the need for prompt action, unless the opium scourge is to be permitted to extend its ravages through our own vast Eastern Dependency, as it has already devastated China and the Dutch East Indies.

Mr. ARTHUR PEASE, who presided, called attention to the disgrace of a Christian people receiving revenue from that which causes widespread degradation among our fellow subjects. Mr. MARK J. STEWART, M.P., told the sad story of the Chinese opium traffic, with its incidental wars and attendant evils.

Canon WILBERFORCE, who has recently visited India, testified to what his eyes had seen. At the outset, he claimed that the part of the true patriot is not to condone his nation's vices, or to shut his lips when he knows that she is filling her national exchequer by the demoralisation of her people; but to speak fairly and squarely of her sins; and, if possible, make her do her duty, so that she may render it easy for her people to do right, and difficult for them to do wrong. He said he had been half stifled in the opium dens of the great cities, and as he had staggered out of the ganjah shops. He had seen in one den eighty or a hundred human beings in every stage of opium intoxication; and, when speaking to the victims through interpretation, he in every case received the reply, "Would God someone from us." People are slowly poisoned to raise a revenue. By whom? He would not say by the Indian Administration, by the Governor's Court at Calcutta, or by the Parliament of Great Britain; but by ourselves, because we are the ultimate factors of everything that is done in Great Britain for the Empire at large.

God gave us India that we might give it the Gospel. How have we discharged our responsibility? We have unquestionably administered the land justly, kindly, patiently, and in a way calculated to make them think kindly of our rule. We have given them unspeakable boons —BUT we have lowered their standard of morals and placed ourselves in the position of tempter to the population. There was no native ruler in days before our conquest, who made an income out of the vices of his people. The eating of opium existed, yet not because of, but rather in spite of, that which was highest in the religions of the country. We have so acted that the people cannot help seeing that whatever may be our standard of integrity, we consider finance first and morality second.

Answering the question, "Am I my brother's keeper?" the Canon said: Even if India did not belong to us, we should have to say "Yes" to this question. By virtue of the solidarity of the race, revealed to us in Christ Jesus, we each stand in the position of being our brother's keeper; also because God hath made of one blood all nations of men. Not only ought we to fight the licensed liquor traffic in England, but the opium trade in India.

Mr. FREDERICK SESSIONS, of Gloucester, who lately visited India, also spoke. Resolutions were passed (1) in favour of the Government of India being directed to use the absolute discretion conferred on it in the Indian Opium Act of 1878, by closing the licensed dens, and adopting measures to limit the sale of the drug; and (2) declaring the cultivation of the poppy in Bengal, by Government licence and stimulus, to be a mode of raising revenue contrary to the elementary principles of morality, and utterly inconsistent with the Gospel of Christ. Parliament was called upon to do its utmost to remedy these evils. The several speakers urged upon those who have votes to make their influence felt in the House of Commons, so that Britain may wash her hands of a great wrong, and cease to sin against the peoples of China and India, as well as against God.

THE SOUDAN MISSION.

THE May "leaflet" of the Soudan Mission, C.M.S., contains some very interesting items of news. The party now consists of six, who sailed from Liverpool on February 8. Seven days later they were at Madeira, which, with the Canary Islands (seven in number) has a climate specially adapted for invalids. The spiritual darkness, however, is so great, that the Scriptures are characterised by the Romish priests as "books of the devil." There are only two evangelists. "It is very sad," it is remarked, "that not one of the hundreds of Christian invalids crowded together at fashionable resorts in England will take pity on the hundreds of thousands in these beautiful islands who know not their right hands from their left."

Detained for some days at Grand Canary, the members of the party distributed some fifty or sixty Spanish Gospels. Mr. Charles Barker, the agent of the Bible Society, is working here absolutely alone, so far as Christian sympathy is concerned. During the voyage, four of the ship's passengers accepted Christ as their Saviour.

At Sierra Leone, the missionaries were invited to spend a day on shore with the Bishop, who received them with the utmost kindness. Rev. S. A. Selwyn, who had just come from Abeokuta and Lagos, where he had been holding missions for the C.M.S., among the communities of professing Christians, was staying with the Bishop. A very happy afternoon was spent at a Bible-reading and "testimony meeting," the European workers and native pastors making up a goodly company. March 4 was set apart for a quiet day of prayer and conference, everybody feeling very strongly the need of searching out and giving up any "devoted things" that might bring defeat in wrestling with the spiritual hosts of wickedness. In the evening several points were agreed upon for united prayer in faith, among other things, for the conversion of one of the passengers who was leaving next day. He accepted Christ that night.

"March 7, Cape Coast Castle.—Three of the party went ashore to spend the day with the Wesleyan missionaries, who have a station here. Many Hausas were met from all parts of the Central Soudan, some of them mentioning that they had heard across country of Mr. Wilmot Brooke's stay at Lokoja last summer. They spoke of a "white man, not an Arab, who sat among the people in native dress, and wrote papers in Arabic letters for them." This was somewhat striking, as Lokoja is as far from Cape Coast as the Pyrenees are from Gibraltar. The delight of the Hausas at seeing a white man sit down on the ground with them and talk their language, was a striking illustration of the importance of these little details. They came running together on every side, and said good-bye with great warmth. In the afternoon it was decided that Dr. Harford-Battersby should remain here for a few days to work among the English-speaking children at the Methodist schools, and then overtake and rejoin the rest of the Soudan party before they proceeded up the Niger.

"March 8, Accra.—Reached this place, the capital of the Gold Coast, in the early morning. Five of the party spent the day in visiting the work of the Basel Mission which has its head quarters and central offices here. There is a large factory organised by the Mission which pays over £1000 of its profits annually to the mission work, i.e., about one-tenth of what it turns over. At this factory about a hundred heathen women are employed in cutting up the big lumps of india-rubber that are brought down from the interior, and as they work they are taught Christian hymns. There are also schools for Christian adherents, and workshops for teaching carpentry and blacksmiths' work, but very few of the schoolboys will go to these; for here, as elsewhere on the coast, those who have learnt to read and write will not condescend to manual labour.* The evangelistic stations of the Mission are almost all in the interior. Got a good deal of information here about the great town of Salaga, some one hundred and fifty miles due north in the Nta country. It is a great resort of the Hausa merchants from Borgu and Gando, and is estimated by Europeans who have been there to contain sixty thousand inhabitants. The Nta king is a Moslem; the Moslem slave-hunters coming at this point to within one hundred and twenty miles of the coast. The once dreaded kingdom of Ashanti used to keep them in awe; but since the war its power has been steadily declining."

The missionaries arrived at Akassa on March 16, and eight days later were ready to start up the Niger. The leaflet sets forth the great need of the Central Soudan, and deals with the qualifications required by those who would witness for Christ among the people. Copies may be obtained by sending a penny stamp to Mr. T. Arthur Garnett, 33, King-street, Manchester.

* Boys in the Soudan, as well as in England, need to be taught the respectability and dignity of labour. Men who can read and write, but who have no profession or trade or handicraft, are a drug on this planet.—Ed. of THE CHRISTIAN.

THE VICTORIA NYANZA.—A crowded meeting was held in the Mansion House last week in connection with the placing of a steamer on this largest of the African lakes. The great attraction was Mr. H. M. Stanley, who made a very effective address in advocacy of the scheme. He described the lake and its surroundings—a fertile country with some twelve millions of population—and showed how useful a steamer would be in promoting all good causes, missionary work among others. The Duke of Fife, who presided, also spoke very cordially of the project, which it is to be hoped will soon see completion.

MANCHESTER WORKING LADS' CAMP.—The fourth annual Whit-week camp in connection with the Hulme and Chorlton-on-Medlock Lads' Club and Gymnasium was held this year in the healthful and picturesque village of Wormhill, Derbyshire. Over two hundred lads were taken for this "week in the country," and were much benefited by the change. The favourite pastimes (in which the gentlemen officers joined) were cricket and football, while rambles over the adjoining country, and other methods of recreation were also indulged in. It was an inspiring sight to see so many of those who, in the natural course of events, will become the future workmen of the busy manufacturing centre of Manchester, singing together Keble's beautiful morning hymn, "New every morning is the love," or to listen to the strains of General Gordon's favourite, "Abide with me," or Lady Tennyson's fine evening hymn, "Great God, who knowest each man's need." On the Sunday a special service (in addition to the one in camp) was held at the Wormhill Parish Church, the kindly vicar of which (Rev. Chas. E. Bagshawe) addressed some faithful words to the lads on the subject of "The sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God."

NATIONAL REFUGES FOR DESTITUTE CHILDREN.

UNDER the sway of Mr. Joseph Proudman, Exeter Hall resounded with cheery melody on Thursday evening last week from the voices of some 600 happy boys and girls, who are cared for, body and soul, in Homes and training ships. The forty-fifth report, from which Mr. WILLIAM WILLIAMS, the secretary, read extracts, may be had from Shaftesbury House, Shaftesbury-avenue. Perhaps our summary of the speeches which followed may induce those who know but little of this beneficent enterprise to seek enlarged knowledge thereof by means of the report, which is anything but dry reading.

The EARL OF JERSEY, president, occupied the chair, and referred to the religious, preventive, voluntary, unsectarian, and non-political characteristics of a work which should be generally known and well supported. In 1870 there were 2000 children under the age of sixteen in prison; but, to-day, there are under 100. It is desirable to cut off the prison supply entirely, at its very source, by united effort, sympathy, and monetary support, and the State may at least see that an effort which appeals to every unselfish heart is not hampered by unreasonable laws.

Rev. JAMES BAILLIE claimed rescued children as the strongest evidence for Christianity in London to-day. The most popular orphanages are under men of strong evangelical faith, such as Spurgeon, Barnardo, and George Müller, who not only regard Christ as a Saviour, but take Him as an example of self-sacrifice for the benefit of the sorrowing and destitute. The Society is favoured in having a president who seeks to tread in the steps of the late Lord Shaftesbury, and to whom the love of the children is as grateful as the high honour lately conferred upon him by his sovereign.

Rev. Dr. DONALD FRASER said destitute children are not to blame for unfavourable surroundings, and must be rescued, if at all, while young. It is impossible to raise one sex without the other. When girls acquire self-respect and refuse to company or unite with licentious, ignorant, intemperate, or profane men, then there will be inducement for some of the male sex to mend their manners. We must look to it that, while our eyes are in the ends of the earth, English children do not grow up the worst kind of savages. "Old Tom" is the great devil of London, and, while mothers worship at his shrine, what can we expect but a race of poor, pinch-faced, spindle-shanked pigmies. The work of the Refuges is to be commended because it gives the children not only books but practical and moral training, and because it is, out and out, through and through, warmly Christian, and not merely religious. If we turn our eyes from the great Lover of children, where can we find a motive strong enough to support us in a work like this, or where can we obtain an atmosphere of thought and feeling healthy and sweet enough to recover the lost, raise the depressed, and comfort those who are desolate?

Rev. S. PEARSON, M.A., thought speeches scarcely necessary. The sight of the girls and boys upon the platform, taught to be godly and industrious, was quite enough to create enthusiasm, wonder, and delight. If Cain, the first vagabond, fills the heart with pity, how much more a child vagrant who is such through no fault of its own. It is a scandal that any child should be in prison instead of under the sacred influences of a Christian home. Some boy now on that platform might rise to be Lord Mayor or, higher still, a minister of Christ's Gospel; at any rate, there is room in the world for Christian tailors, shoemakers, soldiers, and sailors.

Rev. R. M. THORNTON said class evangelisation being the order of the day, this Society sinks a shaft to the lowest strata of London life, and espouses the cause of those who cannot plead for themselves, caring for heart, head, and hand. It is seen that the work of caring for souls and bodies, whether done by societies or individuals, pays well, when it produces, from the destitute, a merchant prince, a missionary for God, or a Christian minister. He prayed that the tree might become more and more fruitful.

Christian Vernacular Education Society.

THE Earl of Northbrook presided over the thirty-second annual meeting in Exeter Hall on Thursday afternoon. Rev. J. JOHNSTON, secretary, who has just returned from India, gave an interesting personal narrative of the Society's work, part of which consists in bringing Christian influence to bear upon native schools with heathen teachers; 207 schools of this kind are grouped into thirty circles of from five to ten schools each, and an efficient Christian native teacher is set over each circle, to visit the schools in order as often as possible, for regular and systematic instruction in Scripture. These head teachers are superintended by seventeen missionaries belonging to different missions. The Scripture subjects were found to be as palatable to the children as were lessons on grammar or geography. Even where there are no visible spiritual results, the moral and social benefits apparent are not to be despised. In more than one village, the school has developed into a small mission station.

The Society is trying to keep abreast of the demand for the best class of school books, giving them a due proportion of moral and religious truth, and thereby conferring a great boon upon the youth of India. Government and the Education Department are now thoroughly alive to the importance of moral teaching in schools and colleges, generally admitting that morality must be founded in religion. While the educational work is vigorously kept up, development is sought in the production and circulation of Christian and general literature; and for this purpose half the amount of a capital fund of £5000 was subscribed before the secretary left for India, to which £1000 is added from the general fund, in the hope that the remainder will soon be raised. It is evident that a great work may be done in providing Christian books for believers and for the inquiring youth of India; but there are also needed works on secular subjects, which can only be rightly handled from a Christian standpoint. The statistics for 1889-90 show 8555 children under instruction, 91 students in training institutions, and 789,650 copies of publications printed.

The claims of the Society were ably advocated by the noble chairman, and by Sir Charles Aitchison, formerly Lieutenant Governor of the Punjab; Rev. J. A. Macdonald, of the Bengal branch; Rev. T. W. Drury, principal of the Church Missionary College at Islington; and by Mr. Henry Morris, who was so long honorary secretary of the Society.

RATCLIFF STRANGERS' REST.—The hearts of those present at the monthly gathering of Christian workers were cheered by hearing from the hon. secretary that the meetings for Sailors' on Whit Monday were marked by a spirit of hearing, and special blessing was manifested. After a few words from Mrs. Hind Smith, who took her husband's place, Rev. W. Fuller Gooch spoke from Exod. xvii. 8-16. He uttered a word of warning to Christians against the dangerous delusion that they need no longer be on their guard against temptations from the flesh, of which Amelek is here a type. In the course of his remarks, he gave an earnest testimony to the preciousness of the atonement, and to the Scriptures as the only standard of truth.

FIELD-LANE REFUGES.

A GOODLY number of friends and supporters attended the forty-eighth annual meeting of the Field-lane Refuges, Ragged Schools, and associated institutions, on Monday afternoon, in Princes Hall, Piccadilly. The report read by the secretary, Mr. PEREGRINE PLATT, was in many respects highly encouraging. Blessing continues to attend the work in all its varied departments. Nothing in the way of charity or educational training is allowed to obscure the great object of the Institutions in seeking the eternal as well as the temporal welfare of those who come under their influence. The admissions into the Refuges last year numbered 883; the Ragged Schools, in which Bible teaching is the central work, were attended by 27,000; the poorest of the poor, to the number of nearly 500 weekly, have partaken of bread and coffee after service in the Ragged Church. The endeavour is to deal with the ignorance and wretchedness of the lowest and most needy classes, with a view to their seeing in Christ the Saviour from sin and sorrow.

Lord KINNAIRD presided over the meeting, and took occasion to give expression to his hearty admiration of the work. Through reduced income, it was last year found necessary to draw upon the reserve fund to the extent of several hundreds of pounds. This was regretted by more than one of the speakers. Canon GIRDLESTONE emphasised the excellence of the work—so all round in character, touching young and old, not only to meet their present wants, but to put them in the way of permanent improvement. Above all, he rejoiced to contemplate the endeavours to reach the spring of life by touching the heart and conscience. Rev. A. ROWLAND enforced the duty of individual Christians in relation to the abounding suffering and sin. We have, he said, got too much in the habit of leaving such work to societies. He expressed a hope that some who had heard him would respond to the call for personal service. The dead child of the Shunamite woman did not awake when Gehazi laid the staff of the prophet upon it. Elisha himself had to go and yearn over the child—pray unto the Lord for him, breathe his breath into him. Not until then could the prophet present the boy alive to his mother. In like manner personal interest and effort are required to-day.

Rev. J. R. WOOD addressed a few stimulating words to the children of the Industrial Schools, who looked very happy. At intervals during the afternoon they sang pieces, and selections were played by the Boys' Industrial School Band. The Baroness Burdett-Coutts graced the proceedings with her presence. An admirable account was rendered of a good and varied work, and it is hoped that the result will be an influential accession to the ranks of those who sustain this very multiform benevolent institution.

NEW BRIGHTON.—Pastor Edmund Morley has assumed the oversight of the work at Albert Hall, New Brighton. This work was commenced in September last by Rev. E. A. Carter in connection with his Pioneer Movement, and Mr. Morley has been conducting the services regularly since the beginning of February.

THE SALVATION ARMY.—To celebrate the opening of the premises at Blackfriars Bridge as the Home Office of the Army, Mr. Booth invited a number of workers and "auxiliaries" last week to a social meeting in the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street. After tea he gave a résumé of Army work in different parts of the world, on the same lines as his statement at the recent annual meeting. In some countries there are many hindrances, and in others much success. A special appeal was made on behalf of a printing press for the Indian work. Mr. Booth also hinted at the scheme for a new departure in social reform which he hopes to have completed by the autumn.

MEDICAL MISSIONS.

The annual meeting of the Medical Missionary Association was held in Exeter Hall on Monday, June 2, and proved to be one of exceptional interest. Sir CHARLES ARBUTHNOT, K.C.S.I., presided. After a hymn and prayer, Dr. MAXWELL, secretary of the Society, drew special attention to the fact that during the past year the committee had been able to purchase two houses in Highbury Park, which would henceforth be the home of the Mission, and in which the Society will now be able to accommodate twelve students, during the whole or part of their time of training and study in connection with the hospitals of London. The class of men sought are those who, having proved themselves to possess the gifts and experience of evangelists, and having a desire to spend their lives in medical mission work, could be received into the house and helped forward to full qualification as medical missionaries. The new Medical Mission in Islington has already proved a blessing to the people. Dr. Maxwell referred to the good work Miss Butler is doing in [illegible] up and keeping up the interest of children in the [illegible].

The CHAIRMAN said that no mission could be said to be completely equipped unless a medical mission were attached to it. In foreign mission work medical skill is a great pioneer agency, and the physician can establish a mission where others fail to obtain a footing. The Indian Government highly appreciate the work that is being done by medical missionaries, specially along its northern frontiers and among the wild border tribes. There are many successful medical outposts, but beyond these, as far away as to the Russian frontier, there is not an agency of any kind for reaching the heathen and Mohammedans. Many traders come long distances, and, meeting with the medical missionaries, hear words of life and witness acts of kindness, and take back stories of help and healing in connection with the missions. In January, 1879, a very warlike tribe on the frontier made a raid on Tonk, which was in British territory. They sacked and burned the place, but spared the hospital and house of the medical missionary, because about half of the patients that had been treated there were members of that tribe.

Dr. CHURCHER, in an interesting and lively speech, described his Medical Mission work in Tangiers, Morocco. He gave a graphic account of the ignorance and degradation of the Mohammedans in the north of Africa. Dr. Churcher is very anxious for help that he may penetrate further into the interior, where he will be sure of a warm welcome from the people directly they know he is a doctor. In conclusion, he urged personal allegiance to Christ, and that all should be ready to go forward and occupy the territories yet unevangelised.

Rev. PENNA THOMPSON, of the East-end Wesleyan Mission, moved a resolution recognising the value of this agency in home mission work. The need of such work among the thousands in the neighbourhood of Cable-street is apparent from the fact that, in a population of 50,000, nine out of every twenty die paupers; and yet people prefer to die anywhere rather than in the workhouse. Numbers of lonely and poor ones may be found without bed or proper covering in the courts and alleys of St. George's-in-the-East. In a court lately entered by the Medical Mission the doctor was unable to find one man, woman, or child who knew anything about God. Besides reaching the outcasts and unsaved, the Medical Mission work is a grand agency for looking after poor believers and helping them. The speaker said he was sick of the objection that "they come for what they can get." So do the rich. They will not come to hear a preacher unless he gives them the kind of sermon they like. A poor man ought to make it known if he has no bread.

Dr. H. SOLTAU, of the Islington Medical Mission, gave a little account of the effect of Medical Mission work in Bhamo, in making a robber band respect the premises of the missionaries when all else was destroyed and pillaged by them. He gave a brief account of encouraging results already attending the commencement of Medical Mission work in Islington.

WORKING MEN'S MISSION.

THE anniversary of this Mission, in the New Cut, conducted by the Brothers Young, was held last week, Mr. T. A. Denny presiding. Mr. Ashton's report told of much varied, patient, and persistent effort, both in open-air and in indoor work, during the year. A sum of £200 was needed to meet current claims in connection with the Mission.

Mr. Denny spoke very warmly of the work carried on by Messrs. Young for the bodies and souls of the people. So did Mr. Causton, M.P., who came expressly from the House of Commons to contribute his words of cheer. Rev. W. Williams, of Upton Chapel, was equally cordial in his expressions of goodwill. In response to the chairman's request, a number stood up in testimony of the fact that they had been spiritually blessed through the Mission. Brief addresses were also given by Mr. Davidson, Mr. Meredith, Mr. W. J. Orsman, the Messrs. Young, and others.

JEWS AT MILDMAY.

On Thursday week the Mildmay Mission to the Jews gathered between 300 and 400 Jews and Jewesses from the East-end to their annual treat in the Conference Hall grounds. Several amongst the company were open and avowed Christians; many others were unbaptized believers, and all more or less under Christian influence, and desirous of knowing the truth. Before tea Mr. KINGHAM kindly gave a simple and earnest Gospel address from his picture of the "Broad and Narrow Way," Mr. ADLER following with a brief address in German, to make plain the truth to those who did not know English. Many were very poor. Some had only recently come from Russia—one, a very interesting young girl, an orphan, in charge of her aunt. Others with beaming faces. Jews and Jewesses, testified in free conversation their faith in and love to the Lord Jesus Christ.

Rev. JOHN WILKINSON presided at the Gospel meeting after tea, and spoke a few words on "Blessed are all they that put their trust in Him" (Ps. ii. 12). Mr. MATHIESON delivered an earnest and loving address on the opening of Isaiah ii., dwelling specially on the words, "O house of Jacob, come ye and let us walk in the light of the Lord." Colonel MORTON expressed in German his warm interest in the seed of Abraham, giving the Jews a hearty welcome to Mildmay. Rev. JAMES NEIL gave a warm-hearted address on "I will lift up mine eyes to the hills," &c.

On the following afternoon (Friday) the treat was for the children of the night school. There was an abundance of play before and after tea in the Conference Hall grounds, their teachers and friends playing with them. A happy out-of-doors meeting was also held after tea. The children sang sweet Gospel hymns, and answered most intelligently questions put to them as to prophecy and history relating to Jesus, and the way of salvation through His atoning blood. Will our fellow Christians unite with us in praying that many of these lost sheep and straying lambs of the house of Israel may be found and gathered by the Good Shepherd?

FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN.

THE thirty-third annual meeting of the London Female Preventive and Reformatory Institution was held at Parson's-green, Fulham, on Saturday afternoon, under the presidency of Lord KINNAIRD. There was an excellent attendance of friends of the work from town.

Mr. EDWARD W. THOMAS, the secretary, gave a brief abstract of the report, which showed the income at £8,961, and the expenditure at £8,777. There had been admitted during the year, 217 preventive, and 299 reformatory cases. There had also been temporarily lodged 417, making a total of 967 who had come under the care of the Institution. An interesting feature in the report was the number who had been assisted to emigrate, no less than 388 having been sent abroad.

The President congratulated Mr. Thomas upon being able to present a report which must have been as cheering to his own heart as to those who had listened to it. It was delightful to meet in a Preventive Home such as that in which they were assembled. It marked great progress, when they remembered what dreary places "penitentiaries" were years ago. One of his earliest recollections was connected with a visit he paid with his father to one of these gloomy houses of detention. How different the plan pursued in this Institution where every door was open, and the only restraining influence that was brought to bear upon those who entered was moral; yet so mighty had it been that, though they were as free to go as they were to enter, they were all only too thankful to remain. Such a fact spoke volumes in favour of the system under which they were trained.

Mr. SYDNEY GEDGE, M.P., said he did not know anything that could better commend the work of the Society than the way in which its work was conducted. At one time he used to think that the want of education was one of the great causes of the social evil; but the effect of the present scheme of national education, in one direction at least, had been to make many girls dissatisfied with their poor surroundings, and to resort to evil methods to improve them. When they left school at fourteen they often found no legitimate means of getting a living, and so they dropped into evil ways. He thought that a position of this kind was more than ever to be met by the holding out of the hand of fellowship as this Society did.

Rev. F. W. A. WILKINSON appealed on the ground of humanity, as Christians, and to those of them who were Christian ministers. Not only from a financial, but a spiritual point of view, the work of the year had been satisfactory.

Rev. A. W. SINCLAIR, vicar of Parson's Green, strongly commended this work of mercy to liberal public support. He greatly feared that we are fast losing our good old English simplicity, and becoming "Frenchified," as we can see if we go to a book-stall or picture gallery and take note of the productions which are most popular. We shall never see Christ fully honoured and served until purity becomes a fact in the nation's life. Mr. Ireton and Mr. F. Nicholl also spoke.

THE INVALID CHILDREN'S AID ASSOCIATION, whose head-quarters are at Buckingham-street, London, S.W., has been formed to care for the little folks who, after treatment in hospitals for spinal, hip, and other diseases, require kind nursing and surgical appliances to conduct them through the trying and dangerous crisis which oftentimes follows exit from the hospital. A few shillings a week suffices to keep one of these "cases" in the sensible, and there are numbers waiting to be sent. Perhaps some who have not hitherto been aware of the existence of the Society will be disposed to help in extending the sphere of its admirable labours.

THE NEW HOME AT LANCING.

A GOOD number of friends from London, Brighton, and Worthing, assembled on Friday last at a meeting, to set apart for Christian service the new sea-side Home of the North East London Gospel Mission, at Lancing-on-Sea, Sussex. There are thirteen dormitories, with about fifty beds, most of the windows giving lovely Channel views.

The women's sitting-room is a very cheerful apartment, nearly twenty feet square, well lighted, and looking on to the lawn.

At the meeting in the mission-room, which is 40 feet by 20, Rev. J. B. Figgis, of Brighton, gave a stimulating address to the Christians present. Mr. C. M. Sawell, of the City Mission, enlarged upon the need of such institutions.

Mr. William Chorley told how, in the providence of God, the Home came into his care. He made it very plain that the first desire of the Mission is to promote the spiritual well-being of those who may become inmates. Beds for about thirty adults and twenty children are now provided, but some portions of the premises are not yet furnished. These can be readily detached from the other portion, and Mr. Chorley is most anxious to utilise one part as a home for poor men out of health. Already, however, liabilities have been incurred, amounting to £300.

Personalia.

Rev. J. C. Croxford, pastor of the Mission Church, Harrold, Bedford, has returned from the Colonies, whither he had gone for the benefit of his health. Since leaving home in November, Mr. Croxford has travelled over 32,000 miles, and has visited, besides the interesting places en route, Victoria, Tasmania, New South Wales, New Zealand, and South and West Australia.

Rev. J. B. Gribble, writing with respect to the destruction of his residence by fire, to which we referred in a recent issue, says: "The origin of the fire remains a profound mystery. Sad to say, the premises, which were new, were uninsured, consequently we have been left destitute. A noble effort has been made by my good people in this scattered district, so that our more immediate necessities have been met. But we are at present homeless. It has occurred to me that, as you have still in stock a considerable number of copies of my book, 'Black, but Comely; or, Glimpses of Aboriginal Life in Australia,' your readers by the purchase of the same might render thereby timely aid."

Mr. Joseph Connellan, brother of Rev. Thomas Connellan, contributes an intensely interesting article, entitled, "From Bondage to Liberty," to the June issue of The Christian Irishman. (1d. Mecredy & Kyle, 49, Little Abbey-street, Dublin.) He describes his early training in the Church of Rome, and the sorrow with which he learned that his brother had "apostatised." It was, however, through reading "Hear the Other Side" that light burst upon his mind, and he found rest of soul in Christ. This was not until after he had read the Holy Scriptures, of the real teaching of which he previously knew little or nothing. The preaching of Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe, which was much blessed to Mr. Thomas Connellan, also proved very helpful to his brother Joseph.

Professor Drummond has begun his work amongst the University students of Melbourne, and is taking all hearts captive. His style has a curious quality of gentleness about it, the gentleness—but also the radiancy and force—of sunshine. A teacher in doubt about his message, or not sure of his own fitness for delivering it, is apt to strain and scream; he is tempted to conceal the inner doubt by energy—not to say violence—of method. But Professor Drummond has all the calmness born of serene faith, and of the strength which faith gives. Unlike most evangelists, Professor Drummond has a horror of publicity; as far as the spiritual side of the work is concerned, he simply boycotts the Press, much to the disgust of the enterprising Pressmen!—Southern Cross.

The Hon. Lady Sebright asks us to state that she is open to take evangelistic or Gospel temperance meetings during next three months. Address, Raven's Cliff, Bournemouth.

Mrs. Mountford (née Miss Von Finkelstein), accompanied by her husband, arrived in England from India on Saturday last. They are proceeding to Oberammergau, and on returning expect to stay in this country for a fortnight. Afterwards they proceed to America, whence they return to India, the land of Mrs. Mountford's adoption.

The Temperance Cause.

The Roman Catholic Diocesan Synod at Kilkenny has forbidden the use of intoxicating drink at wakes or funerals in that diocese.

Mr. George Blaiklock, temperance evangelist, expects to spend about three months lecturing between San Francisco and New York, after which he will go into Canada.

A Bill has passed the New York Legislature prohibiting excise commissioners or police officials from having any interest directly or indirectly in the sale of intoxicating liquors.

Mr. Sims, the military agent of the National Temperance League, has been presented with a purse of 250 sovereigns, and an address, for his services in the cause of temperance.

The U.S. Congress will be appealed to to pass an act prohibiting the importation and sale of intoxicating liquors in "original packages" in all States and localities which have declared the liquor traffic unlawful.

Rev. Dr. McLaren, of the Established Church of Scotland, at the recent meeting of the Assembly, deplored the large amount of drinking carried on in connection with Saturday afternoon football, and said it was doing great injury to the churches.

Rev. Mr. Stuart, Free Church missionary, speaking at Edinburgh recently, said the drink traffic had done immense harm in Kaffraria. It was sad, he said, that in some parts of South Africa, Scotland was better known for its beer than its Bible.

The Free Church Temperance Society, Scotland, has now 694 societies, juvenile and adult, with a membership of 80,000, an increase on the year of 146 societies, and over 16,000 members. The roll of placed abstaining ministers is 645, an increase of 24.

Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt, writing from Banana, Congo Free State, says: "The fearful tide of drink here is more fearful than one can imagine until one has really seen, as I have done, the steamers full of the vilest spirits, much of which is simply alcohol distilled from the cheapest substances that will produce it, brought out in this form to be reduced with water, flavoured with aniseed, and so sold at an enormous profit."

SOUTHPORT EVANGELICAL CONFERENCE.—The thirty-first annual meeting of this Conference took place on Tuesday and Wednesday, last week, Archdeacon Clarke presiding. Rev. Evan H. Hopkins, of Richmond, speaking on "How to raise the Spiritual Tone of our Congregations," entreated his brethren to recognise God's presence and power, as they are being manifested in two movements: (1) The work amongst the unsaved—the conversion of the souls of those that were careless and indifferent, or mere nominal Christians; and (2) the work amongst believers—the deepening of the spiritual life in the hearts of those who are really God's children. Canon Tristram read a paper on "Brotherhoods and Vows." He saw in recent proposals an attempt to restore the monastic system, which has been tried in every age, and uniformly failed. There is a brotherhood and sisterhood in Christ, the charities and amenities of which are sorely marred by attempts to accentuate the term "brotherhood" in a way which is essentially unscriptural as well as retrograde. Archdeacon Taylor held that what the Church wants is, not brotherhoods and sisterhoods, but men with God's love in their hearts, God's truth on their lips, and God's power accompanying their words in Gospel preaching. Rev. H. James, of Livermere, spoke on "Social Hindrances to Spiritual Life." The unrealities of life have, he said, largely taken the place of realities, and the substance has died off in the shadow. The evils thus occasioned must be counteracted by the cultivation of a spiritual atmosphere, the affections being set upon things above, and God's glory being sought in every engagement of life.

FAITH'S VISION.

ISA. vi.; REV. v. 21.

OH! for the eyes of Judah's seer
That pierced to Heaven's high throne,
And gazed with mingled joy and fear
On Him who sate thereon.

Oh! for the ear divinely sealed
To earth's unhallowed din,
That opened wide to seraphs' song,
And drank their raptures in.

Oh! for the heart 'mid storms of sin
That shone with ray serene
Yet in the presence of its God
Could only cry "Unclean."

Oh! for the lips by seraph touched,
The zeal by fire set free,
That dared to answer "Who will go?"
With "Here am I, send me."

Vain is the wish, that heavenly door
To mortal opes not now;
Angelic anthems thrill no more
Our listening hearts below.

Yet stay, though visions long have ceased,
Though angels viewless fly,
The Spirit shows a lovelier scene
To faith's unfaltering eye.

Lo! Judah's lion takes the book,
And mounts the Throne of flame;
While snow-clad millions raise the shout
"All glory to the Lamb."

Again we gaze; the fight is o'er,
A sinless earth appears,
Crowned with a deathless heritage—
No night, no toil, no tears.

Then fix, my soul, on things above,
Let faith all murmurings drown;
By faith hold fast thy glorious Head;
By faith behold thy crown.

Framsden, May, 1890. A. J. BEGBIE.

Evangelistic Notes.

Southgate, N.—The tent services in connection with the Chase-road Baptist Chapel are well attended, as are also the children's services.

Mr. J. A. Smith has conducted a week's special mission at Tough, Aberdeenshire. The people came in large numbers, and several professed decisions for Christ were made.

The Bible and Gospel Van, worked by Messrs. Wharton, Bailey, and Perrott, is now actively employed in the proclamation of the Gospel. It has been taken through some parts of Lancashire and Cheshire, and is now on its way to Staffordshire; from thence it goes to Derbyshire.

Cotleigh.—The rector of Cotleigh, Devon, Rev. J. Hawker, M.A., has pitched a tent in the rectory field, in which special Gospel services will be held every Lord's Day until the end of August. The first service was held on Lord's Day, June 1, when the tent was well filled by persons who had come from the hamlets several miles distant.

Huddersfield.—Under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A. and Band of Hope Union, Mr. William Forbes has held a seven days' mission in this town and suburbs. A number of the meetings were held at the Market Cross, where great crowds assembled. The evangelist addressed the workpeople one day during the dinner hour at Brooke's Mill.

Warrenpoint, co. Down.—A fortnight's services have lately been conducted in this place by Miss Smith and Miss Bax. The meetings were held in the Town Hall, and were largely attended, not merely by the inhabitants of the town, but by others from the adjoining districts. The addresses, which were of the most searching and Scriptural character, produced a deep impression. Many who were formerly careless and indifferent about their eternal interests have been awakened to anxiety and concern. A considerable number have declared their determination to be on the Lord's side; while believers have been led to seek after closer conformity to Christ and greater earnestness in his service. The Presbyterian and Wesleyan ministers of the place gladly gave their help and sympathy, and a united weekly service has been established.

The Book World.

JEHOVAH TITLES. By James Sprunt. George Stoneman, 21, Warwick-lane, E.C. A series of chapters on eleven titles of Jehovah. The teaching is of a very helpful character. The Hebrew words might, however, have been transliterated with greater regard to English phonetics.

MY SAVIOUR, AND SIXTEEN OTHER ADDRESSES. By Rev. Henry Dening, rector of St. Werburgh's, Bristol. 2s. 6d. J. Kensit. These addresses are all about the Saviour, and every one of them will richly repay perusal. The style is clear and the teaching sound. History and poetry have been laid under contribution for telling illustrations, by way of enforcing great truths and important lessons.

THE LORD'S PRAYER IN THE LANGUAGES OF AFRICA. 1s. Gilbert & Rivington. The title is somewhat too comprehensive; only some of the languages are here represented—in fact, forty-nine. The districts where spoken are indicated, and there is a map. In these days, when African affairs are to the front, this compilation will have a peculiar interest, especially among the friends of missions. Students of comparative philology will, of course, see charms in these pages.

INSIGNIA VITÆ; or, Broad Principles and Practical Conclusions. By C. H. Waterhouse, M.D. J. S. Virtue & Co. Five essays on life and character from the pen of a Christian philosopher. The field surveyed is very broad. The genesis of man and the "ego" in him; nature's plan in the life of man, and the relation of the sexes, are some of the problems. The pages testify to wide reading on the part of their author, who is at once a clear thinker and a very engaging writer.

GOLD IN PROPHETIC MINES. By Marturia. 1s. 6d. Partridge. Some very suggestive chapters on the interpretation of the Revelation and other portions of the prophetic Scriptures. The author indicates certain lines of God's unfolding purpose which find their completion in the Apocalyptic visions. He also contends for a double fulfilment of prophecies. Explaining Scripture by the light of itself, he has endeavoured to point out the meanings of the Apocalypse, and his efforts will go far to make the book intelligible to many readers.

GAMBLING. Three very useful booklets on this important subject are:—GAMBLING: A Discourse by Rev. George Fravn. 3d. Wesleyan Methodist Sunday School Union. BETTING AND GAMBLING: THE CURSE OF THE AGE, by Rev. Dr. Thain Davidson, issued by the National Anti-Gambling League. 1d. "Home Words" Office. GAMBLING: AN ENEMY OF OUR YOUTH, by Rev. W. J. Spriggs-Smith. 1d. Partridge & Co. We trust these very practical publications on a subject of great and pressing importance will be widely circulated among those who have fallen, or are in danger of falling, victims to the gambling vice.

A HISTORY OF THE JEWISH PEOPLE IN THE TIME OF CHRIST. By Emil Schürer, D.D. First Division, vol. i. 10s. 6d. T. & T. Clark, Edinburgh. An important addition to the Foreign Theological Library, translated by Rev. John Macpherson, M.A. The sources of information are set out in great detail, and the political history of Palestine sketched from B.C. 175 downwards. It is not a reading-book, but a text-book embodying vast research, and calculated to prove of great value to those who would study at length any special subject or period in the history. The care with which facts have been brought together, and the succintness with which they have been stated, fully explain the high reputation of the work in Germany, and justify its translation into English.

THE PERSON AND MINISTRY OF THE HOLY SPIRIT. Rev. A. C. Dixon has edited in this volume a series of addresses which were delivered at a conference convened in Baltimore last year by himself and Rev. G. C. Needham. Amongst the most valuable of the addresses are: "The Holy Spirit the Revealer of Christ," by Dr. George S. Bishop; "The Spirit's Three-fold Conviction," by Dr. George Dana Boardman; "Grieving, Tempting, Resisting the Spirit," by Dr. James Morrow; and "The Holy Spirit and the Christian," by Dr. F. M. Ellis. We learn from a prefatory note, that at one time during the conference no fewer than a hundred ministers requested prayer for the fulness of the Holy Spirit. We trust that in book form, the very instructive addresses will induce many to seek power through the same Divine unction and indwelling. (One dollar. Wharton, Barron & Co., 102, Fayette-street, Baltimore, U.S.A.)

MEMOIR OF MARGARET BRIGHT LUCAS. 2s. British Women's Temperance Association, 13, Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, E.C. In this dainty volume a very interesting account is given of the work of the late distinguished president of the British Women's Temperance Association, together with an outline of the personal facts of her life. Temperance was not the only cause that was near Mrs. Lucas's heart, but certainly no movement received from her more valued service. The book is inspiring in a high degree, and, being embellished with an admirable portrait, will be a treasure to many who knew Mrs. Lucas, and are privileged to be partakers in the great temperance reformation.

IN MEMORIAM: REV. ROBERT MCALL. A chaste little volume has been issued by Mr. J. D. Smith, Deptford Broadway, S.E., in loving memory of the late Rev. Robert McAll. The contents comprise a memoir by his sister, Mrs. Philp, and a sermon and addresses by Rev. Morley Wright, Lewisham High-road Church, of which he was a deacon. There is an admirably correct portrait as frontispiece. Mr. McAll was latterly brought prominently before the public as the English representative of the Mission in France with which the name of his cousin, Dr. R. W. McAll, is so honourably associated. Those who knew him will be glad to possess this very interesting little book.

THE HEREAFTER: Sheol, Hades, and Hell, the world to come, and the Scripture Doctrine of Retribution according to Law. By James Fyfe. 7s.6d. T. and T. Clark. In this volume of upwards of 400 pages, special attention is directed to Scripture teaching concerning the "hereafter" of the impenitent. The immortality of the soul is postulated and argued at length; future punishment, in the sense of eternal woe, is the theme of much reasoning by way of expounding Holy Writ. There are several useful tables of passages bearing on various phases of the subject, but not all who may be disposed to agree with the author's general view of divine retribution, will accept his interpretation of Scripture as to the intermediate state. A vast amount of information has been brought together in this volume, but we cannot say that the facts and reasons are well digested, or that the arguments are presented in the most desirable form. At times, indeed, the warning voice of truth can with difficulty be heard, for the heavy tramp of the heel of controversy.

THE CENTURY DICTIONARY: AN ENCYCLOPÆDIC LEXICON OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE, prepared under the superintendence of William Dwight Whitney, Ph.D., LL.D., Professor of Comparative Philology and Sanskrit in Yale University. Vol. II. Cono—Fz. £2 2s. T. Fisher Unwin. With this volume one-third of the entire work is completed. For fulness and clearness of arrangement, combined with excellence of typography and illustration, this dictionary stands unrivalled. Terms peculiar to religion and education, science and philosophy, have been uniformly dealt with on the encyclopædic plan which makes the work so exceptionally useful. "Cross" and "crown" each receives a page; "eye" and "ear," alone and in combination with other words, occupy over three pages each. The many senses of the common but very interesting words, "cut," "do," and "draw" are set forth at length, with copious illustrative quotations. On the one hand we have a capital explanation of the game of cricket; on the other, a lucid statement of the wonders of electricity. The departments of etymology and orthoepy continue to testify to great labour having been bestowed upon them. If carried through as successfully as it has so far been conducted, "The Century" is likely for a good many years to come to hold a first place among English dictionaries for thoroughness and all-round utility.

THE ROYAL BANQUET. By T. G. Crippen. 2d. Alexander & Shepheard. A popular exposition of the Lord's Supper. It presents important truth with precision and grace.

WINGING HEAVENWARD is the title of a booklet published by Marshall Brothers. It is illustrated in monotint and colours, and contains beautiful verses from many pens, selected by Cecila Havergal. Christmas is a good time ahead yet, but as it approaches, this handsome little publication will doubtless be largely sought after.

WHAT AUTHORITY FROM THE WORD OF GOD HAS THE CHURCH FOR DEALING PUNITIVELY WITH DOCTRINE? By Colonel H. R. Shelton. 4d. Hobart (Tasmania): "Mercury" Office. A searching pamphlet. The keynote is "Judge not." It is shown that the body of Christ has no authority to assert the functions of his head. Christian liberty is vindicated, and persecution on grounds of intellectual difference is exhibited in its truly unchristian character.

JACOB. A poem by E. S. G. S. Edwin Edey, 186, Aldersgate-street. Many helpful thoughts stand out in these rhymes.

Messrs. Wheeler Brothers, 88, Mildmay-park, N., have issued a neat packet of verse cards, printed in gold and tints—"The Trust Series"—twenty-four cards for sixpence.

"LIFE'S CONTRASTS" is a penny booklet, issued by the London Medical Mission, 47, Endell-street, St. Giles. By narratives that are inexpressibly sad, it appeals for a wider interest in the Mission, which is under the able superintendence of Dr. Hatchford.

PICTURESQUE WALES: A Handbook of Scenery accessible from the Cambrian Railways. By Godfrey Turner. 6d. Simpkin & Marshall. Here are illustrations and maps such as the tourist will find very acceptable. The letterpress information has been well digested.

HOW THE OLD AND NEW TESTAMENTS WERE COMPLETED AND HISTORICALLY VERIFIED (Second Edition), and "WHATSOEVER YE SHALL ASK;" or, Rich Answers to Real Prayer (Third Edition), are two useful booklets by Rev. John Fordyce, of London. (6d. per dozen. Drummond's Tract Depôt, Stirling.)

SOUND DOCTRINE AND CHRISTIAN RITUAL. An address by H. K. Lewis. 1s. T. Fisher Unwin. The author is an extremist. In contending for an exhibition of Christian life he has depreciated religious teaching, and in his zeal for the ritual of grace and holiness he overlooks the ordinances of baptism and the Lord's Supper.

THE ORIGIN OF SCRIPTURE ON ITS DIVINE AND HUMAN SIDES. A contribution to the present Biblical discussion by John Wilson, M.A., Montreux, Switzerland. This is a thoughtful pamphlet, but we question whether it will reassure many who may have become unsettled in mind through modern criticism. Edinburgh: Macniven & Wallace.

FROM TWILIGHT TO SUNLIGHT; or, Rest Sought and Found. By Leonard K. Shaw. 1d. Manchester: Brook & Chrystal, 11, Market-street. A booklet on "walking in the light." The pages are specially instructive because largely experimental. Mr. Shaw relates his own blessed experience in a helpful manner, and invites his readers to follow him into the rest of full and unwavering faith in the God who sanctifies those who find their all in Christ.

IN MARIAN, A STORY OF LONDON LIFE, Rev. George Wilson McCree tells the intensely interesting story of the founding of the London Bible and Domestic Female Mission. Marian Bower, the first Bible-woman, no sooner found the Saviour than she began to serve Him with a zeal which her love for Christ fully explained. Her service was blessed to many, and the fragrance of her name is still sweet in St. Giles. An inspiring booklet. (Partridge.)

THE ROYAL PRIEST, as typified in Melchizedek and Aaron. By Elizabeth A. Needham. 10 cents. Boston, Mass.: Samuel Usher, 171, Devonshire-street. This is the second of the series of expositions which Mr. George Needham and his talented wife are at present giving to the world in quarterly issues. Sound teaching is well expressed, and the series cannot but prove useful to such as study the Scriptures with care, in order to a deeper knowledge of the ways of God.

SPECIFIC UNBELIEF: ENGLAND'S GREATEST SIN. By Andrew Simon Lamb. Tract Depôt, Stirling. This tract is an abridgment of a larger book bearing the same title. It is a defence of the doctrine of imputed righteousness, as popularly understood. The author states it very badly at times; and clearly attributes man's justification rather to Christ's perfect obedience than to his death for sin. We doubt whether the New Testament puts the doctrine in terms conveying the meaning the author has given.

"NOW ABIDETH...THESE THREE." A Tract for the Times, by Robert H. Muir, Minister Emeritus of the Parish of Dalmeny. Edinburgh: James Gemmell. It is beautifully shown that true Christian charity is dependent upon the joint influence of faith and hope. Charity is the fruit, these the stem, the root of all the holy issues of Divine grace in human character. "As hope is faith on the wing, so genuine charity is faith at work—faith hopefully and happily working 'by love' (Gal. v. 6)." It needs not to be pointed out that this is teaching of great doctrinal importance.

OUR BABIES, AND HOW TO TAKE CARE OF THEM. A series of homely talks to mothers on the management of their infants. By Florence Stacpoole. 3d. Alexander Gardner. A very useful little book, giving the substance of six lectures delivered to Mrs. John Elder's Classes in Domestic Economy, at Govan, Glasgow. Mothers are informed as to the best way of taking care of their babies, the "reason why" some things are good and other things bad being explained in the simplest manner. Attention to the instructions laid down will do much to promote health and peace in the homes of the people.

JAPANESE IN ENGLAND.—No fewer than 140 Japanese blue-jackets have just visited our shores. They spent a few days in the Royal Albert Dock on board the s.s. Flintshire, which brought them from Japan, and then proceeded to the Clyde to man a newly-built ironclad. Miss McLean (author of "Echoes from Japan"), who accompanied some forty of them to the Zoological Gardens and elsewhere, writes to us: "I believe there were several Christians among the party, for they privately sought opportunity to speak of Jesus and his love, and acknowledged the goodness of God in bringing them safe and sound to this country."

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

These Notes run concurrently with the Readings of the "Bible and Prayer Union," founded and conducted by Rev. Thomas Richardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Mile End-road, London, E., of whom card of membership may be had for 1d., and Monthly Notes, prepared by himself, for 1s. per annum, post free. We hope many of our readers will become members of the "Bible and Prayer Union," and take its Monthly Notes, which of course are entirely different from these.

SUNDAY, JUNE 15.—Psalm XXXVII.

WRITTEN by David in his old age (25), this Psalm contains his mature experience. Like xxv. and xxxiv., it is alphabetical in its arrangement. It deals with the great problem of the prosperity of the wicked, as contrasted with the afflictions of the righteous, and shows that these are only temporary, and that, if we can trust and wait, we shall see that God will mete out to all their deserts. The Psalm is a protest against querulous complaint, and has been peculiarly dear in all ages to the troubled believer. It is exquisitely paraphrased by Gerhardt's noble hymn, "Commit thou all thy griefs." The 5th verse was frequently quoted by Livingstone.

1. Fret not.—This key-note is thrice repeated—1, 7, 8. It might be translated "Don't worry."

5. Roll thy way (marg.): see also for same Hebrew word Ps. xxii. 8; Prov. xvi. 3.—True religion is summed up in two words, submit and commit.

7. Be silent.—The Rhone rids itself of silt as it passes through the still waters of Geneva's lake. It is so much easier to act than to be still.

9. Earth is land: see also 11, 22, 29, and Matt. v. 5.—This surely means the supply of all temporal needs as well as of spiritual blessing.

12. Let us not fear the threatenings of our foes. Haman will be hanged on his own gallows.

18. It is enough that God knows what lies hid in each day, and guarantees a sufficiency of strength (Deut. xxxiii. 25).

19. So God cared for Jeremiah in the time of siege (Jer. xxxvii. 21).

23. A step is a very little thing. Let us do nothing apart from God (Prov. xvi. 9)

24 The Douay version reads "The Lord putteth his hand under him."

25. Though this may have been David's experience, yet it does not follow that it is universally true. But on the whole it is true. Note the blessedness of the seed of a good man (26).

30, 31. This is the portrait of the godly as to their life, and heart, and steps.

34. The fulfilment of these promises depends on our fulfilment of the conditions of faith and waiting. Because they trust in Him (40).

37. Bishop Coverdale's translation in the Prayer Book version is worthy of note: "Keep innocency, and take heed unto the thing that is right, for that shall bring a man peace at the last." But the Revised Version favours the ordinary reading. The day may break stormily, but the storms expend themselves ere nightfall, and the sunset is golden.

MONDAY, JUNE 16.—Psalm XXXVIII.

One of the seven penitential Psalms. It seeks to bring to God's remembrance his apparently forgotten suppliant (see LXX.). We all should have times of calling to remembrance, when we summon back the past.

1. The burden of his prayer.

2-8. His first plea, derived from his physical and mental sufferings.—Sin's convictions are as arrows. When God's holy law is driven home by the Spirit, we are like hunted deer. Many images are introduced: the quarry (2), disease (3), the waters rolling over a drowning man (4), burdens which crush the bearer to the ground (4). Ah, how blessed that they were not too heavy for the Sin-bearer. (Isa. liii. 4, 5; Matt. xi. 28.) I am troubled might be rendered I writhe (6). Mourning will soon be exchanged for singing (xl. 3).

9-12. His second plea, derived from his ill-treatment by men.—God reads the unspoken sorrows of our hearts (9). Mark the beating, palpitating heart, the failure of strength, the lack-lustre eye (10). When enemies are nearest, friends are furthest: so it was with our blessed Lord (Matt. xxvi. 56). Malice in deed, and malice in thought (12).

13-20. His third plea, derived from his absolute dependence on God.—It is well to be deaf to calumny and dumb in self-vindication (1 Sam. x. 27). Let God undertake your cause (15). How truly might the Messiah have appropriated many of these words (John xv. 25; Matt. xxvi. 62).

21-22. His closing petitions.—Thus, faith becomes expectant and triumphant, claiming God as its salvation.

TUESDAY, JUNE 17.—Psalm XXXIX.

Written by David and handed to Jeduthun, who is specially mentioned as entrusted with the Psalmody (1 Chron. xvi. 41). Psalm xxxvii. is a calm meditation on the respective lots of righteous and wicked men; this is full of impetuous and impatient complaint, which finally works itself out, and subsides into a more submissive and plaintive tone.

Impatient murmurings (1-6). Faith and Prayer (7-13):—

1. A tale of the fifth century tells of a plain man, who, having learnt this verse, took leave of his teacher, saying he would return for more when he had mastered it, and did not return for forty-nine years, as he found it took him all that time to learn it. We need to ask God to tame what man never can (Jas. iii. 2-8).

3. The pent-up fire broke forth as from a volcano. Perhaps it had been better, if it had been altogether restrained (Job i 22, ii. 10, iii. 1). And yet, if the lips must tell the unsupportable agony of the heart, it is better to tell it all out into the ear of God.

5. Not only does he, with all his days, shrink into nothingness in contrast with God, but every man, when standing most firmly, is only "a breath," curling up for a moment in the chill air, and gone.

6. What a description of the frailty and vanity of human life! Walketh as a shadow, i.e., the outward life and activity of men is fleeting, and unsubstantial, as the shadow of a cloud on the mountain slope.

7. He turns from peering into dizzy depths, beginning to make him reel, and looks upward. This is the turning point of the Psalm. The former thoughts are repeated, but the dark clouds are shot through with light.

9. Dumbness, not now from wrath, as in 2, but from trust. Thou didst it.

11. The transience of human life and of its sins is now seen to be due to the sin which needs correction, much more than to any defect in God's creative love.

12. "A stranger with Thee" (Lev. xxv. 23).—We have a constant companion. God is our fellow-pilgrim. "Life need not be lonely, if He be with us; nor its shortness sad."

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 18.—Psalm XL.

Though the primary reference be to the individual believer, yet there is One only in whom these words can find their entire fulfilment. This is put beyond all doubt by Heb. x. 5-9. Thanksgiving (1-3); Declaration (4, 5); Consecration (6-10); Entreaty (11-17), unite to fill this precious Psalm with helpful thoughts and words.

1. "Waiting, I waited."

2. "A pit of roaring," a deep cavity through which roaring waters rush (Isa. xvii. 12). Miry clay (Ps. lxix. 2).

3. May not these have been the words of Christ as He ascended out of the grave, leading the new song which only the redeemed can learn (Rev. xiv. 3).

5. What wonderful works in Redemption, Adoption, Pardon, Sanctification, and Providence! God's living thoughts of us pass our power of counting (Ps. cxxxix. 17). Here is a maze, in which bewildered, we may soon lose ourselves.

6. The bloody and unbloody offerings respectively. Where these expressed a loving, obedient heart, they were gladly accepted, otherwise valueless (Ps. l. 5; 1 Sam. xv. 22; Hos. vi. 6).

"Mine ears hast Thou digged" (Exod. xxi. 6; Deut. xv. 17). Thus did Jesus freely give Himself up to obedience and blood-shedding for us; and so should we give ourselves irrevocably to Him.

7, 8. It is blessed when God's law is not only in the head but in the heart, and when it is there it will not stay there (10).

9. We are reminded of John xvii. 26.

10. What themes are here, not only for the Lord, but for his ministers!

12. If applied to our Lord, these must be the sins of the whole world (Isa. liii. 4, 6).

15. For a reward of the shame with which they tried to load the sufferer.

16. What a contrast in the objects of those who seek (14, 16).

17. The thoughts of God towards the soul (5) are sweet themes of encouragement (1 Peter v. 7). Poverty and need are not barriers to, but arguments for, the thoughts of God.

THURSDAY, JUNE 19.—Psalm XLI.

It is supposed by some that this Psalm was composed during the four years in which Absalom's conspiracy was being hatched. Perhaps the pain and sorrow of David's heart brought on some serious illness, which his enemies used for their own purposes, and exulted over with unseemly glee. His sensitive nature is keenly hurt, and pours out its complaint. And we cannot but feel the applicability of the Psalm to Him who was betrayed by his friend. The 9th verse is expressly quoted as fulfilled in John xiii. 18.

1-3. A general principle. — When his enemies were in sorrow, he was very tender in his dealings with them (Ps. xxxv. 13, 14). And now he claims that God should do to him as he had done.

To make the bed is to turn it.—As a gentle nurse alters the sufferer's position and pillows, so does God interpose alleviations for our pains.

4. What a wholesome prayer!—

> Heal us, Emmanuel! we are here,
> Waiting to feel thy touch;
> Deep-wounded souls to Thee repair,
> And, Saviour, we are such.

5-9. His treatment by his foes.—His disease drew no pity, but only impatience that he lingered so long. Their comforting words were full of deceit, they rejoiced in every symptom of his approaching end. "The man of my friendship," the Ahithophel or Judas of my love, like a vicious mule or horse, has kicked at the sick lion.

10-12. The earlier verses savour more of the Old Testament spirit than of the New. But the conception of ver. 12 is very beautiful, as of a courtier who stands ever in the presence-chamber of the king (2 Chron. ix. 7; 1 Kings xvii. 1; Luke i. 19).

13. This Doxology closes the first book of the Psalter. Each of the five books ends in a similar manner.

FRIDAY, JUNE 20.—Psalm XLII.

This Psalm embalms the holy musings and yearnings of the exiled king during the rebellion of Absalom. The thoughts are evidently David's, even though their expression and setting may be by the sons of Korah (2 Chron. xxi. 19). This Psalm was a great favourite with the early Christians hunted to the catacombs, where the hart is a common emblem on the walls.

1. The hind in the drought, and the hunted stag, long for cool streams. This thirst for God proves the very being of God, for all natural appetites have a perfect satisfaction.

2. Not a dead idol, but the living God of my life. Lit. "Appear before the face of God" (Ps. xli. 12).

3. Shimei's words clung to his memory (2 Sam. xvi. 8).

4. The thought of the sufferer is to give a loose rein to these bitter memories, and to allow his sad thoughts to work out their will; and so he recalls the festal processions that he had led in happy bygone days.

5. Thus does the spirit rebuke the flesh, and battles with its despondency in the name of the most High. "David chideth David out of the dumps," says Trapp. Omit for from the last clause, which gives a beautiful name for God. Sing, though just now your feet are fast in the stocks.

6. These words reappear (Jonah ii. 7; Matt. xxvi. 38). You may be excluded from God's temple, but you can always remember God. The Hermons belonged to the trans-Jordanic tribes. And how little was Mizar compared with Zion.

8. Tears day and night (3), and yet lovingkindness and song day and night (Job xxxv. 10). Does God sing beside his sufferers? (Zeph. iii. 17).

SATURDAY, JUNE 21.—Psalm XLIII.

This, with the preceding Psalm, forms a pair.

1. When others fail to understand our motives, we may appeal to the righteous bar of God. He is our great advocate, who will plead for us (Lam. iii. 58).

2. "The God of my life" (xlii. 8) is here "the God of my strength." How fertile is the soul in its epithets for God; and how conclusive the answer to the taunt of the foe, "Where is thy God?" God is with me, in me, here.

3. Light and Truth in the van; Goodness and Mercy bringing up the rear. Watch them as these twin angels emerge from God's home to conduct the suppliant thither.

4. The altar of outward symbolism and rite was very little to David; it was for God that his soul yearned. How he dwells on that precious name, God, my God.

5. It is a mistake to allow aught to break the inner Sabbath. Troubles may burst on the bulwarks of the ship, but they may not enter its inner sanctuary.

In these Psalms, notice how God is described as the strength of our life; the gladness of our joy; the health of our countenance. And mark how faith chases the tear from the eye, the furrow from the brow, the fear from the soul.

International S.S. Lessons.

Sunday Afternoon, June 22.

TRUST IN OUR HEAVENLY FATHER.—LUKE xii. 22-34.

GOLDEN TEXT: LUKE xii. 30.

A WARNING against covetousness is fittingly followed by a lesson on Trust in God. Distrust underlies all undue pursuit of this world's wealth. The rich fool trusted in his wealth, because he did not know God. "Disciples" (22) are to make God their only confidence. The lesson includes two parts—(1) a warning against anxiety (22-28), and (2) an exhortation to faith (29-34).

Verse 22.—"Thought" means anxiety (R.V.). A proper exercise of forethought leading to effort is right. Faith in God is no excuse for carelessness or idleness; but anxiety destroys restfulness, renders duty difficult, and as surely hinders fellowship with God as sin does.

Verses 23-28.—The reasons for not being anxious are many. "The life is more," &c. (23).—God gave both the life and the body. Will not He who gave them provide for them? Having given the greater, is He not certain to give the less? See Rom. viii. 32. "Consider the ravens" (24).—Consideration is the cure for anxiety. Worry is an inconsiderate thing. All around us are lessons reproving our want of faith. The ravens (Ps. cxlvii. 9) are contrasted with the rich fool. He sowed and reaped, and had storehouses and barns (16-18), yet all his labour and provision could not save his life! Without any of these the ravens are fed by God. Our Lord would have us see, not merely nature, but God providing in nature for the birds of the air. And surely his children will be more to Him than the fowls? "Which of you by being anxious," &c. (25).—What can worry effect for us? It can neither add to our stature, nor lengthen the span of our life. We are so impotent that our anxiety is as foolish as it is wicked. "The lilies" (27, 28) are perhaps "the beautiful red anemone with which the meadows throughout Palestine are enamelled." Or they may refer "either to the magnificent white lily, or the splendid red lily which are found, though more rarely, in that country." Herbs are used for fuel in the East where wood is scarce. The God who clothes these in such beauty will surely clothe his children too. Every beautiful flower that grows reproves our unbelief.

Verses 29-34.—"Seek not" (29) is contrasted with "rather seek" (31); the unlawful seeking which characterises the heathen (30) with the lawful seeking after the right object which should characterise the believer. The phrase "doubtful mind" (29) may mean either high-minded, i.e., the disposition that leads to discontent with what we have; or uncertain minded, alternating between trust and fear. "The kingdom of God" (31) means for each one of us the complete subjection of our whole being to Him. Seek to have the will entirely his, and to live out his righteousness. Make that your only care; He will make your wants his care (Ps. lxxxiv. 11). "Fear not" (32).—If your Father gives you the kingdom for your eternal need, will He not provide for your present maintenance? Jesus speaks such counsel out of his own experience of what the Father was to Him. "Sell that ye have," &c., this is not the way of life. Jesus speaks thus to disciples (22), who are already children of God, and possessed of the kingdom. The best use to make of what we have is that which Jesus recommends. What we part with for Him is never really lost.

These promises are for children of God. The first need of our scholars is to seek the kingdom of God for themselves. If they become children, God will fulfil these words to them.

Mungo Park, during his travels, was saved from despair by the sight of a flower growing in a desert place. The God who cared for the flower could care for him.

Luther, when in great straits, was walking through the fields reading Matt. vi. 26. A little bird hopping from sprig to spray seemed to say with its chirping note:—

> Mortals, cease from toil and sorrow,
> God provideth for the morrow.

It then came to the ground to pick up a crumb, and, rising merrily, seemed to repeat its cheerful song.

Crœsus, king of Lydia, arrayed himself in his utmost splendour, and, with foolish pride, exhibited himself to Solon, and said, "Have you ever beheld a spectacle more august?" "I have," the sage replied, "there is not a pheasant in our fields, nor a peacock in our courtyard, nor a cock on our dunghill that does not supass you in glory."

A father, hearing of the conversion of his son, said, "My son, you should wait until you have made your position in the world before deciding about religion." "Father," said the young man, "Christ advises me differently. He says, 'Seek ye first the kingdom of God.'"

PROTESTANTISM IN BELGIUM.

Two Belgian monks, Henri Voes and Jean Esch, were burned alive in Brussels in 1523. These were the first Protestant martyrs in the Netherlands. The Spanish Inquisition continued its bloody persecutions till the Reformation was completely suppressed. During more than two centuries, Belgium was thoroughly dominated by the Romish Church. In 1848 a Society named Eglise Missionnaire Belge was constituted at Brussels for the spreading of the Gospel.

This Society comprises now 27 churches and missions in full activity in 170 communes, composed of 7000 members, 420 only Protestant origin. Thirty-eight clergymen and Bible-readers preach the Gospel in private houses, churchyards, and in public, presiding as well over Sunday services and Bible-classes.

The Belgian Missionary Church might rapidly extend its blessed work, if it was not constantly prevented by the insufficiency of its means. It requires about 140,000 frs. yearly, and, as nearly all its members are poor workmen, the receipts are always much below the expenses, not to mention the needs of the new missionary stations. In January, 1890, the deficit reached 45,000 frs., and the Missionary Church will have to diminish its activity without fresh help. We therefore appeal to all those who take an interest in the promotion of evangelisation on the Continent that they may "come over and help us." The treasurer of the Belgian Missionary Church is M. Kennedy Anet, 123, Chaussée d'Ixelles, Brussels.

MARG. DE LAVELEYE.

LANSDOWNE-PLACE SCHOOL, SOUTHWARK.—This school, in Tabard-street (late Kent-street), Borough, S.E., is situate in the centre of much degradation, want, and misery. The inhabitants consist in large part of costermongers, labourers, and others whose means of livelihood are precarious. To the little ones, who undergo much privation, and know little or nothing of parental affection and care, the teachers speak of a Saviour's love and faithfulness, not forgetting to instil into their young minds the necessity of thrift and total abstinence. The allied agencies include a library and reading-room, open on Tuesday evenings, sewing-classes, mothers' meetings, &c. The entire work involves an expenditure of only about £100 per annum; further development would, however, be a pleasure to those who know the pressing need. The treasurer is Mr. J. Passmore, Jun., 4, Paternoster-buildings, E.C.

JERUSALEM.—The hospital of the London Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews is inadequate to the requirements, and unsuitable for the important purposes to which it is devoted. The superintendent, Dr. Wheeler, works single-handed amid great difficulties. The Latins, Greeks, Moslems, and Jews, have good hospitals and schools; this one, however, the only one under Protestant auspices, suffers sadly from lack of public support. Many a Jew has had reason to thank God for the self-denying efforts of Dr. Wheeler, who with fitly spoken words and earnest prayer has pointed out Jesus as Saviour-Messiah. Not at all too early are friends of the work bestirring themselves to provide accommodation which shall relieve Dr. Wheeler from the crowded malarial atmosphere in which he at present attends to his noble duties. The sum required to meet the needful outlay is £5000, of which only £1900 has, so far, been received.

Letter to the Editor.

"DRUNK, BUT NOT WITH WINE."

SIR,—Such was God's testimony about the condition of his people. To the natural eye all was going on well, for He said: "They draw near Me," but it was only "with the mouth"; "they honour Me," but it was only "with the lips." He said: "They 'take counsel,' but not of Me." "They walk to go down to Egypt." They had forgotten all the lessons of the wilderness, and were "lusting after flesh," though in another and more subtle form; and to-day the Church seems to be falling into the same sin, and to be preparing for itself disappointment, failure, and rebuke.

The early Church, endued with Pentecostal power from its ascended Lord, had won glorious victories over the heathen world. Multitudes "dead in sins" had been "quickened together with Christ," and, spite of persecution and martyrdom, went forward with Nazarite power in fellowship with the "Word of God" conquering and to conquer.

But, as of old, the people who had so gloriously triumphed at Jericho were ignominiously defeated at Ai, because there was a "Babylonish garment" and a "wedge of gold," so the Church, enticed by the prospect of the support of Imperial power, became "entangled with the affairs of this life," lost its power, which was "holiness to the Lord," and, instead of conquering the world, became bound to the world; and a Babylonish Christendom has attempted in vain to supply the place of the Church of the living God.

While many precious saints walked with God, Christendom, as a whole, was suffering from a fearful plague, for it had been feeding on the flesh of emperors; and in our day the plague seems to have broken out with terrible force, and on all sides the saints of God seem to be feeding on the flesh of the public as a source of power, and as a consequence tens of thousands are falling in the wilderness. Many saints of God are battling for the earthly support of an Establishment, while others seem to think they will advance their own cause by the Disestablishment of their brothers. Others seem to think that to get "the masses" on their side is to ensure success, and in their anxiety to get political victory they have forgotten his Word, which says, "Cursed is he which maketh flesh his arm."

Of old the tribes went up to Jerusalem to worship God in his tabernacle; to-day the people of God seem to be in danger of thinking that if they go to a "demonstration," not of "the Spirit," and of the power of God, but to a "great meeting," that they will win the battle. So that the strange sight is seen of many, themselves dazzled by the prospect of popular help, trying to stop drunkenness. What blindness has come on the prophets, that they do not see that while drunkenness from wine is disastrous, spiritual intoxication is a thousand times worse; for while wine renders perhaps one-tenth of the world miserable and degraded, there seems great danger lest spiritual intoxication should stupefy the brains, and overthrow in the ditch of worldliness many of the trusted leaders of the Church of God. Surely Gospel Temperance will not be promoted by invective against any who differ from us. Nor will the cause of the lowly Jesus be advanced by passionate abuse of those who are in authority.

"The public," whose aid many are invoking, seems, alas! to be a greater source of intoxication to the Church than beer is to the working man. The craving for influence is a sure precursor of spiritual death. Even many who seek to "liberate" the Church from bondage to the State, are courting the help of the masses, not knowing they are being bound by a Delilah who will lull them to sleep, and then leave them, shorn of their strength, to their enemies.

But a few days ago many were remembering his ascension, and praying that they might "in heart and life thither ascend;" and now they take their place as "of the world," and have descended from fellowship with the risen Lord, to get the help of the fickle multitude. Surely, once again, He says to the Church, "I know thy works, and thy labour, and how thou canst not bear them that are evil." "Nevertheless, I have somewhat against thee." "Remember whence thou art fallen," "for the fire shall try every man's work, of what sort it is." "Therefore he saith, Awake, thou that sleepest, and arise from among the dead, and Christ shall give thee light." Yours, &c., R.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Rev. G. S. Reaney, late minister of Cavendish Congregational Chapel, Manchester, was ordained on Sunday week by the Archbishop in Canterbury Cathedral, and has been licensed to a curacy at Riverhead, Sevenoaks.

Rev. Henry Sharpe has completed twenty-five years' ministry as vicar of Trinity Church, Hampstead, and at the annual meeting of the congregation a few days ago a presentation was made to him in recognition of his long and faithful service.

Two successive mails in April brought good news to the C.M. House from Tinnevelly. One was about the successful mission of Rev. G. C. Grubb and his associates; and the other conveyed the tidings of a hopeful movement among some heathen lads in the C.M.S. college. . . . . .

Rev. J. E. C. Fownes, of Hastings, who graduated at Oxford so long ago as 1864, has gone over to the Church of Rome. He was a member of the English Church Union, and a Priest-Associate of the Confraternity of the Blessed Sacrament. Once more (says The Record) we are driven to ask why, if the Ritualistic programme is (as its friends allege) the best barrier against Rome, the perverts are always drawn from the ranks of its exponents. Do friends of the Protestant Churchmen's Societies pass from membership of these bodies into the arms of Rome?

A most encouraging account of the results of Rev. S. A. Selwyn's Mission at Sierra Leone has come from Bishop Ingham. He says:—"Looking at the Mission as a whole, I am quite sure that it has proved most timely. I cannot but feel that it must have been about the time when I, for one, was most earnest in prayer for God to manifest Himself in some special way amongst us here, that it was put into the heart of Mr. Selwyn to come, or rather to go wherever he might be sent. Mr. Selwyn has been used of God to soften men's hearts, as I have never seen them softened here before."

The Bishop of Shrewsbury, preaching at West Bromwich on Sunday week, dwelt at considerable length upon the necessity and value of religious education of the young. He thanked God that the Christian instinct in England had caused the people to resolve almost universally that religious teaching should be given in Board schools to the utmost limit that the Act of Parliament allowed. Children should be educated not only in the knowledge required by the Education Department, but also equipped with the knowledge which would make them wise unto salvation, and cause them to grow up into useful and Christian citizens.

The Dean of Norwich, speaking at a parochial tea at St. Martin at Oak, Norwich, said that, unfortunately, in the Church of England they had not yet learned to give laymen the prominent position to which they were entitled. He would give them a voice in the appointment of their minister, and a voice in the removal of the minister if he did not do his work. He would give them a voice in the proclamation of the Gospel of Christ. He would post them in mission-rooms, sometimes, in church, and if he had his own way, he did not hesitate to tell them he would do more than that, for he would hear some laymen preach occasionally in the pulpit of the Cathedral.

PRESBYTERIAN.

A united open-air service was held in Victoria Park on Sunday week, the ministers of several of the Presbyterian churches in East and North-east London taking part in the service. The day was everything that could be desired for such a service, and a very large crowd listened earnestly and attentively to the Gospel message set before them.

A Synodical Letter was read from the pulpits of the English Presbyterian Church on Sunday week. It was prepared by Dr. McLeod, the late moderator, and deals mostly with the subject of attendance at public worship and the promotion among members of kindly Christian relations, and a loyal observance of the ordinances and services of the Church.

METHODIST.

A mission-room of a novel character has been opened at Portbury, near Bristol, a disused railway carriage having been purchased, its partitions removed, and room provided for sixty persons.

Great Thornton-street Chapel, Hull, is a centre of aggressive work under Revs. J. Posnett and Joseph Jackson. The chapel has lately been renovated; amongst other improvements a rostrum has been erected in place of the pulpit. In connection with the reopening services Rev. W. D. Walters spoke on "Some Aspects of the London Wesleyan Mission," and Mr. Josiah Nix also delivered an address. His appeals for faith in God, persevering prayer, and consecration to Christian service, were very impressive.

In the village of Earls Barton (near Northampton), where the total population is only 2500, a few of the Methodist people made a determined attempt to carry out the principles of the Forward Movement. The secretary writes to The Methodist Times that success has been assured and they are now thoroughly imbued with the "go forward" spirit. The services are already very popular. They aimed at getting in the people, and they have succeeded. There has been variety in the services, the singing has been led by a string band, short, crisp, addresses are accompanied by brief Bible-readings, and on some Sunday afternoons the body of the chapel has been quite full.

SALVATION ARMY.

Commissioner Booth-Tucker and the Indians have had a wonderful reception in New York; they will visit nearly all the large centres in the States and Canada.

Last week's War Cry was styled an ex-publicans' number. It was largely made up of personal testimonies from people formerly engaged in the drink trade who are now workers in the Army. Efforts were made to get copies of the Cry into the hands of publicans all over the country.

Mr. Stead in the June Review of Reviews asserts that General Booth is now standing on the eve of a new and momentous departure which may have immense results: (1) in the solution of the social question; (2) in multiplying colonial ties; and (3) in basing socialistic aspiration on common sense and the Ten Commandments. Mr. Stead declares that it is the most hopeful and most daring thing of the kind that has been promulgated in his time.

BAPTIST.

The Deaconesses' House, 59, Doughty-street, W.C., in connection with the Baptist forward movement, was opened with a dedicatory service on Friday afternoon.

By the death of Rev. Enoch Williams, of Swansea, the Baptist churches in Wales have lost one of their oldest ministers. Mr. Williams was a co-worker with Christmas Evans at Carnarvon during the great revival period, when he baptized 1500 persons.

Mr. Wm. Birch, Pastor Thomas Spurgeon's successor at Auckland, N.Z., is doing a good work, preaching almost every day. The tabernacle, holding 1600, is crowded, and many conversions have followed. Mr. Birch has been preaching at the gold-diggings with much success.

In connection with Rev. E. A. Carter's Baptist Pioneer Movement a church was formed at Waterloo, Liverpool, on June 2, with thirty-four members. At the public meeting Rev. C. B. Sawday, of Leicester, gave the right hand of fellowship to thirty-one persons, aptly addressing them in words of Christian love and exhortation. Addresses followed from several ministers, including Mr. George Goodchild, of Preston, pastor-elect of the new church.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. J. Pandy Williams, pastor of London-road Chapel, Derby, on Sunday week preached on behalf of the early closing of shops. Some might tell him, he said, to keep in his own sphere, but it was distinctly the business of ministers to concern themselves in all things that had to do with the welfare of society.

Rev. G. S. Barrett, at the annual meeting of the Norfolk Dissenters' Benevolent Association, opened a discussion on the question "How can the churches best discharge their duties and responsibilities to the working classes?" Among the reasons suggested why working men do not attend church were these: "Many ministers in preaching Christ put Him in the centre of a maze, so that it is difficult to get at Him. Many ministers and leading men of churches do not set such an example as to induce working men to attend places of worship. If ministers were to take up such subjects as are for the benefit of the people they would not lack hearers."

Rev. J. G. Rogers is delivering the Merchants' Lecture at the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, during this month. In last week's lecture he discussed the views of the Gnostics and Agnostics. The Agnostic, he said, professes great respect for the moral ideas of Christianity, and the development of that perfect ideal, the Master Himself; but he argues that men can know nothing beyond the phenomenal and the finite. The great things of God are only known by faith. The Master says, "Except ye become as little children." This is what men least like. To become little children suggests the idea of dependence; and it is dependence from which men shrink.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

John T. Dorland, jun., has gone home to Canada for the summer, but hopes again to return to England in autumn for another winter's work among us. Many will be glad of the help thus likely to be rendered, and young men will specially rejoice in the prospect.

For the last ten years The Western Friend has been published in the interest of the ultra-Conservative section of Friends in America. As indicative maybe of the progress and advancement of American Quakerism, the Tory organ has just expired. The Christian Worker invites its supporters to join the forward movement.

Two important changes occurred this year in connection with the London Yearly Meeting. The clerk, Joseph Storrs Fry, and the record clerk, Charles Hoyland, retired from office amid the heartiest expressions of high and loving appreciation. The former had been about seventeen years, and the latter over thirty years, in office. Caleb Rickman Kemp, of Lewes, is now clerk, and Isaac Sharp, of Hitchin, succeeds Charles Hoyland.

Help is urgently needed for Friends' mission work in Mexico, where brave and noble evangelists, teachers, and other workers are unselfishly fighting against Papal darkness, and all the consequent concomitants of superstition. English, Americans, and natives stand shoulder to shoulder in the stern warfare. To some extent the same state of things obtains in Japan, only there it is heathenism that must be overcome. In both countries the work has been owned and blessed.

The news of the sudden death of Deborah Lloyd, of Kansas, during the time of Yearly Meeting, will cause widespread sorrow; and the deepest sympathy of Friends will be extended to Samuel Lloyd, who has been left alone in a strange land. After about three days' illness, D. Lloyd succumbed to pneumonia in the house of John Tyler, at Stoke Newington. "Be ye also ready."

NOTES FROM SCOTLAND.

Rev. Dr. Norman Macleod, minister of St. Stephen's Established Church, Edinburgh, has been appointed to the charge of the principal congregation of the Established Church in Inverness.

Dr. Norman Walker, of Dysart, was presented with £500 at the close of the Free Assembly meetings, in recognition of his services to the Church, specially as editor of The Free Church Monthly. The circulation of the Monthly is 81,000.

NOTE FROM IRELAND.

Strong opposition to the spread of Ritualism is being exhibited in many parts of Ireland.

The one hundred and twenty-first annual Conference of the Irish Methodist Church began its proceedings in Belfast yesterday, under the presidency of Rev. C. H. Kelly, and will continue in session for about a fortnight.

The proposal made at the late General Synod in Dublin, by Lord Plunket, Archbishop of Dublin, in favour of union with other Protestant Churches, has been well received by the Presbyterians and Methodists, and it is not unlikely that something practical will result from it.

Mrs. Wiseman visited Dublin and Belfast last week in the interests of the Ladies' Auxiliary of the Methodist Missionary Society for carrying on zenana work in India and Ceylon, and in each city delivered very earnest addresses. Her visit is not unlikely to be followed by several Irish ladies volunteering for missionary work in India, while many others will henceforth take a more prayerful interest in the subject.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

Rev. Y. G. Lloyd-Greame, a retired clergyman, of Scwerby, Yorkshire.—Rev. G. R. Youngman, rector of St. John's, Deansgate, Manchester.—Rev. W. Whitby, Primitive Methodist minister, of Douglas, Isle of Man.—Rev. J. G. Pinder, chaplain to H.M. Forces at Portobello Barracks, Dublin.—Rev. R. Stainton, Willoughby, near Hull, formerly Congregational pastor at George-street, Huddersfield.—Rev. J. W. Gilchrist, Aberdeen, a retired minister of the United Methodist Free Churches.—Rev. O. Parry-Owen, Welsh Calvinistic Methodist minister, Llanaber.—At Hillsborough, co. Down, Rev. John Gibbs, M.A., archdeacon of Down, and rector of Hillsborough.—At Belfast, Mr. Alex. Morrow, superintendent of the Harbour Police, and an elder and secretary of the Sinclair Seamen's Church.

Brevia.

Natural gas in great quantities has been discovered in the State of New York.

A demonstration against betting and gambling has been held at Houghton-le-Spring, Durham.

Dr. George F. Pentecost will remain during the summer at Waterbury, Conn., and will then proceed to India.

The Southport Evangelical Conference (says The Record) declared with unfaltering voice against the "Brotherhoods."

Mr. W. B. Beaumont, M.P., has given £250,000 for founding institutes at York and Newcastle for the education of miners.

Rev. John McNeill, who has occupied the large Exeter Hall on Sunday afternoons in May, will continue his services during June.

Miss Fawcett, daughter of the late Postmaster-General, has taken a position higher than the "Senior Wrangler" at Cambridge.

Count Campello is about to visit England, when the public will have an opportunity of judging his attachment to evangelical truth.

"Mortimer Lombard," writing in The Young Men's Review, thinks that more general use might be made of Exeter Hall for the benefit of young men.

A supplement to The Zoophilist for June contains a list of hospitals having licensed or unlicensed vivisectors or pro-vivisectors connected with them.

A great anti-gambling demonstration is to be held, under the auspices of the National Anti-Gambling League, on Sunday afternoon next, in St. James's Hall, Piccadilly.

The adjournment of the House of Commons over "Derby Day" was only carried by a small majority, and it is thought the custom will not be adhered to much longer.

A Central Workers' Home has been opened in Lansdowne-road, London Fields, where cheap lodgings are to be provided for ladies who wish to live and work among the factory women of that part of London.

The Bengal police have issued a notice to travellers warning them not to accept food from strangers. There are a number of robbers who ply their calling by courting the society of travellers, and then poisoning their articles of diet.

The fruits of Mr. Moody's visit to New York continue to show themselves. Rev. J. F. Avery, of the Baptist Mariners' Temple, is to have the help of five missionaries, who are going from Dr. Grattan Guinness's training school in London.

Appeals.

Cow Cross Mission.—For nearly a quarter of a century this Mission has been able to pay up all claims at the end of the year. Last Christmas, however, this was not possible, and the workers are much concerned owing to a falling off of receipts. Unless £170 is forthcoming immediately there will be no alternative but to give up either the St. John's Hall, Clerkenwell, or the little Cottage Home at St. John's, Woking. Curtailment would be specially sad, seeing that the work is so much needed, and has been greatly blessed. The missionary is Mr. William Catlin, 17, Claremont-square, N.

Work among Militia.—During the mobilisation of troops in the Southern District, from June 28 to July 10, soldiers will be in camp at Hurst Castle (on the mainland opposite Yarmouth, Isle of Wight). These men, about 500 in number, will be closely confined to Hurst Fort, which is only approachable by water or along a bank of shingle for some two miles. They will have much leisure for reading, and I shall be glad of Gospel papers, narratives, and booklets to distribute. Probably one-third of the militiamen will be Roman Catholics, so nothing controversial or offensive to such should be sent, otherwise quarrels may arise. As I hope to hold Gospel services, "Songs and Solos," though old ones, will be useful, both in camp and afterwards at Golden-hill Barracks. Parcels by rail may be directed to me (carriage paid) at Yarmouth Station, Isle of Wight.

Rowland Walkey,
Lieut.-Col. Royal Artillery.
Golden-hill, Isle of Wight.

IRELAND.—Mr. G. Cummings, of the Harcourt-street Evangelistic Society, Dublin, has held Gospel meetings in the Baptist Church, Lurgan. Messrs. Johnson and Grubb still prosecute their evangelistic work in St. George's Hall, Belfast. Rev. Jas. Kirkwood has commenced the summer's campaign by setting up the Gospel tent near Portadown.

OBITUARY.—With much regret we record the death on Friday last of Frances, wife of Mr. Gawin Kirkham, secretary of the Open-air Mission. She was sixty-two years of age, and was interred on Tuesday in the G. N. Cemetery, New Southgate. The memorial card bears the text, "She hath been a succourer of many, and of myself also." Our brother has the hearty sympathy and prayers of very many friends. We can bear witness to the truth of the memorial verse. Whenever we heard from her it was on behalf of some good cause, or of some sufferer in need.

"The Hymns have abundant 'swing' and 'march' in them, and will be found largely suitable for evangelistic work. It is gratifying to learn from Mr. McGranahan's preface that the 'Songs of the Gospel' have for the most part been written—words and music—by those engaged in evangelistic work. This is as it should be. The labourers in the harvest field best understand what is likely to be of service to them in their work."—The Christian.

VIOLENT and HARASSING COUGH with BRONCHITIS—CASE AT BEXHILL.

MR. JOHN PRENTIS, of DUNOLLIE, WESTERN-ROAD, BEXHILL-ON-SEA, consulted me August 21st last.

The patient had had a wheezing of the chest from childhood, with bronchial symptoms. Of late years these had become very severe, and now a violent cough of the most obstinate character had been harassing him night and day. Expectoration difficult. Breathing very bad, with soreness of the chest. Strength had been slowly failing for some months; face thin; feet swelling at times.

The patient continued under my treatment for four months, and recovered his usual health.

Writing me February 21, he says:—"I am now enjoying good health. I have received very great benefit from your treatment, and knowing its value shall strongly recommend it. It is a boon indeed to be relieved from such a distressing cough as that I had, and to feel strong again."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

THE NOTES AND READINGS contained in this volume originally appeared in the pages of THE CHRISTIAN week by week. The interest taken in them at the time of their issue has led to republication in their present form.

It is believed that these NOTES and READINGS will be found of service to Sabbath School Teachers, and to Bible Students: Ministers and Evangelists will also be able to gather help from their pages.

It will be observed that the Chapters have been considerably extended since their appearance in THE CHRISTIAN; and some new features have been added.

It should be understood that the present work is intended to be a HELP for Bible Students. It is not, therefore, prepared with a view to being read through like an ordinary volume. But as chapter after chapter of the Pentateuch is perused, it is hoped that Bible Readers will have this book open at their side for reference. In this way the use and value of the work will be most fully realised.

"There is hardly any portion in the Word of God which has been more eagerly read than this Epistle, by those who were pressed with many trials and weaknesses. By exiles in distant lands, shut out from all human tendernesses; by travellers and voyagers; by persecuted and suffering saints, hunted into the dens and caves of the earth, or immured in the living rock and beneath the bosom of the ocean wave; by those whom sore sickness or venerable age may have incapacitated from meeting with the Visible Church—these words have been lovingly pondered and treasured, as a priceless heritage."—Extract from Chapter I.

All that art, taste, and skill can do to make the theme attractive has been done by the well-known publishers. The result is that, within and without, THE KING'S PALACE is simply perfect."

JUNE 20, 1890.

The Christian.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Mrs. AMANDA SMITH, evangelist and missionary.

As will be seen, the venerable Dr. Andrew A. Bonar, of Glasgow, is to be one of the speakers at the Mildmay Conference next week. Friends residing in the South of London will be glad to know that he has promised to preach in St. Mark's Presbyterian Church, South-street, Greenwich, on Sunday, June 29, at 11 a.m. and 6.30 p.m.

At the recent conference on "Alcohol and Childhood," at Sion College, a very painful light was thrown upon child life in Dublin by Dr. More Madden. As the physician to the largest Hospital for Children in the Irish metropolis he is qualified to speak with authority. He told of several cases of infantile alcoholic indulgence, and referred to the case of one boy of eight admitted to the hospital as a confirmed drunkard, suffering from all the terrible effects of delirium tremens. Another celebrated physician, Dr. Wilks, of Guy's Hospital, urged that alcohol should never be given to children without medical advice. We commend these utterances to all parents who are in the habit of giving wine and other intoxicating drinks to their children.

Criminal anthropology has of late been receiving much attention at the hands of scientists, and the subject appears to have arrived at that stage when there is more of assertion and assumption than of ascertained fact. Of all this illogical writing a statement which appears in a recent volume by Mr. Havelock Ellis on "The Criminal" strikes us as the most objectionable, and the furthest from fact. Mr. Ellis asserts that "in all countries religion, or superstition, is closely related with crime," and he adds that "it seems extremely rare to find intelligently irreligious men in prison." The writer of these astounding assertions does not appear to have any statistics to put forward in support of his theories, and we therefore may leave them to be dealt with by those who, from long familiarity with our criminal classes, are able to show their fallacy.

We regret the multiplication of those fictitious narratives that are founded on Bible story. By invented incidents and situations the reader is too often brought to a position in which he finds the milder light of the Gospel record tame and unsatisfactory as compared with the glare of the romancist. We by no means place on the same level all works of fiction into which the personages of the sacred narrative have been introduced, but of the best of them we feel that they altogether fail to represent to us the Christ of the Gospels. In substituting trivial details for the inspired narratives, and an element of romantic sentimentalism for the concise facts of the New Testament, they only succeed in showing the inability of human fancy to deal satisfactorily with that Divine life which has been pictured for us by the Holy Spirit.

We are glad to see that a Bill has been prepared to amend the existing Acts in regard to Artisans' Dwellings. Power is to be given to local authorities to make close inspection of their districts, with the view of discovering premises unfit for human habitation, the demolition of which may be ordered by a "court of summary jurisdiction." A measure of the kind with extensive powers, and providing for prompt application of remedies, is urgently wanted. We trust that all who have it in their power to forward the passage of the Bill will do so in the interests of the crowded poor.

A correspondent writes expressing cordial approval of the article entitled "Conferences and Conventions" in last week's paper. He says:—

> This leads me to give vent to my long pent-up feelings relative to the need of much more united public prayer to Jehovah than is usually allotted to us in public gatherings. I was delighted, a short time ago, to read in THE CHRISTIAN an account of a happy meeting under Mr. Reginald Radcliffe's guidance, when prayer predominated over all other engagements.
> I wonder if many other disciples have the same longings for more of the breath of Jehovah, imparted in prayer, than we usually are permitted to enjoy in public meetings. Is it not possible to awaken a keener appetite for getting upon our faces in large conventions? I believe that, if such were the case, many men and women would give themselves to the Master's service. On all sides God's angels would hear the cry: "Lord, send ME—send ME."

The Lord will, assuredly, be inquired of respecting his work in the world. Let us approach Him; He will draw near unto us, and not only breathe a blessing upon us, but own our endeavours for his glory.

The Methodist New Connexion and the United Methodist Free Churches are nearing the point of organic union. They separated from the parent Wesleyan body on grounds more forcible then than now. The united Conference is to comprise ministers and laymen equally. This Conference is to have control of the institutions, funds, ministers, and discipline of the amalgamated churches. The ground of church membership is still to be repentance towards God, faith in Christ, and a consistent life. A yet larger union of Methodists may come out of this, and the present result of prayerful deliberations will have the congratulations of Christian men.

The number of appeals received daily is bewildering, and the quantity of circular literature that finds its way into the waste-paper basket is immense. Yet, with some glaring exceptions, these appeals represent a large amount of loving, Christian activity in leading souls to the Saviour, and of kindly endeavour to relieve want and sorrow, and to rescue and restore the helpless and the lost. It is distressing to think that the chief burden of these gracious souls, without whose labour our cities would be unsafe to live in, is the need of money to carry on their work. This gives rise in some cases to a fierce competition for existence, in which the survival goes to the most pertinacious, who is not always the fittest. If Christians—professed followers of the Lamb—were brought to give in any degree adequately to their means, there would be an ample supply for the utmost extension of home and foreign work. Is it not consistent with our knowledge of the mind of God to believe that, if workers were unitedly to pray that a spirit of sympathy with those who are in need, and of generous giving, should be poured upon all his people, and if workers of every sort would seek the welfare of God's work in the hands of others as much as in their own, the answer would be graciously bestowed?

The difficulties with which the agents of the London City Mission have to contend, the strong phalanx of secularism arrayed against their work, the infidel and demoralising literature which is sown broadcast by thousands of hands, and the abounding drunkenness, formed very proper topics at its late annual evening meeting in Exeter Hall. But the wide-spread blessing of which these earnest and self-denying men are the instruments was also properly emphasised. We regret to hear that the Mission, with its 500 evangelists, has experienced a serious falling off in receipts. The extension of denominational missions may to some extent explain this. It would be sad, however, for such an admirably conducted and unsectarian Society to suffer on that account.

A scheme which originated among Oxford University Nonconformist students calls for a note of commendation. A movement hitherto conducted somewhat informally is now to take a definite shape. In Canning Town, at the extreme east of London, a centre for religious, social, and educational work among artisans and the poor is to be established forthwith, and will bear the designation of Mansfield House. Here the University men are to find temporary residence, and also graduates and others living in London, who are engaged in professional duties and preparations. They will thus gain some insight into the conditions of life among the London labouring classes, and engage in all kinds of religious and ameliorating efforts on their behalf. The scheme has been elaborated with great carefulness, and unquestionably moves in a right direction.

A letter in Saturday's Spectator on the question: "Did our Lord quote from the Septuagint?" is of considerable importance. Various learned authorities have assumed that since Christ quoted from the LXX, and the LXX do not translate the Hebrew with exactness, therefore our Lord does not give his sanction to the infallible authority of the Old Testament, as we have it in the Hebrew language. This method of reasoning has been put forth with a dogmatic positiveness that seemed to close the mouths of opponents. A thoughtful writer and student of Scripture, of Temple Ewell, Dover, has conclusively replied. He admits the verbal differences of the Septuagint translation; but affirms, after "renewed and careful examination," that our Saviour's quotations, as given in the Greek of the Evangelists, either do not favour the conclusion of his quoting from the LXX., or if He did so in the ten instances affirmed by Grinfield, they were cases where the Hebrew "is exactly as the LXX." The lesson that his letter teaches is, to be wary of the assumptions of the learned critic.

A pleasant instance of Christian liberality and sentiment was stated at a recent meeting in connection with the laying of memorial stones for a new Congregational Church, East Dulwich. Rev. A. A. Ramsey, late of Dewsbury, has been preaching in a temporary iron building. An Episcopalian worshipped there one Sunday evening. He saw the place full, and, approving of the evangelical tone of the sermon, offered £20 if a permanent building could be erected. He has increased the £20 to £100, and a Churchman's initiatory generosity has been followed by the handsome, capacious structure now in course of erection.

A very peculiar decision on the part of the Supreme Court of Justice in the State of Wisconsin reaches us through The Manchester Examiner. It would seem that some public school teachers in the town of Edgerton were in the habit of reading at times, without any comment whatever, portions of Holy Scripture. The Roman Catholic priests instigated their people to move for a mandamus, commanding the School Board to show cause why the reading of the Bible in the public schools should not be prohibited. The petitioners stated that the version used was that known as King James's. "Being members of the Roman Catholic Church, and believing such version to be an incorrect one, inasmuch as the Roman Catholic Church alone has divine authority, as the infallible teacher and interpreter of the Holy Scripture," they demanded that the reading should be declared sectarian instruction.

The Circuit Court refused the prayer, but, strange to say, the Supreme Court granted it, deciding that the reading of the Bible in the public schools is unconstitutional. The decision was based on the argument that—

> Any pupil of ordinary intelligence who listens to the reading of the Bible will be more or less instructed thereby in the doctrines of the divinity of Jesus Christ, the eternal punishment of the wicked, the authority of the priesthood, and in many other conflicting sectarian doctrines.

Of late the Romish authorities have taken to declaring their readiness to circulate the Scriptures, and their desire that their flocks should read them; but wherever we turn we find the same spirit of unswerving hostility to the Word of God, and it is difficult to reconcile the principle with the practice.

REQUEST FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on the following:—The Tent Campaign in London and several country towns and villages, in connection with the Evangelistic Mission.——A tent mission at Montrose, N.B., in connection with the Forfarshire Christian Union, now going on.——Evangelistic services at the Burslem "Wakes," during the last week of June, by Mr. J. J. Browne, of the London City Mission.——A sixteen days' tent mission at Wisboro' Green, by Mr. John Stanger.——That much blessing may attend the memorial stone-laying of the New Mission Hall and Institute at Pontymoile, Mon., on June 24, and the special evangelistic services in connection therewith.

The King's Highway.

BEWARE of teachers who have a specialty. Any sound doctrine is wholesome so long as it is held in due proportion with other sound doctrines; but when it becomes a specialty, and is pressed out of that due proportion, it becomes an error. Let us beware of being afraid of extremes. We are exhorted to buy the truth, and sell it not—the truth, the whole truth, nothing but the truth. Then let the Spirit of truth lead or drive us to the extremest issues of conflict and victory, of righteousness and peace.

Beware of teaching which causes perpetual introspection, instead of leading you to "look off unto Jesus." Beware of feeding on your own experiences, instead of on the Living Bread which came down from heaven, that a man may eat thereof and not die; for "except ye eat the flesh of the Son of Man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you." Beware of supposing that you have already attained or are already perfected, instead of counting all things loss, that you may know HIM, and the power of his resurrection (Heb. xii. 2; John vi. 48-58; Phil. iii.).

Beware of leaving the King's Highway—the true doctrine of the shed blood—the atoning blood—the blood of sprinkling; and turning aside into any by-path of teaching which interprets the blood to be the risen life of the Son of God, or anything else than blood shed on the cross to be the propitiation for our sins and for the whole world. For remember that the Scripture does not say that blood is identical with life; but that the blood is the life of all flesh; the life of the flesh is in the blood. Therefore, it must not be drunk, but poured out as water. But when Jesus came, holy, harmless, undefiled, a Lamb without blemish and without spot, to redeem us by his own blood, the blood of his cross, the shed blood, He said, "This is my blood, shed for many for the remission of sins, drink ye, all, of it." The notion that the blood of Christ is his risen life, denies the atonement of his blood in every passage where it is so interpreted, and substitutes the risen life of Jesus for the indwelling of the Holy Spirit.

Beware of putting new wine into old wine skins; and of mending the worn-out garment of the Old Covenant with a piece of the new cloth of the New Covenant. All false methods of holiness may be known by this—they put confidence in the flesh. They seek to renovate the old Adam instead of seeing a new creation in Christ Jesus. They seek to put away the filth of the flesh (symbolised by circumcision) instead of yielding it up to death and entering into resurrection life (symbolised by baptism): "Know ye not that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ, into his death were we baptized? Therefore, we were buried with Him by baptism into death; that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life." Ponder these pregnant words: for oneness with Christ is the essence of our salvation, past, present, and eternal.

THE GOVERNMENT OF SIAM has sent six of its brightest young men to be educated at Westminster College, of the United Presbyterian denomination, at New Wilmington, Pa.

MISSIONARY TRAINING AT AGRA.

WE have closed a successful session in our Medical Missionary Training Institute. All our junior students have passed their annual examination. Our three senior students have passed their final examination, have received their diploma of the Agra Government Medical College, and have been appointed as medical missionaries. Ahmed Shah goes to the Canadian Presbyterian Mission, Rutlam, Central India. The appointment is a most important one, inasmuch as Rutlam is in the native State of Indore. This is our second graduate who has joined the same Mission in another part of the State, viz., Oejein, one of the oldest cities in India. Ghasa Singh goes to the American Mission, Oude. Paulus goes to the Church Mission station of Shikarpur, Nuddea, Bengal. These three young men have followed their denominational flags.

A number of our men have been fortunate enough to gain college scholarships. Two of them are from the S.P.G. Mission. Two are from the Berlin Mission to the Santhals, Ranchi. One is from the Church of Scotland Mission, Sialkot, Punjab—in connection with which there has been a great outpouring of the Holy Spirit. The American Methodist Mission, Shajohampur, has one representative, and so has the Church Mission, Muttra.

Our graduates and prizemen come from all parts of the country, and belong to almost all the denominations in the North-West Provinces and the Punjab. Apart from the professional instruction they receive in the College and Institute, it is a good thing for these intelligent, educated Christian young men to mix together, pray, read the Scriptures together for four years. It is well for them to see that the denominational names by which they are called denote merely superficial differences; that the true spirit of our Lord's teaching is deeper, and more powerful than any earthly distinctions. We are practically an Evangelical Alliance, and I do believe, when the time comes for the formation of an Indian Christian Church, it will be found that our institution in Agra has considerably assisted in the bringing about of that much-to-be-desired event.

I hear of a considerable addition to our numbers this ensuing session. I should feel obliged by your speaking a word for the Santhals, and other casteless tribes, of whom there are about fifty millions in India. A number of our Church of England friends have generously provided scholarships for young men belonging to the Church of England, and for all these scholarships we are sincerely thankful. What we greatly need are a few more scholarships for Christian young men belonging to other religious denominations. Twelve more such scholarships would be most acceptable. A missionary brother, writing to me the other day, mentioned one or two young men he was anxious to send to us, if I could provide scholarships for them. My answer was, "Send the lads." I do not know where the scholarships are to come from; but I feel sure, if the Lord sends us the men, He will be sure to make provision for them. Friends wishing to assist us might send their gifts to Rev. Dr. John Lowe, Medical Mission House, George-square, Edinburgh.

THE GARDEN OF EDEN.

V.—The Dawn of Grace.

"Do you see yonder wicket gate?" said Evangelist to the man with the burden on his back? The man said "No." Then said Evangelist, "Do you see yonder shining light?" The man answered, "I think I do." The shining light was pure enough, and clear enough; but then it was far away, and waned in the distance till it was barely visible. So with the dawn of grace. Yonder, for the sinners in Eden, is a light shining in the darkness, faint, far away, obscured by their very consciousness of guilt; but then it is a real light, and no ignis fatuus; it is the kindling of hope; it is sufficient to guide their feet in the way of peace; and down through history it never dies away, and is never lost to view. It is not, indeed, the rising of the sun; but it gives promise of sunrise, and of that day in which it shall be seen that "where sin abounded, grace did much more abound."

What we find is not an outline or philosophy of "the plan of salvation" shadowed forth to the first sinners, but gracious action on God's part, with a mysterious intimation of gracious purpose which He designed to work out. He had already shown forth in a measure his wisdom, power, righteousness, and goodness; henceforward there is to be a fuller disclosure of these attributes, with the added disclosure of saving grace. Man in innocence could not know all that was in God's heart; the compassion, the sorrow, the holy, yearning, patient love which stands up solitary in the universe; the self-sacrifice that went to Calvary. In a sinless world it was impossible to make disclosure of all this, as the virtues of balm cannot be known where there is no pain; or as the heroism of womanhood is not fully seen till, in a Grace Darling, it braves the danger of rock and tempest to save the lives of strangers; or till, in a Florence Nightingale, it fronts

> The trenches cold and damp,
> The starved and frozen camp,
> The wounded from the battle-plain,
> In dreary hospitals of pain,
> The cheerless corridors,
> The cold and stony floors.

Now that sin has entered, the disclosure of grace begins. It is not that God will rebuild what man has thrown down, and give back what man has wilfully cast away, and restore him to the old footing of Paradise. That footing is gone for ever; and an entirely new dispensation, established on other principles, is introduced. The dispensation overthrown in the Fall secured the Divine favour to man continuing in obedience, and doomed him to death if disobedient. Now Grace comes forward, not demanding a righteousness and enjoining thou shalt or thou shalt not, but recognising man's hopeless moral bankruptcy, and promising I will. Formerly man's standing was that of obedient creaturehood; God's purpose of Grace is not consummated till we receive the standing and the spirit of sons. It will be found that the Divine action with respect to man recognises that he is in an estate of death, and is designed to raise him out of that estate, and to kindle in his breast an immortal hope. It is not a mere reprieve that is granted—a postponing of retribution for nine hundred years, a sparing of the tree to see what can be done by care and culture. It is something altogether new and different from the past. It is the bringing in of a dispensation whose aim is recovery and the giving of life to the dead—a dispensation wherein "grace reigns through righteousness unto eternal life."

The first thing to notice is that God begins to seek his lost. It is not man that calls in the Divine help or supplicates the Divine pity. It is God who takes the first step and speaks the first word. In the cool of the day, as the evening breeze began to blow, the guilty pair heard the voice of the Lord God walking in the garden. In shame and fear—like two naughty children—they hid themselves in a thicket. A poor hiding-place; yet not poorer than sinners hide in to-day from those awful eyes before which hell is naked and destruction hath no covering. God seeks them out. "Adam," He calls, speaking the first word, making the first advance, "where art thou?" It is not Justice tracking the evil-doer, but Mercy seeking the lost—Mercy with forgiving heart and healing touch.

The next thing to notice is the indication that God is still man's friend, and has some purpose of kindness in his behalf. The indication is indeed faint, dim, mysterious; in part it is conveyed by what God does not say; it is not addressed directly to man, but only uttered in his hearing. Still there was enough to shadow forth that God took his side against the tempter and destroyer.

Farther, the race shall not be cut off. There was promise in this. For would God (being what He is) bring into existence, perpetuate and multiply a race for whom there was no hope? The very word, "seed," is thus, so far, an indication of some gracious design.

There shall be variance, enmity, war between the woman and the serpent—between the woman's seed and the serpent's seed. "Because thou hast done this," the Lord says, "thou art cursed above all cattle and above every beast of the field." The words at first sight appear to be directed against the miserable creature that was the instrument of man's ruin. We cannot but feel, however, that whether our first parents knew anything of it or not, the stroke is meant for a being behind the serpent. With this being in view, the foe alike of God and man, the Lord adds, "I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed; He shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel." The enmity is to be "put" there by God Himself. There shall be no mere sullen, slumbering dislike between the two; but enmity, coming out in actual conflict, ultimately in personal conflict between — not the woman but the woman's Seed, and not the serpent's seed but the serpent. Thus in dim outline we see a personal encounter, as it were, between two shadowy forms, in which man's Champion is wounded in the heel, while He crushes the destroyer's head. The intimation is brief and mysterious; the coming conflict is not dated—it might lie forward a lifetime, or many thousand years; but God's merciful intention is disclosed, and the hope is kindled of a Redeemer from their fallen estate. There is no token that our first parents understood the sweep and majesty of the dispensation of grace now introduced. But this was not to prevent their obtaining the benefit of it. It was enough that God Himself saw the way clear for Mercy to go forth unto salvation, and that they trusted Him. The "manifestation of righteousness" herein was reserved for distant ages, when He should set forth his Son as a Propitiation (Rom. iii. 25, 26). And now "we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of his grace."

An instrument of music that once produced fine sounds is mishandled and injured. A master repairs it, and in repairing it enlarges its compass, so that it might be used in a nation's jubilee. This is a poor parable of God's action in dealing with man. He takes in hand our ruined humanity; and if now the instrument can give forth notes of deepest sorrow, it can also rise into a hallelujah which for loftiness and grandeur was before impossible.

Elizabeth Barrett Browning, in "The Deserted Garden," describes her child-happiness in its bowers, telling of the smooth circle of mossy ground where she used to sit, the old garden rose-trees that hedged it in, the happy hours that glided for her there in silence while a neighbouring thrush made the gladness musical, the childish heart "delighting in delight"; and then she closes her poem with the lines:—

> It something saith for earthly pain,
> But more for Heavenly promise free,
> That I who was, would shrink to be
> That happy child again.

And should we exchange the life opened up for us through grace, with its glorious possibilities and prospects, for even the old Paradise restored? In place of the standing of happy creaturehood and a golden age—grand as it is to be the creature of such a God—is it not grander infinitely to be "the sons and daughters" of the "Lord Almighty"?

SALVATION ARMY IN FRANCE.

WRITING from Bordeaux on May 31, Mrs. Booth-Clibborn says:—

After many pressing calls, I have been at last able to come and help my comrades here. I find them surrounded by the greatest difficulties and spiritual death; dead Catholicism and infidelity; and with this, extreme poverty. Yet a blessed work is going forward in eight towns and villages around. It was most touching to hear these simple people praying the other evening with the greatest ardour for the salvation of the mixed audience present. Eight persons remained with us to pray for the forgiveness of sins. It was beautiful when these seeking ones could join in the refrain, "His blood washes whiter than snow."

A priest of this district has received much good from reading a book called "Conqueror," written by my husband; he quotes it in his pulpit, and has become a true friend of ours. He said to one of our officers: "You are to our Catholic Church what the true prophets were to the false ones."

Our first meeting here was one of the most remarkable gatherings I have ever seen in France. There were 600 of the élite of Bordeaux, magistrates, professors, barristers, &c., almost all utter strangers to the love and power of God. Manifest signs of sympathy and interest showed that the truth is working. Yesterday, again, we had a splendid meeting in the Alhambra; these meetings are the beginning of a series in this town.

Our Training Homes in Paris are full with bright French cadets. The results of one year's work at Rue Auber have surpassed our highest expectations; God has been good, and has saved there a splendid band of soldiers, many of whom will shortly become officers.

Work Among French Priests.

(Concluded from last week.)

NEW CASES.

THE new cases include those of some ex-priests who had left the Church of Rome before they came to us. Although we have helped them, we claim neither the honour nor the responsibility of their accession to the Reformed Churches. We will take the case of M. S——, formerly "vicaire" in a town in the West, where the Protestants are numerous and influential. It was here that this Abbé S—— (whose uncle is priest in a neighbouring town) learnt to see things in a different light to what had been taught him in his seminary, and to appreciate the Protestants and their principles. He did not at first seek refuge in our Reformed Church, but determined to assert liberty of opinion. He would dispense altogether with the worship of God, and imagined that he could so satisfy his hunger and thirst for complete independence of action. He soon found out, however, the empty pretensions of this so-called free-thought to satisfy the soul, and ere long adopted Protestant doctrine. Having this convert has remained ever since firm in Protestant principles, and given testimony of his faith in Mr. McAll's meetings in Paris and elsewhere. He obtained employment in an iron company, but when the "patron" heard he was an unfrocked priest, the post was taken away from him. His uncle had used his efforts to bring this about, at the same time urging his nephew to return to his priestly functions, hoping, by reducing him to starvation, to overcome his convictions, being all the while utterly regardless of the misery of the man's poor wife and little children.

In the good providence of God, who never leaves those who trust in Him, we were enabled to offer to this our brother, just at the moment when the iron merchant's doors closed upon him, a position as superintendent of a reading-room and soldiers' institute, which one of our committee (M. Arthur de Rougemont) has lately started in Paris, and where the ex-priest now resides, on a small salary, with his family.

We next cite the case of M. X.——, a man in the prime of life, of frank and winning countenance, with a scholar's love for literature and philosophy, and who is at this moment a curé in the east of France. He writes to us quite recently as follows:—"I have ten times attempted to write you, and each time, unnerved and discouraged, I have torn up my MS., which should have conveyed to you long ere this the expression of my gratitude. The perusal of the papers you have lent me on the subject of Protestant work, and above all the spirit of toleration and charity of those who superintend it, have alike surprised and edified me. Although alienated in heart from Roman Catholicism, which I know only too well, I do not know enough of Protestantism to appreciate it as it deserves. I should like to be placed in relations with some pastor near me, who would have more leisure than yourself, and could act as my confidant, adviser, and friend. I await with impatience the day when it shall please God to release me from this false and painful position. How can I best hasten the hour of my deliverance? I have told you I should prefer of all others a post as pastor or evangelist amid Protestant surroundings. I would willingly accept a temporary engagement, either in a family or a school, or even in a printing house or library, or I would go to England or America."*

* Since above was written, M. X—— has decided to leave the Roman Catholic Church, and we have placed him with a pastor, where he is preparing, by prayer and study, for evangelical work.

It is not only from different parts of France that we receive these letters. We have one from a priest in the Brazils, and from Belgium comes a communication of rather a remarkable character from a Benedictine, of whom the pastor writes us as follows:—"I know you are interested in helping priests who come out of the Roman Catholic Church, and I am sure you will give a kindly welcome to M. Z——. I am personally impressed in his favour." We give the following nearly at full length, that our readers may fully understand his need, and let us know if they hear of any post likely to suit him:—

"I come to you as a stranger, with no claim or qualification for serving the Reformed Church, to which I do not yet formally belong; but I appeal to your charity only. The Lord Himself, whose love surpasses all other love, has promised to recompense even the cup of cold water offered to the least of his children. This thought emboldens me to ask for help, and satisfies me that my presumption will not be misunderstood. I was born in 1855, and am a Belgian citizen, but studied under a French priest, who, although a good scholar and linguist, neglected to instruct me in mathematics and natural science. Circumstances led me, however, to leave my home, and, with the consent of my parents, enter the Benedictine order. Here I studied theology, in 1872-3, fulfilled important duties, as master of ceremonies, house steward, prefect, &c. Then I was appointed official architect in Austria, and superintended for the Imperial Commissioners the restoration of cathedrals, &c.; in short, was a designer of ecclesiastical vessels for use in the sanctuary. Last year I was summoned to Rome by the Pope, but French work is more easy to me, and now my great desire is to find some sphere of work as instructor or secretary, so that I may enjoy more social intercourse with my fellow-men, and do good to their souls. I can speak German, and although I am not proficient in conversation in Latin, Italian, and Flemish, I have a great turn for these languages. I do not delay, sir, to acquaint you with my objects in seeking a different mode of life from that of a monk. I think you have already guessed them. They are not new to you, and are the same you hear of often. If you can find me anything I shall be so grateful if you will communicate with me."

We pass on this last request to our readers, who will see that we could lengthen this report considerably were we to give all the cases of priests who have appealed to us for help. Our difficulties and anxieties in this work can be imagined. Would it not be pain and grief to us to say, "Here is a prisoner sighing for deliverance, and who could enjoy it to-morrow if we could only procure the price of his ransom, that is, a humble position in life which would place him above want, and permit him to live in the society of his fellow-men; but we shall pass by on the other side, like the priest and the Levite in the parable, and stretch out to him no helping hand."

In our work amongst our Protestant brethren we have two great aims—showing love to the faithful, and evangelising the ungodly. It seems to us, therefore, impossible to pass by unheeded these piteous cries for help which are among the most significant and encouraging of the signs of the times in which we live.

E. R.

THE MINISTER OF EDUCATION in the colony of South Australia (Mr. J. H. Gordon) has warmly approved a resolution passed at a recent conference of school inspectors held in Melbourne, recommending that in the new series of school books there should be included lessons to show the physiological effect of alcohol on the mind and body, and the bearing of temperance on thrift. The minister intends to give immediate effect thereto, and also intends to consult the South Australian Alliance as to the best means of encouraging the formation of Bands of Hope in connection with State schools.

Letters from France.

IV.—DEAUVILLE.

ON Monday afternoon, May 12, we crossed over by steamer to Honfleur, and from there enjoyed a lovely drive of over ten miles to Deauville. This little town adjoins Trouville, from which it is separated only by the river. The season had not then commenced, so that in both towns many large and beautiful houses stood empty. The racecourse, which is unhappily one of the chief sources of attraction, is in Deanville. Of course, both towns have their Romish churches with its idolatrous worship. There is, however, in Deauville a large and handsome edifice belonging to the Reformed Protestant Church of France. To us it appeared a suitable building, and in an excellent neighbourhood for doing good work. But during the whole time we were there—from Monday until Friday in the following week—we never saw the doors open. Every morning, and often throughout the day, the bells of the Romish church rang, giving proof that there was activity there; and we could not but regret that the Protestant building should be unused so long. "A living dog is better than a dead lion." Protestantism in France is worthless if it is not living and aggressive. No doubt it is difficult to keep a man for active work on the spot; but surely there are wealthy men in connection with that Church who could easily provide a pastor for such an important place. We are glad to note that the Reformed Church is moving in the direction of more earnest evangelistic work, and we trust that Deauville will not be forgotten.

But there is a living Protestantism in Deauville, which has its centre in a neat, attractive, English-looking building, erected in answer to prayer and faith, as Mr. Cook delights to tell. It provides a place of welcome for the sailors who put into that port, and English services are held for their benefit. A missionary and his wife—Mr. and Mrs. Hanson—are actively employed visiting the vessels, inviting the sailors to the work and telling them the Gospel. But the chief work done at the hall is on behalf of the French people. Mr. Hanson has already acquired so much French as to enable him to speak to the people, though not yet to preach, except through an interpreter. It is this work among the inhabitants of the place that impressed us as most valuable.

On the evening of our arrival in Deauville, we found the hall almost full for a French Gospel service; and a similar meeting was held nearly every night during our stay. The people showed the greatest interest in listening to the message; and it was exceedingly refreshing to hear their hearty singing of Gospel hymns. We regard this as a most important work, and cannot but rejoice that God has put it into the heart of Mr. Cook and his excellent wife to take the responsibility of it. It cannot be carried on without expense; and we should be glad if some who sympathise with it would show their sympathy by seeking to help it.

The addresses in French are given by the preachers, who every other Sunday visit the Reformed Church; by a colporteur, who is employed in that district; and by a lady who is doing excellent work in Deauville. A final letter must tell the story of this lady's interesting proceedings.

Of the colporteur there is not space to speak at length. His work is most valuable, and it is hoped that a tricycle, which has been sent over for his use, will make his work less wearisome and more effective.

GEO. WAINWRIGHT.

REV. B. FAY MILLS is said to be one of the most successful evangelists in the United States. During a mission at Newark, N.J., 3000 cards were sent in by those desiring to become Christians.

Anglo-Indian Evangelisation.

A MEETING of this Society was recently held in the Lower Exeter Hall, Lord REAY, ex-Governor of Bombay, presiding. Many of the ladies and gentlemen present had been in India. The speeches were short and impressive.

Rev. J. FORDYCE, the secretary, made a brief statement. The Society is thoroughly Protestant, but unsectarian. Its work is chiefly among our countrymen who are far from churches and chapels. There are ten evangelists, some of whom give part of their time to this service. Their districts are in Northern, Southern, Eastern, Western, and Central India. An increase of agents is greatly to be desired, chiefly along the rapidly extending railways, and among tea and coffee planters.

Sir CHARLES U. AITCHISON, in moving a resolution regarding the claims of our scattered fellow-countrymen in India on the churches of the home lands, said those whose spiritual welfare the Society seeks are our own kith and kin. The solitary positions of many of them are places of special temptation, where the pious lessons and practices of the old home are apt to be neglected and forgotten. The environment is often fatal to a high spiritual tone. Solitude is the devil's opportunity; and it is doubly so when to solitude we add the heat, the damp, the languor, depression, and disease incident to life in a tropical country. Thank God, there always have been men and women who keep the lamp trimmed and the light burning. There has also been a great improvement in the religious life in India during the last half-century. The transfer of the Government to the Crown has opened up the country in a marvellous way to British capital and British enterprise. Communications have so developed by steam and electricity that India has been brought close to England, and more under the intellectual, moral, and religious forces that have made England what she is. But these very circumstances, so far from lightening the responsibilities of the Society, add to the claims upon it. The struggle for existence in England is becoming keener every year, and young Englishmen flock out in increasing numbers in search of a career in India. They do not settle for the most part in the great commercial centres, but are scattered over the country in twos or threes for the collection of the produce, and the development of the resources of the country by which the commercial centres are fed, so that the area of isolation is ever increasing.

Sir Charles illustrated the progress of India by a series of remarkable facts regarding railways, telegraphs, the tea trade, indigo factories, the forest department, &c. These all involve service in positions of greater or less isolation, where there are no opportunities of public worship from year's end to year's end. And this state of things is bound to grow. The same causes are at work with ever-increasing force. All this is for the good of India no doubt; but it increases the need of a Society like this. How can we best help in this cause? The classes to whose spiritual interests we seek to minister can only be reached by itinerant evangelists. As a rule the larger stations are well enough provided for, or rich enough to provide for themselves. But the scattered population are generally destitute of Church ordinances altogether; the sound of the Gospel is never heard, unless perhaps some pious layman gathers a little congregation together. The people are generally ready to contribute to the extent of their means. Co-operation is essential; and the agency, to be of any use, must be catholic and unsectarian. The one object of the Society is to preach the Gospel to those who are beyond the reach of Church ordinances. It seeks to encourage and make use of all Christian influences and agencies, and to feed among our scattered fellow-countrymen the flame of spiritual life.

Mr. MARK J. STEWART, M.P., in an earnest speech on the responsibility of Christians at home, urged Christian ladies to do more in this cause, and referred in complimentary terms to their marvellous tact in securing aid for good objects.

Colonel MORTON, of Mildmay, moved a resolution in reference to the connection between the work of this Society and missions to the heathen; he gave graphic illustrations from his co-operation with the late Dr. Somerville (who went to India in connection with this Society in 1874), at Delhi; with Mr. Fordyce, at Peshawur; and with others at Chukrata and Lucknow. Dr. R. N. CUST, made an earnest appeal for Eurasians as well as Europeans; he somewhat surprised the audience by saying that the time is coming when the English must leave India.

Lord REAY said he agreed with most that had been said, but he could not concur with Dr. Cust as to leaving India. He could see no reason to expect this, if the English would act in India on Christian principles. In reference to the object of the meeting, his Lordship said he had himself benefited by the operations of the Society, having sat with pleasure and profit under its evangelists. If our countrymen are to be saved from the danger of utter lapse, we must send the Word of God to them, and it must be by such means as the Society employs. Eurasians must be cared for as well as Europeans. His Lordship spoke of the reflex influence of the operations on the natives, and on the work of missions. He asked all to help heartily in this matter, which was of importance to our fellow countrymen in India, to the heathen, and to the Churches at home, who would eventually reap the benefit of these operations.

Anglo-Saxons in India.

NEGLECTED ENGLISH AND EURASIAN PROTESTANT BOYS AND GIRLS.

REV. T. CRAVEN, missionary of the American Methodist Episcopal Church, urges the need for an Evangelical Christian School Society, to promote religious education and influence among European and Eurasian children. He writes:—These are largely neglected on the part of English Missionary Societies. True, the Church of England has under her wing schools for this class in many stations. They are supported by fees and grants in aid. The boarding and tuition fee is generally beyond what a European in a very subordinate place can afford to pay. His children have, therefore, to go without an education: no, hardly so, for the Roman Catholic Church, alive to the importance of caring for the young, immediately solicits their attendance in its schools. Thus, in the convents and schools now planted in a majority of the Hill stations, as well as in the large number of their Plain schools, are hundreds of English and Eurasian Protestant boys and girls.

With the advent to India of William Taylor—now Bishop Taylor, of Africa—the Methodist Episcopal Church of America commenced to give prominent attention to this work. This Society has schools in Bangalore, in Poona, in Calcutta, Cawnpore, Mussoorie, and Naini Tal. The American Presbyterian Church has a very flourishing school for girls in Mussoorie. Indeed, this school has a unique prestige, it being necessary to make application months before the opening of the school. Speaking generally, the schools, especially the girls' schools, are self-supporting. The boys' schools are not so, in some parts of the country. They never would be, did the schools do for all European boys in India what we think they should do. Take the schools of the Methodist Episcopal Church. The policy which this Society (now under the care of Bishop Thoburn) wishes to work is, an education for every English boy and girl in India, and every Eurasian boy and girl—whether fees can or cannot be paid by the boys' parents or guardians. Several of these schools have the cost reduced to a minimum.

THE IMPORTANCE OF THE WORK is the special subject to which the well-wishers of missions in India should look. It is unworthy of us, who are taught to care for each other, to leave the unfortunate offspring of our race to the tender mercies of Asiatic sympathy. We know what that is, and we know that the majority of Europeans are as indifferent out in India as the rajahs and nawabs to the sufferings of a poor European waif. I visited a large city last winter, and in a walk found a Scotchman, three bright boys, and their native mother, in a most abject condition, living under a grass roof, closed in on three sides. A three-legged chair, no table, and but one native bedstead that would not bring sixpence if sold, was the furniture. This family is a type of many more I knew during my fourteen years of life in Lucknow. They are found in every city. Sinners! Yes, sin's marks were too evident, but are we also to visit the sins of parents upon the children? Our work is to rescue those fine boys, save those dear little English girls from the loose morality which marks the self-righteous portion of the English community. Two girls were saved the other day. Father and mother, besotted with drink—both English, he of good birth—died from that dreadful drunkard's disease. A good Samaritan passed by and began to look round for a school for the children. Said that noble evangelical Churchman to me: "The fees of our schools are so high, that there is not enough of the fund to which the father subscribed to warrant us in beginning to pay such high fees." One of the girls' schools of the American Church was applied to, and within its healthy atmosphere those girls found one who will patiently but firmly do as much as a lady can in leading them out of the bad ways of untruthfulness and deception into which they had fallen. Vice in the European youth of India is startling, engendered as it is by foul-minded "ayahs" and "bearers"—maid and male servants. There is being done when the chances are given. It is with the people of England to say how much of this rescue work is to be done.

The work on behalf of European boys and girls has a twofold mission side to it. In the first place:—It removes a certain great hindrance to the Hindoos accepting the Gospel. The Hindoos of good family look well to their kindred; take up the children of deceased relatives, and care for them. When they see we do not do the same, it is not difficult to imagine what they think of us. But when European youth grow to be conspicuously immoral in their lives, and are the loafers of the bazaar and the opium den, then imagine the ideas of the natives touching our religion. In another respect this care of our European and Eurasian youth is to affect mission work of all Gospel Christians. Anti-Christ is powerfully at work in India. The Church, the Sacraments, Mary, Saints—everybody before Christ. To-day the Roman Catholic Church is bending all her energies, spending her strength and means, in erecting and maintaining schools for the European and Eurasian boys and girls. These abound everywhere. Here and there may be a fugitive effort among natives; but the work which marks the and the matured plans, the persistent effort, patiently abiding for a time, but then suddenly securing the aimed-at goal, is their effort to secure the European youth domiciled in India. Twenty years of observation in India has led me to this conclusion. The duty of the Protestant Church is to advance and to conserve the English and Eurasian as much as the native population. And we conserve only so far as we see in white and black—in the Anglo-Saxon blood as well as the Asiatic, Hindoo and Mohammedan—the objects of our solicitous care.

DR. BARNARDO'S HOMES.

ANNIVERSARY MEETING AT ALBERT HALL.

MAGNIFICENT! That is the only appropriate word for the unique and memorable spectacle of which the Royal Albert Hall was the scene on the evening of Wednesday last week. Dr. Barnardo's institutions are now a very big affair, while in their variety of operation they reflect, in microcosm, the whole round of the activities of the Christian Church throughout the world. At his annual gatherings, hitherto convened in Exeter Hall, Dr. Barnardo has always illustrated the proverb that whatever is worth doing at all is worth doing well. This year, we may say, he fairly excelled himself. It was a somewhat bold and hazardous venture to move so far westward as Kensington-gore, and to a building where an Exeter Hall crowd might almost be stowed away in a corner. But his faith and bravery have received the justification of success.

CRIPPLE JENNY.

Those who have seen this most splendid of London's auditoriums on a great night, such as the "benefit" of a popular tenor, or prima donna, will not need to have the scene described; for those who have not, a pen picture would not amount to much. The sight that met the eye at the "benefit" to Dr. Barnardo's Homes lacked the glitter, and gaud, and colour of fashionable West-end society; but it had something instead that was far more pleasing and impressive to the true lover and student of human kind. It needed all the space of the great orchestra to accommodate the youthful choir of 1300 boys and girls, which Mr. Joseph Proudman swayed at will with his magic baton. In grouping and colouring they afforded a perfect picture. One section of the girls was arrayed in delicate pink, and another in blue, while a smaller section between wore garments of spotless white. Ranged behind them, on the sloping upper tiers of both sides, were the boys in trim sailor attire. A cluster of older singers flanked the organ on each side, and immediately in front of the organist's seat was the Boys' Band, in scarlet-edged uniform. As the noble Chairman well remarked, the choir had the heavy end of the evening's work; they provided a rich feast, both for eye and ear. A large portion of the area was taken up with a red-carpeted platform, which played a very important part in the proceedings of the evening. Arena, amphitheatre, boxes, balcony, and gallery were all well filled with eager spectators, who must have felt themselves more than rewarded for their journey so far beyond the usual limits of the May-meeting zone.

Punctually at six o'clock, the MARQUIS of LORNE, heir to all the broad lands of the dukedom of Argyll, took his place in the chair. Near by him sat Lord and Lady Kinnaird, Dr. Barnardo, Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, Canon Girdlestone, Canon Fleming, Canon Barker, Sir Arthur Blackwood, and a number of other well-known gentlemen, friends of the work. Some singing from the children admirably done, and accompanied by Mr. Proudman's usual telling spectacular effects, introduced the lengthy programme. Then the clear measured voice of Canon Girdlestone was heard in earnest prayer for the institutions and their inmates; in thanksgiving for every boy and girl rescued from misery, homelessness, poverty, and infamy; and in specially fervid petition for "him who is the centre and spring of this great work, and who has carried it on through evil and good report up to the present day." The Canon did not forget to pray that the cause of the truth and of the neglected children might prevail, and that present difficulties might lead to better legislation on their behalf.

THE CHAIRMAN'S ADDRESS, which followed, was modelled somewhat after the style of the deliverances by the late Lord Cairns, when he filled the presidential seat on successive occasions; and set forth some of the outstanding figures of the past year's progress. Lord Lorne facetiously compared himself to the first batter in a cricket eleven, who is only supposed to hold his willow straight for a given number of "overs"; his duty was simply to put straightly some figures which in this case, he said, were almost as eloquent as the charming voices of the children behind him. These figures told of the wonderful progress that had been made by the institutions since he last presided at Dr. Barnardo's anniversary five years ago. The income of the Homes has during that period risen from £60,000 to £106,000. The number of children who has then been dealt with was 8000; now it has mounted up to nearly 16,000. In 1889 there had been a marked increase in the operations all round, and the number of beneficiaries in residence at the various homes at the end of the year was 3259. The great point which Lord Lorne sought to emphasise was that during the twenty-four years in which Dr. Barnardo has been busy at this work of rescue and reclamation, no really destitute child has ever been refused admission. His Lordship also spoke very hopefully and cordially of the Emigration department. As a former Governor-General of Canada, of course he could tell from ample experience of the great advantages that await these transplanted waifs and strays in the fair and fertile Dominion across the sea. More than four thousand lads and lasses have already been sent to Canada, and everyone must join sincerely in the noble Chairman's expressed wish that many times the number may find healthy and happy homes in that part of Greater Britain, under the sheltering ægis of these institutions. The Marquis, who had journeyed post haste from Scotland in order to be in his place at the meeting, closed his remarks by an earnest appeal to the public for a liberal support of the work.

The "Song of the Fire Brigade" was rendered by the children with extraordinary dash and swing; and the realism of the performance was heightened by the loud tolling of the alarum and the jingle of sleigh bells in imitation of the rush of the fire-engine through the streets. An encore was demanded and given. When the audience had shaken itself together after this bit of pictorial music, it settled down for

THE DIRECTOR'S STATEMENT.

He judiciously asked his hearers to take the Report as read; and simply recited with due emphasis four of the chief figures referred to by the Chairman. Dr. Barnardo went on to say that he often wished he could transport all the good people in the West of London to his beloved East, where he would show them his boys and girls. People believe in what they see; and so he had resolved to-night to bring some of his young people to the West and let them be seen. Now we began to guess at the uses to which the Doctor was going to put the huge platform in the centre of the floor of the Hall. But the audience could not beforehand have imagined the series of delightful and dramatic surprises that were in store for them. We must attempt, very briefly, the impossible task of depicting in cold type these "divers illustrations" as they were termed in the programme—which, by the way, was in itself a work of art.

"Here we are among you," said the Director, "but we must continue our industrious habits. We have no leisured folk in the East-end. We work hard, and we are not happy unless we are at it. I am going to show you some of my boys at work." No sooner said than done. In a twinkling a group of youths hurried down the gangway from the extreme end of the Hall, uncovered five mysterious looking erections on the platform, and, almost before you could turn your head, were working away, as if for dear life, at their respective trades. In one corner, a little batch of shoemakers were repairing certain battered "understandings." In another, several tailors had squatted, and were making the needles fly, and the lap-goose fulfil its impressive function. At a third corner, saw, hammer, and chisel, were making the arched roof resound. In a fourth corner, a group of artisans were busy at some occupation which we did not catch, as our attention was arrested by the stalwart lads in the centre, who were chopping and "fixing up" some of those bundles of firewood so dear to the heart of the belated housemaid. A few moments of this industrious clatter sufficed to show how the thing is done. At a signal from Dr. Barnardo's whistle, operations were suddenly stayed; the working gear and appurtenances of the young tradesmen were gathered up, and the extemporised workshops vanished from the scene almost as quickly as they had sprung into being.

A TRADE PROCESSION.

"As there is no room for all our lads to do their work before you, I will ask a larger number to pass round in something like a procession, in order that you may really know how we are employed when we are at home. We will show you representatives of fifteen different callings that are taught in our various institutions." On they came, each section of the line of march carrying with it certain of the operative insignia of its trade, in the following order:—Matmakers, harnessmakers, printers, blacksmiths, wheelwrights, tinsmiths, engineers, bakers, carpenters, brushmakers, tailors, bootmakers, wood-choppers, aërated-water-makers, and packing-case makers. After perambulating the platform, so that everybody might have a good view, they retired in double-quick style.

"You will not suppose that all our children are so healthy and strong as these. We receive cripples, and those affected with many other incurable complaints. In fact our Homes are a great pool of Bethesda, with forty porches, and where the waters are always being troubled. Sixty-six crippled boys were admitted last year. Some of them will pay you a visit." Amid the eager expectant interest of the great throng there limped and hobbled slowly down the gangway, on to the platform, a touching little procession of lads, becrutched, and deformed. Marching up the dais to the front, in perfect rank and time, they halted and saluted the Director with "Good evening, sir." Retracing their way they cheerily repeated the salute to the audience, and anon passed out of sight. We could not help observing that many of the audience at this point seemed to find it necessary to call their handkerchiefs into requisition; perchance there was a more or less furtive tear that needed to be brushed away.

After some explanatory words from the master of ceremonies, there came into view a still more pathetic procession of feeble, helpless weans, mostly being led or carried in the tender arms of nurses. One lad trundled himself along on a low carriage. They looked a sorrowful little company, and we could well understand the force of the Director's remark that they were "compassed round by ill, and all the music of their lives is dumb." He added that these waifs, so handicapped in the race of life, are "At Home" in Stepney Causeway on Tuesdays, from 3 to 5.30 p.m., and visitors would receive a hearty welcome, as well as a cup of tea. One of this sad and strange company, "little Jacob" to wit, blind from his birth, had the honour of being introduced to the Chairman, Mr. Spurgeon, and Lord and Lady Kinnaird. "The little fellow," said Dr. Barnardo, "though dwelling in darkness, is as happy as possible."

We know we are recklessly overstepping our space, and yet we must reserve a little to tell how we were next favoured with a small detachment of the "Babies' Brigade," who, to the number of a hundred, hold high revels at their Castle, near Hawkhurst, in Kent. A most engaging lot of cherubs they were, and one chubby, self-possessed little fellow, who wandered within arm's length of the reporters' table, ran the imminent risk of being feloniously appropriated on the spot. The crescendo in the scale of interest had been visibly growing, and when a little boy and girl were brought forward, as nearly as possible in the condition in which they were rescued from a poverty-stricken den in Spitalfields a couple of days before. Poor mites, they looked a trifle scared at being introduced into so much light and warmth and admiring attention. They had been washed, we suppose, but their clothing was very ragged and scant, their features pinched, and their faces very pallid and wan. When Dr. Barnardo had selected two little beauties from the choir, one in pink, and another in white—the former rescued only a year ago—and set them side by side with the two fresh arrivals from the slums, the cumulative argument was complete, and we felt that any further "illustrations" of this harrowing kind would only be an anti-climax. Putting one hand on the ragged girl, a mere bundle of rags and bones, and another hand on the angel "harmony in white," Dr. Barnardo drew them together, and said, with a tremolo in his voice, "Why should not this one be like this? By God's help she shall." And the ringing cheers of the great throng came as an answering "Amen!"

This very realistic, but singularly effective and appropriate chapter in the proceedings did not end till we had surveyed with gratified interest a band of youths soon to start for Manitoba.

TRAMP, TRAMP, TRAMP, THEY CAME

dressed in true backwoods-man's attire, looking fit for anything, and having in them the making of sturdy, industrious, trustworthy citizens of the great and growing North-West. Probably we shall hear some day that from among them have come mayors of cities yet unborn, and leaders of their fellows in all that is manly and good.

Dr. Barnardo's closing message, when the young emigrants had retired, was to this effect, "We have no money in hand. We rely on the goodness of God, and of his servants whose hearts are touched to send us help." Then he gave place to the little girls from Ilford, who took the platform, and went through a series of very graceful and pretty calisthenic evolutions. Judging from the appearance of the girls, the drill and other training received has not only given them abounding health, but an intelligence of demeanour and promptitude of habit that must stand them in good stead in the years to come. The same remarks apply to the boys from Leopold House, who went through some very exciting exercises in vaulting, and also had musical drill. Both girls and boys were greatly cheered by the audience, who seemed to extract special enjoyment from the pleasing spectacle.

It is high time to come to the speaking. First of all there was

MR. SPURGEON'S SPEECH.

The Tabernacle pastor ascended the rostrum with difficulty, and his looks certainly did not belie the words in which he referred to his own physical weakness. I am very much afraid, he said, that I shall not make you all hear, but I will do my best. This thing speaks for itself; it needs no voice of mine. What a grand work it is. I feel as ill as I can be, and the sight of what I have seen has taken out of me what little strength I had. However, I would rather stand here in dumb show than be absent. (Having read a resolution, pledging the meeting to liberal sympathy, and practical support of the work of the Homes, he continued:) You must support it. You dare not do otherwise. I feel glad you have paid for your admission, and that there is to be a collection. It reminds me of a notice given at a small Orphanage, where the minister said: "Friends who come to dinner must bring their own refreshments, and not eat the orphans." You have had a grand treat, and it will not be at the expense of these children. And now you have to give as liberally as ever you can. There is nothing like bringing this work directly before you. Many of us do not understand the poverty of the poor; we have not seen it. We do not know what rescue work is; we have not been in it. But when it comes before us in this way, our sympathies are moved, and we feel we will do the utmost we can. These children belong to you. You would not mind taking any of them home. I do not say to any mother here that they are as handsome as her own children; but I really think they are. The girls have lovely faces. When I think of what they would have been, I can but praise the grace of God which has already made a manifest change in their outward appearance. I do not, of course, mean saving grace, but the grace which lifts from the dunghill and brings out the better part of human nature. Oh, to what can nature rot! Leave it to itself, and what corruption, what putridity may come to manhood! Take it, train it, renew it, save it, and what is there nearer to God than ransomed manhood! You are bound not to allow the rottenness; you are bound to do your best to rescue and to save.

BEGGARS AND "SOFT TOMMIES."

I wish we all realised our kinship with each other: our kinship with the poor and needy. There was an accident in Shoreditch one day: men gathered round a place in the street where the earth had fallen in, and one man stood smoking his pipe, looking on. A woman came up in a hurry and whispered something to him; in a moment he was all activity and energy; he was down there in his shirt sleeves. What had the woman said? "Jack, that is your brother down there." Ah, that made all the difference. If we understood that these are our children—our brothers and sisters, could we stand back from helping them? Per- you say, "What can I do?" Very likely you can do very little to help the poor; that is a difficult thing; we may do harm where we try to do good. I know a man—I know him better than I know anybody else—who used to help almost every applicant. At last he had a note from the police to tell him that they had discovered a book which was lent out to beggars. It contained a list of first, second, and third-class people to be begged of; and there was besides a little select company called "Soft Tommies." The police said they did not suppose the gentleman wished to figure for ever as a "Soft Tommy." It was myself, I am sorry to say; and I found out that in trying to do good I had done harm, and made a soft Tommy of myself. Well, I had rather be that than ever grow hard towards the poor and needy. Yet it is not everybody who can do this work. There is no other man in this place that can do what Dr. Barnardo has done. If there be such another man, he is guilty in not doing it. If any one of you have such gifts of organisation and management as he has, there is room for you. He will not reckon you a rival; and, if he does, it does not matter; it is a holy rivalry; go in for it.

But the bulk of us must be content to have a leader, and I think we shall go far before we find a better one than

THE HERO OF THE EVENING,

Dr. Barnardo. You little know the trouble he has—the care which hangs upon him. I have prayed with him in the hour of trouble, and I know. I have a fellow feeling with him. I have 500 children; but I have not the trouble he has with 3500. And I cannot say that I am penniless; I have not had to say that for many a year. I therefore feel we ought to help him, to help him largely, and to help him now. There are gentlemen here who have large amounts of money—more than they know what to do with. They will probably go and put it into limited liability companies, which is much the same as dropping it down a street grating. Instead of taking shares, especially in breweries, I recommend them to take shares in Barnardo & Company. Children like these yield to training, but it is hard work. Do you know, some of the boys are men while they are boys. The Doctor could tell you some stories of how precocious boys become. Like the man in Texas, who had got 20,000 acres. Somebody said: "You must have begun life early to have acquired so much." "Yes," he said, "I began life as soon as I was born." And these boys do the same. They are little men while they are children, and sometimes very difficult to manage. You would not like to hear all that street boys say. They say a great many things that other people would never say; mostly things that other people never ought to say. They are quick of apprehension, full of fun, full of vigour, full of determination. It needs great wisdom to manage even one boy. What sort of a boy is yours at home? Of course, he is admirable, for he is like his father. But I have no doubt you have got your handful to bring him up. What would you do with a hundred? Would you like to try? You would like it to be a very short week, if you attempted it. Think of dealing with thousands year after year. Dr. Barnardo must have a very heavy time of it. Let us relieve him of other cares. He has enough to do in looking after the internal management of the concern; let us relieve him of the care of looking after the money.

SEND IN THAT £100,000.

What an evening it would be if a Mr. Peabody would do that. Is he here? If he is, let him "shell out"; let other Peabodys do the same.

If we do not do our utmost, what will become of us? If you have read your histories, you have heard of a bell, a cart, and a cry in the middle of the night: "Bring out your dead; bring out your dead." It is the plague of London, and they are dying—tens of thousands in a day. There is a window there, with a light in it. There is a man up in that window. He was taken with the plague, sick near to dying. He found a remedy; he took the medicine; he is well. He is sitting up there this still night, hearing the cry of the dead-cart man. Has he told out the remedy? Never. Has he employed the physician to administer it? Never. And there he sits. Bring a rope, and let us hang him; he is a murderer. Not that he kills; but he does not save. You know the Gospel, the way of salvation. If you do not make it known to your utmost ability, I charge you with soul-murder. I hope I speak not to one who will be found guilty of the crime. I feel as if I could stand here and weep and break my heart for joy of what I have seen. But there is a dark side to it. What must the misery of London be! Shall we meet to denounce institutions that exist? Shall we meet to cry against the sorrows of poverty? I think there is a better way. "Master, master," said John, "the cows are in the wheat!" "How did they get there?" "The cows are in the wheat!" "How did they get there?" "Master, never mind how they got there; let's turn them out." So, to-night we will have no theories about what ought to be, but will not be. The cows are in the wheat; let's turn them out. You can do so in your measure by filling up the promissory papers that Dr. Barnardo has given you. Take these few words, that have cost me very much. How gladly I would stand up for this Institution, if I had the physical and mental strength, but I have neither. I have done my best; do yours.

CANON FLEMING'S WORDS.

were as hearty as they could be. We are not here, he said, to vindicate or defend these institutions. Under the blessing of God, their vindication and their defence are before us all to-night, in the faces and the voices of these children, and in the wonders we have seen upon this platform, as illustrations of this Christ-like work. The Canon went on to speak of the needs of the children whom Dr. Barnardo seeks to save. Our children, he observed, have been guarded and hedged about with all that is meant by the sweet and tender word HOME, and it is their own fault if they go wrong. If the boys, and especially the young men, of England to-day continue to indulge in betting, gambling, drinking, and vice, they are courting their own destruction. But the children whom we see here to-night, and thousands more like them, have been cast into the sea of life, either to sink or swim. Such children might almost turn round and say to God, and to their parents, if they knew them: "Why have you ever brought us into being?" Yet it is God who has sent them here, and He never forgets them. It is He who has put them into our hands that we might rescue them from their rags and misery and filth, and train them to be jewels in the crown of our Redeemer. We must recognise that childhood is the best time to lay hold of this fallen human nature of ours, before it becomes hardened by actual contact with evil. As a nation, we are bound to suffer if our children are neglected. Our hope for our country and for these children is in the Gospel of Christ; all reformation, all rescue work must be in connection with Christian education, based on the old Bible. When we look at some of the prevailing evils of the day, we are almost paralysed, and ask where the thing is to end, and how we are to stop it. We must all be animated to take some part in such great efforts as this. The Divine grace of Christ is so strong that no evil in this world can withstand it. If our Lord and Master were here as He was once upon the earth, He would pity these children; He would bless them; He would save them. He says to us in the words of the Book that never changes with the times, but which, thank God, is always changing the times: "It is not the will of your Father which is in heaven that one of these little ones should perish."

Mr. WILLIAM FOWLER, the treasurer of the Homes, made an urgent appeal for financial help. Then Mrs. MARY DAVIES sang with great feeling and pathos the song of "The Little Match Girl." The collection was made thereafter, while the band of piper boys strutted up and down the platform, and skirled with might and main. Prizes were given to 140 "old boys and girls" who had kept their situations for certain periods with credit and satisfaction. This agreeable function, gracefully performed by Lady Kinnaird, was a source of no little interest; a soldier and a postman came in for a large share of the applause. Lord Kinnaird and Sir Arthur Blackwood had further weighty words to say on behalf of the Homes, the latter making special reference to the legal proceedings that had been taken against Dr. Barnardo in order to rob the Institution of some of its inmates. In a supplementary statement Dr. Barnardo said that nearly 150 lads were leaving for Canada on the 20th of this month, and their transport money (£10 each) had yet to be provided. The collection and promises handed in, realised about £1850. The last song was sung, the benediction pronounced, and when a verse of the National Anthem had been rendered, the great audience bustled out of the hall, carrying with them the memories and impressions of a four hours' feast.

In connection with the emigration party above referred to, who were to leave Liverpool yesterday (Thursday), for their new country, two farewell meetings took place on Monday last, at the Aldersgate Y.M.C.A. Noonday Prayer Meeting, and in the evening at the Edinburgh Castle. At the Y.M.C.A. Mr. Paton took the chair, and the emigrants were commended to God in prayer by Mr. R. C. Morgan, Mr. Cook, and other friends. Dr. Barnardo supplied a number of interesting details concerning the party and his emigration work generally. Of the 142 boys and lads who composed this group, it appeared that no fewer than 77 were rescued in the first instance from lives of absolute homelessness and destitution upon the streets. The demand in Canada for such lads, it was mentioned, was enormous, and any number could be placed out in highly desirable situations. Dr. Barnardo stated that there was no more effective method of dealing with a pressing phase of the social questions of to-day, than an extended system of wisely planned, well organised, carefully followed up emigration. It was stated at the close that only thirteen boys of the whole number had as yet been paid for, and thus £1161 were still required in order to dispatch this party to Canada, free of cost to the general funds of the Institution.

For the Young.

A TALK ABOUT YOKES.*

A LADY had once to carry a very heavy bag to the railway station. She could not find anyone to carry it for her, so she was obliged to take it herself. It was such a heavy burden that every now and then she had to put it down for a few minutes to rest, and then take it up again. But there are some burdens which people cannot put down when they want to. Poor slaves in Africa have often had to carry a great forked stick, with the forked part fastened round their necks, and the other part reaching to the ground. This was to prevent them running away. They could not move quickly with this heavy burden, and they could not get rid of it, because it was fastened upon them by cruel men. We call such a burden, fastened round the neck, and resting on it, a yoke. How would you like to wear such a yoke?

There are men and women, and boys and girls, who think themselves free, and yet really wear yokes—heavy ones—which often make them unhappy. There was a girl once who was always getting into trouble. She had kind parents, and a happy home; but she had a yoke round her neck—it was a very bad temper. A little thing would put her in a passion, and then she said naughty words and did naughty things, and afterwards she was very miserable. She tried to conquer her temper, but it stuck fast to her. She could not get rid of the yoke. Is there any other yoke besides bad temper? Selfishness is another heavy yoke; a careless tongue is another; idle habits make another. There are many different kinds, but they are all part of one terrible yoke—the YOKE OF SIN.

Is there any way of getting rid of such a yoke? Perhaps some of you know the way. There were some Englishmen once in Africa who met a number of poor slaves wearing heavy yokes. When the cruel masters who had put them on saw the Englishmen, they were frightened, and made off, and the Englishmen set those poor slaves free. We cannot set one another free from the yoke of sin, but there is One who can do it. The Lord Jesus came down from heaven to "give liberty to the captives"—to set us free from the yoke of sin. There is a beautiful promise in Nahum i. 13: "I will break his yoke from off thee, and will burst thy bonds in sunder."

But what had the Lord Jesus to do first in order to break the yoke? He had to die for our sins. When He hung upon the dreadful cross, and cried, "It is finished!" the power of the great enemy, Satan, was broken, and now none of us need keep the yoke of sin pressing on our necks. If you will come to Jesus, the Saviour, He will break the yoke for you. That little girl with the bad temper found it so. She knew very little about Jesus, but one day when she was very miserable because of her temper, she asked God to help her. And by and by He showed her how He had sent his dear Son to die for her, and to break off the yoke. She learned to know the Lord Jesus, and she became free; the yoke was gone.

Perhaps some of you are thinking: "I have not a bad temper or a careless tongue; there is no yoke resting on me." There are some yokes which you may get so accustomed to that you hardly know how heavily they weigh. One of these is the yoke of conceit and self-righteousness. You do not want to get rid of that; you do not want to think that you are a poor sinner in the sight of God; you do not want to think that your conduct is ever ugly in the sight of man. That is because of the yoke. But you will never know what true happiness is till you get rid of that yoke. It presses you down to the earth, so that you miss the blessings God is holding out to you from above. But Jesus is able to break that yoke too. Do not be content to wear it any longer; come to Jesus, and He will set you free.

We read more than once in the Bible about "a yoke of oxen" (see 1 Sam. vi.; 1 Kings xix. 19). What does that mean? Two oxen yoked together by a piece of wood placed on their necks, so that they must both go the same way and work together. But they do not wear the yoke always. When is it put on? When there is ploughing to be done. When the work is finished the yoke is taken off. Is this yoke painful? It need not be, though I daresay the oxen are very glad when the yoke comes off, just as you are glad when school is over, or when your work is done. But there is a yoke which is so delightful that no one who has really borne it and felt it ever wants to get rid of it! What did the Lord Jesus say about a yoke? "Take my yoke upon you...for my yoke is easy, and my burden is light."

Who puts the yoke on the neck of the oxen, or the harness on the horses? Either the master puts it there, or it is done for the master. It is done because he desires it; the animals bear it because they are subject to him. He rules them. To bear the yoke of Christ means to be subject to Him: to let Him rule over you. Some people try to rule their own hearts and lives, but that rule never makes anyone happy. Christ is the good King, who makes his subjects happy. The animals which bear the yoke of men are very useful to him; they do his work. And to bear the yoke of Christ is to do his work. Remember what a "yoke of oxen" means—two. A yoke is companionship. Sometimes it seems as if the servants of Christ were left alone. There is a boy at school who has taken the yoke of Christ upon him, and he cannot find one school-fellow who has done the same; he feels lonely. There is a girl who loves Christ, and is trying to serve Him. But her sisters do not love Him; so she feels lonely. Paul once felt lonely, too. He had come to a great city to work for Jesus, and many people in Corinth were very angry and tried to stop his work, and to hurt him. But one night the Lord stood by him, and said, "I am with thee." And then he was no longer afraid or lonely. Again, he was shut up in prison chained to a soldier, and no friend near to speak a kind word to him. But in the silent night again he saw the Lord Jesus standing by him, and heard Him say, "Be of good cheer." But was Jesus only with him just then? Do you not remember what He had said to his disciples before He went back to heaven, "Lo, I am with you alway"? And we read at the end of Mark's Gospel that when they went forth to preach in the name of Jesus they had "the Lord working with them." Here is the one Companion who never leaves his friends. If you have taken his yoke upon you, He is with you. You need not be lonely if you can look up to Him. Though you cannot see Him with your bodily eyes, your heart shall see Him and feel Him if you will only believe that He is near, and that his word is true, "I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee" (Heb. xiii. 5).

Remember the three things that are meant by taking and bearing the yoke of Christ—being ruled by Jesus; serving Jesus; having Jesus with you. Is that not an easy, light, and blessed yoke to bear? It will never press heavily on you, but you may lay all your weight upon it, and rest in it, and rejoice in it.

Having studied the numerous models given in the book, they will be equipped for truth-displaying work, such as God will undoubtedly bless. The matter is always good, and the arrangement excellent.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.—A very successful three days' mission to children has been held at Ramsgate, conducted by Mr. W. R. Moore and Dr. Carlass, of London. There were two large gatherings on the sands. A garden meeting for young ladies was well attended. In all thirteen meetings were held; great interest was awakened, and many will have cause to thank God for sending his servants to Ramsgate. Mr. Sayer has lately held two missions at Upminster, Essex, and at St. John's Wood.

SPITALFIELDS GOSPEL MISSION.

MY DEAR BROTHER,—Will you allow me to remind all friends interested that since the autumn of 1883, when, owing to my thorough breakdown of health, I had to leave London, the Mission has been under the direction of Mr. James Sharpless, of 14, Sidney-square, E.

The lease of the premises having now nearly expired, we have not felt it right to incur the responsibility of an application for a renewal, the rent and taxes being so heavy. Consequently the work, in future, will be carried on by Mr. Sharpless under different conditions. His purpose is to devote himself more largely to a most important phase of Christian effort, viz., to carry the Gospel immediately to the people in their homes, lodging-houses, &c. This, doubtless, may be a more unobtrusive kind of work, but of its vital import and need I am fully assured. My long-loved fellow labourer, Mr. Sharpless, is, from many years' experience, eminently fitted for this kind of Christian labour—his heart is in it, he has just the needed gift, and the very poor receive him gladly.
—Yours faithfully,

WILLIAM JOSEPH LEWIS.

Swanmore-road, Ryde, Isle of Wight.

ABBEY-STREET SUNDAY AND RAGGED SCHOOL, BETHNAL-GREEN.—During its forty-ninth year this undertaking was greatly blessed. A promising work is done among the young men and women. The Sunday attendances of children averaged 1374 last year. We are glad to see that the little ones are encouraged to sympathise with mission work abroad. The needs of their own immediate locality are not allowed to render them oblivious of India's darkness, for the Zenana Mission Band has for three years been supporting a normal school for girls in Lucknow, at a cost of £30 per annum. The Mission and Institute have many well-approved adjuncts, all owing their existence to a love begotten of the love of Christ. The hon. superintendent is Mr. B. Wire, 50, King Edward-road, Hackney.

THE METROPOLITAN TABERNACLE BIBLE FLOWER MISSION, during last year, distributed 20,958 bouquets, a decrease of 2678 upon the preceding twelve months. In addition to visitation at the homes of the people, five workhouses and two infirmaries have been regularly supplied. As a rule, Roman Catholics refuse flowers and text cards, as well as books and tracts; but one of the workers of the Mission mentions a case in which, after a little hesitation, a leaflet containing an extract from a Spurgeon sermon was accepted by a Romanist; and since then the person has always been ready to take whatever has been given. Clearly some Papists labour under a delusion as to the motive and nature of the kindly attentions bestowed upon them by Christian workers. We trust that during the present year, this unpretending little agency will not be forgotten by those who can supply flowers for distribution. Hampers should be sent (carriage paid) in time to arrive in London by ten o'clock on Wednesday morning, and be addressed, "The Secretary, Bible Flower Mission, Metropolitan Tabernacle, Newington Butts, London."

China's Greatest Curse.

A FEW days ago, I was present as a spectator at a large meeting of native Christians in this capital, called together under the auspices of the Prohibition of Opium Society of Peking. In the course of the proceedings there arose in the body of the mission chapel a Chinese Christian, whose venerable appearance indicated that he was nearing the close of his earthly warfare. In earnest tones he suggested that the followers of Christ in Peking should issue a call to Christians of other countries to humiliation and prayer, on account of the traffic in opium which curses beyond description the people of his native land.

"The heart knoweth his own bitterness." Christians in western lands, either through ignorance, thoughtlessness, or consciences seared by listening to the unsanctified judgments of the world, may think lightly of the opium traffic; but it is no light matter to the Lord's people who have been gathered out of heathenism in China. There is no variation in their estimate of this devouring abomination. Everywhere the attitude of Chinese Christians towards the opium habit and traffic, is one of firm and uncompromising condemnation.

Not only does the Chinese Christian have to bear the taunt of having adopted the religion of "the foreign devils who are making China into a hell by their opium"; but he has also the bitterness of seeing the little Christian Church decimated by the infernal drug. Whole families sometimes go back into heathenism under its influence. In other cases the wife and mother alone remains true, widowed and childless, while her husband and sons are yet alive, more bereaved than if she had buried them. In some instances, the womanhood of the deserted wife is further outraged by having to witness her fallen husband's marriage with another. A month since, at a meeting of the Christian Women's Anti-Opium and Temperance Union of Tien-tsin, the proceedings were broken with sobs and crying, as the Christian wives and mothers recited their experiences of the ravages of the opium fiend.

Is God deaf to the wails of sorrow and double bereavement that continually arise from his people in China? Has He suddenly changed his attributes and forsaken them? Verily, no! Who will say that humiliation and prayer are not needed in Great Britain and India, together with fruits meet for repentance?

In a conversation with some missionaries at Peking upon converted opium smokers, one of the missionaries mentioned a case, at which another missionary remarked, "It is only safe to talk about such reformations when the persons are dead." Converted opium smokers justly call forth rejoicing both here and on missionary platforms in Great Britain, but in such instances it is necessary to rejoice with fear and trembling. In the English mail steamship that brought me to China (unhappily, along with 1500 large chests of opium from India), was Rev. J. Macgowan, of Amoy, returning with his family to the scene of his nearly thirty years' labours; and also six other missionaries. In Mr. Macgowan's recently published missionary book, "Christ or Confucius, which?" he narrates the deeply interesting story of a converted opium smoker, who is now one of the principal native preachers in the Amoy mission. He says: "The man is a miracle to me, and yet I never think of him without a dread feeling of anxiety that I cannot control. Is he really for ever free from that awful opium? For thirty-four years it held him in its grip. It controlled his life, and destroyed his manhood, and absorbed his will so completely that he had no thought of resisting it. Has it, indeed, given up its mastery over him? It would seem so, and yet some of its roots may still be embedded far down in his nature, and some day, in a moment of weakness or temptation, these may again assert their power, and he may once more fall under the awful and mysterious fascination with which opium charms its victims. My hope that this may not happen is entirely in the grace of God. No power of will, no selfish thought of life, no human affections will save him. Nothing short of Divine power can keep him a free man."

Can we be surprised, then, at the depth of feeling in the native churches upon this monster evil? That Chinese Christians desire a war of extermination against opium is illustrated by the pledge of their Prohibition of Opium Society at Peking and elsewhere.

Such indications of the intensity of feeling among Christian converts in China should be as the voice of God to their brethren in Great Britain, that, while they send the Gospel, they will insist upon the poisonous deluge of British opium being stopped at its Indian source. Let not the streams of salvation and damnation, of blessing and cursing, flow any longer together into China, while the latter might be speedily ended, under the blessing of God, by a supreme effort on the part of his Church in the lands of the guilty aggressor.

The evils which Great Britain has inflicted upon China by the opium traffic are too immeasurable to allow of adequate compensation being offered. The victims of wholesale massacre are beyond compensation. If it is too late for the British nation to do an act of justice in this respect, it is not too late for it to act righteously in the present, and thus perhaps avert the judgment which the crimes of Britain towards China richly warrant and deserve.

It is presumption to pray for a revival of religion in China, if by our silence we still connive at the destruction of her people. "To obey is better than sacrifice." Nothing will do so much to prepare the way of the Lord in this many-millioned land as humiliation, prayer, and action in Great Britain to destroy China's greatest curse.

ALFRED S. DYER.

MR. HENRY THORNE is giving stirring and impressive addresses at the Polytechnic, Regent-street, on Sundays: in the afternoon to young men, and in the evening to a mixed throng. No speaker on this platform has shown a greater combination of Biblical knowledge, evangelistic zeal, and varied powers of style and illustration. He will be at the Polytechnic on the remaining Sundays of the month.

LEAGUE OF KINDNESS.—Miss E. T. Young, Petersfield-lodge, Cambridge, desires to know if any of our readers will undertake to distribute leaflets on the League of Kindness among children at the different watering-places during the summer. The object of the League is to help the poor to obtain suitable clothing at a nominal price, and also to bring a little sunshine into the children's lives in some of the poorer parishes of South London.

MR. JAMES DUPE,

Open-air Evangelist, Nottingham.

THE analogies between the kingdoms of the physical and the spiritual world are many and wonderful. One of the most striking of these is the variety that marks both. God is not the author of monotony in nature or in grace. He produces multiplied types that are perfectly distinct; yet each ministers to the common pleasure and the common good. There is an almost measureless contrast between Paul the Apostle, greatest Christian metaphysician that the world has produced, and the young convert whose whole scheme of logic is contained in the phrase, "I'm so glad I'm saved." But there is as much room for both in the Church of God, as there is in the realm of nature for the cedar tree and the hyssop plant that groweth on the wall

The good brother whose portrait we furnish to-day would make a poor show in any competition for the honours of senior wranglership; but his life illustrates the possession of a power that has never yet sprung from the accumulated wisdom of all the schools, ancient and modern. Mr. JAMES DUPE is now well advanced in years. For nearly half a century he has been a whole-hearted and successful evangelist among the common people throughout the Midlands, from which he hails.

Our friend came of a lowly stock, so far as worldly position goes. At the age of five he began to work for his daily bread, so that his scholastic privileges were not excessive. In the course of his life he has known pretty well the meaning of "hard times"; he began to take lessons in that school very early. He also went to Sunday-school, but he was too restless to take kindly to its needful restraints. He would rather have been somewhere else, testing his skill with hook and line. He tells how on one occasion, when about thirteen years old, he gave his Sunday teacher "a receipt" for some ill-merited discipline, with the result that he was turned out. The Quakers in Nottingham, where he lived, tried their hand with him at a Sunday morning class, and he showed his gratitude, in part, by trying to sell the Testament with which he was provided. He got into queer company, which did not discourage his natural leanings towards the stolen delights of unlawful fishing and other forms of poaching. Indeed, he confesses that he was not averse to witnessing a prize fight. He figured in various escapades, of which we have not space to speak particularly.

Like many others, he entered the bonds of matrimony without much thought as to its responsibilities. So we are prepared to hear that now and again there was "no bread in the house." Of course he and his wife and child "must have summat," if they were not to starve. Therefore, he would resort to poaching, which is a risky as well as an illegal pastime. On one occasion he and a chum were caught in a severe thunderstorm. His friend got scared, and betook himself to some sort of praying, but Jim Dupe was hardened enough to laugh at the terror of his companion. Yet his nonchalance must have been more simulated than real; for when they found shelter at a house where the inmates invited them in, with a "God bless you," he tells how "summat seemed to speak to me and say, You are all right now, for you are among God's people." The folks were talking of going to hear a preacher thirteen miles off. He was greatly struck with that, for his inward monitor told him that he would not care to go as many yards. The Spirit was striving with him, and he mentally vowed that if God would spare him he would turn over a new leaf.

About this time, on returning from one of his absences from home, he found that his wife had got converted. He yielded, though reluctantly, to her pressing invitation to go to chapel. What he saw and heard disturbed him exceedingly, and somehow that night he could not enjoy his supper beer. The Testament was brought into requisition, and he heard a voice that seemed to say: "If you will give up your evil ways and turn to Me, I will pardon you." The responsive thought was: "Lord, don't save me all at once, or my old companions will laugh at me. Save me by bits, and I will try to do better." He did not want to give up poaching, though he knew it was wrong, and he thought to compromise the matter with God by promising to go to chapel every Sunday night. The struggle went on for a time. One day he found himself in the taproom, and the inward voice said: "You are here, are you?" He said he would go twice to chapel on Sunday and make up for it! At last he came to the parting of the ways. One morning his wife told him to go and get his breakfast; he said he did not want any. She understood the situation, and replied: "Why, Jim, I believe the Lord has pardoned your sins." "Hallelujah, so do I." In some autobiographical addresses in the East of London last summer, Mr. Dupe expressed the matter thus: "At ten minutes past six o'clock on the morning of May 27 forty-one years ago, God, for Christ's sake, pardoned my sins." It would be well if all who bear the name of Christian could speak in terms of equal assurance; though they might not be able to describe with such mathematical precision the beginning of the life of faith in the soul.

We have lingered somewhat over these early experiences of Mr. Dupe, in order to illustrate the spiritual conflict that is going on all the time in many human hearts, and to encourage the faith of workers among those who are seemingly the most hardened and indifferent.

Mr. Dupe showed the reality of his conversion by choosing for himself new companions, and by letting the light that had been implanted in his soul shine out for the good of others. His voice was soon heard singing the songs of Zion in the streets. The jeers of his former mates fell harmlessly on him, for he had the panoply of a new-found joy. He began to study the Scriptures, with much prayer to God for understanding and enlightenment. He tells a story of an encounter he had with an ecclesiastic who seemed to think his zeal was outrunning his ability. This cold-hearted critic told him that he had no talent for singing; he would have to wait for that till he went to heaven. "If I have only half a talent I mean to use it." "You have not got a quarter of a talent for singing." "Well, I'll use the bit I have got." "But you haven't even got a bit." "Then I'll sing till I have a bit." Surely in these unanswerable answers the young disciple showed that he was taught of God.

He was not without his trials of faith, however. Work got scarce, and he and his family had again to feel the pinch of want. He took this trouble to the Lord in prayer: "O Lord, you see I have got no work, and my wife and two children have nothing to eat. My old mates want me to go out again poaching, but I don't want to go." To the glory of God's grace, he tells how a friend came in, and provided them with supper; and how, from that day to this, he and his have never been without a meal. Occupation was found, though it was not always exactly what he liked, but he was able to "clear his way." Meanwhile, his street preaching and singing went on, though they were not without incidents unpleasant to the flesh. Buckets of water, however, did not suffice to cool his ardour; nor did the taunt that he would not go out to preach if he were not well paid for it. To that sneer he gave the happy retort that, of a truth, he was well paid, and God was the Paymaster. Richard Weaver went to Nottingham to help, and the theatre was packed full of those who came to hear. A second visit of Richard, with the services in a chapel, was also blessed. Finally Mr. Dupe settled down into an out-of-doors evangelist, and to that ancient and honourable calling he has remained faithful. We could tell of many encounters he has had, in his favourite cathedral—the market place—with loud-mouthed infidels, with pertinacious noisy showmen, with officious officials, and with self-satisfied magistrates. His tact, pluck, perseverance, and unfailing good humour carried him through all his troubles from interested opposers, and he was generally left in quiet and triumphant possession of the field.

He prospered in his business, and during a holiday visit to the East of London he met John Hambleton and Harry Moorhouse, both of whom have preceded him to the "land of pure delight." Mr. Hambleton went down to Nottingham and started his evangelist brother in Bible-selling, as he has started and helped many another worker at both ends of the world. Mr. Dupe took to the business of Bible colporteur at fairs and in country villages. In his own amusing way he tells of one occasion when he competed with two showmen at a fair for the attention and patronage of the crowd. They went at it pell-mell for seven long hours; at the end of this fair spell of work the showmen sat down and looked at Mr. Dupe, and declared they would never oppose him any more. Leeds, Sheffield, Chesterfield, Lincoln, and other places were visited, and many strange experiences were met with; but he was true to his commission, and God was manifestly on his side. He would not argue with infidels; he regarded it as "casting pearls before swine." He believed rather in praying down their opposition. He pitied them as those who were blind, and who could not discern spiritual things, till their eyes were anointed with the eye-salve of conviction. Among his acquaintances was "Old Bendigo," or rather the new Bendigo, the whilom pugilist. He used to read the Bible to him in his declining days, and found that God is indeed no respecter of persons.

Mr. Dupe is now close upon the threescore and ten, but he is still hale and hearty and active. His business is largely transferred to his family, but he continues to conduct meetings in the Nottingham market place, which are attended by great multitudes. At various periods of his evangelistic life he has helped well-known workers in this field of Christian effort. We may mention one never-to-be-forgotten name, that of the veteran Rev. James Caughey, to whom so many on both sides of the Atlantic are indebted for spiritual renewal, and who was, we believe, the human instrument in Mr. Dupe's conversion.

It is not improbable that his ancestors were of Huguenot descent, as the name seems a corruption of one well known in France. However that may be, he is certainly a signal proof of the converting and sanctifying grace of God, and we wish for him many years yet of active faithful service.

"FRIEDENHEIM"—A HOME of PEACE

IT is nearly five years since the small Home, "Friedenheim," 133, Mildmay-road, N., was opened to receive homeless, hopeless sufferers, whose cases are too serious for admission into hospitals, or who have been obliged to quit such institutions to make room for patients who may derive benefit from medical treatment. The object has been to soothe the last days of sufferers, and to lead them to contemplate the great change before them. God has signally blessed the efforts that have been put forth, and there is good reason to believe that all was well with most of those who have passed away within its walls.

The Home is a small private house, with accommodation for ten patients. Since November, 1885, some 134 have been received. Of these a few have left partially restored, or desiring to die "at home," however miserable their homes might be; sixty have died in the Home; and at present the inmates number nine. Nursing in such depressing circumstances could not have been carried on for such a lengthened period except for the strength given by the arm that never fails. On the other hand, the joy of pointing the sick ones to the great Physician, and seeing them accept Him as the Healer of their souls, has greatly encouraged those engaged in this service.

Larger and more suitable premises are an urgent need. The expense of management would be less in proportion, for with better and separate rooms it might be advisable to have some paying patients, which would help the funds. Miss Davidson, the superintendent, will gladly meet or correspond with any whose hearts are stirred to assist.

MEDICAL PRAYER UNION.

THE annual Conference of this Union was held at Exeter Hall on June 13. The discussion for the evening was, "The Past and Future of Evangelisation among Medical Students." This was introduced by the junior secretary, Mr. W. McAdam Eccles, who read a paper giving a brief sketch of the history of the Union, especially in its relation to definite evangelistic work among the medical students of London. After reviewing with some detail the Gospel mission held last November, at which a large number from different hospitals in London were present, and many received blessing, he introduced some proposals in answer to the question, "How are the results of the Mission and the general evangelistic work to be maintained, and their effects increased?" He dwelt especially on the necessity there was for all Christian men in each hospital to be examples by their lives, and bearers of the message of God by their mouths to their fellow students. He also considered at some length the question of inter-hospital meetings.

A hearty discussion followed. Most of those present were decidedly of opinion that if such meetings were arranged and carried out, there would be much good done. We would ask the prayers of all interested in medical students for the work of the Union during the coming winter.

FRENCH IN LONDON.

THE Mission to the French in London, in connection with the French Reformed Evangelical Church, Bayswater, seems to meet with the sympathy of all who are intimate with its operations. It is not possible to conceive a more thorough work, and no one could desire more excellent agencies; all of them, directly or indirectly, are aimed at the eternal salvation of the French population of London.

On Monday afternoon last, the twenty-eighth anniversary was celebrated by a meeting held, by permission of Mr. and Mrs. Greer, on the lawn of Grove House, Regent's Park. Sir Risdon Bennett presided, and the proceedings were very hearty. Several of the speakers used the two languages, and it was well they did, for the audience included a number of persons who, although Londoners, were almost as exclusively French in habit of life as the quiet residents of suburban Paris. The pastor, M. Du Pontet de La Harpe, presented a brief summary of the work done—spiritual, educational, and medical. The many benevolent organisations have been in vigorous operation during the year, and, as French Protestants all over the world write to M. Du Pontet when they desire information on matters associated with London, an immense correspondence has had to be kept up. With regret it was announced that the balance-sheet of the Governess' Home, as well as the general work, showed a deficit, the total liabilities of the Mission amounting to about £400.

Brief addresses were delivered by Revs. Dr. Angus, Newman Hall, Dr. L. B. White, and J. J. Coxhead; M. le Docteur Parrot, Professor J. H. Gladstone, M. T. B. Couve (Bordeaux), and Mr. A. C. P. Coote. The importance of the work was recognised by all, as well as the devotion and wisdom of the director. The Metropolis was shown to be a veritable microcosm, presenting opportunities for preaching the Gospel to nearly "all nations." In this work, the Mission has long had a worthy part, and on that ground it was cordially commended to the sympathy and support of British Christians.

London Evangelists needing seasonable change may have it, with delightful work thrown in, at Banbury, with its hundreds of surrounding villages and hamlets. Efficient workers, with good credentials, may, on writing to Mr. D. Newell, 3, Merton-street, Banbury, learn details of a prosposal whereby their co-operation will be materially facilitated.

A MISSION IN CHELSEA.

DEAR SIR,—Your readers will doubtless be interested to learn that a remarkable blessing has appeared to rest upon the great Tent Mission, which we have been permitted to hold during the last eighteen days, for the districts of South Kensington and Chelsea combined. We have held services daily for children, which have been conducted chiefly by Mr. H. Hutchinson, of the Children's Special Service Mission, and have been attended on weekdays by several hundreds, while on Sunday afternoons the tent has been thronged by (I suppose) at least 3000 children. The results are considered to be most encouraging.

On the three Saturday evenings we have had Gospel temperance addresses, delivered by Mr. J. Horrocks, of the National Temperance League. These have been attendances of peculiar power, combining Gospel truth with pleadings for total abstinence, and the pledges taken have been very numerous.

But the chief burden of the work has naturally fallen upon Mr. Geo. Clarke, central Missioner, who has each day (except Saturdays) conducted two meetings in the tent, a Bible-reading in the afternoon, and an evangelistic service at night. At the former of these we began with a few hundreds, but, on closing, with the great tent well-nigh filled.

The attendance in the afternoons has of course been chiefly ladies and gentlemen who have time at their command, and the tokens of blessing have been very great. Large numbers of Christians are speaking already of a zeal that has been quickened, and of a love that has been deepened, through these "Bible Talks," which it has been a privilege to attend. In the evenings our tent, which holds 2000, was almost full on the first Sunday night; and on Sunday last, though we divided the meeting into two, and held one for women at 5.45 p.m., and another for men at 8.15 p.m., in the former case the tent could not accommodate the numbers who eagerly flocked to hear God's servant; and in the latter we saw one of the grandest sights that I think I have ever seen at a mission, as there were, I believe, fully 1800 men listening, with a devoutness and awe that was really remarkable, to the bold spiritual speech that was offered to them; while a neighbouring hall, which holds 300, was filled with women who had sought admission to the tent, and who were there addressed as "an overflow."

This day we hold our thanksgiving services, and ask for contributions for our expenses, which have of course been very heavy. I would invite your readers to join us in heartfelt thanks to God, for the grand results which seem to have flowed already from this effort, and to offer at least one earnest prayer to the Lord that He will greatly increase these results hereafter, and give us a tenfold blessing beyond all we have seen. A Nonconformist minister said to me on Sunday night, at the close of the men's meeting, "I have never in my life seen anything, the far reaching consequences of which should be so great, as of this most remarkable and solemn gathering."

"Praise God, from whom all blessings flow."

I am, yours faithfully,

H. W. WEBB-PEPLOE.

UNION HALL MISSION.—The thirtieth annual report of this Mission gives a brief account of evangelistic labour among the poor of London and suburbs. Those who wish to have a true idea of the extent and character of the work should secure a copy of the report from Mr. Robert Bilkes, Abergeldie, Greenhill-park, Harlesden, N.W. Out-door labour has in several districts been attended with much blessing; but, while considerable vigour of effort has been shown on all hands, it has been necessary, through lack of funds, to relinquish the Chiswick station. Like many other good undertakings, this grows out of proportion to the income of financial sustenance.

MR. ARNOT'S AFRICAN MISSION.

A COMMUNICATION from Mr. F. S. Arnot, published in Echoes of Service for June, reports the receipt, at Kwangelula, Bihé, of cheering letters from Messrs. Swan & Faulkner, who are carrying on the work in Garenganze country. A Portuguese expedition, under Captain Cushero, had arrived in Bihé with thirty soldiers, bound for the Barotse country, causing quite a sensation. Mr. Arnot says:—

"The chief of Bihé at once, it is said, decided upon attacking the intruders as well as our little company and the Americans. Senhor Porto heard of the intended onslaught, and started for Ekovonga, the capital, at once, and succeeded so far in allaying the chief's fears. The old gentleman then visited the American mission stations, and also us here at Kwangelula, saying that matters were settled, only he hoped that we would be careful to recognise the native chief. We answered that we had no other thought. Two days later, however, a letter arrived from Senhor Porto, asking me to go over at once, so that I might accompany him and the Portuguese captain to the capital. At first I thought of going, then decided not to go, not caring to be mixed up with political affairs. I said I would prefer accompanying Senhor Porto only, or to go alone.

"I told the natives that we knew nothing of the intentions of the Portuguese; they might dread them because they had swords in their belts, but as for us they could not dread our presence in the country, as our sword was the Book. Men, I said, feared men, but they were no men if they feared grasshoppers. This message was taken up to the chief of Utulumba, who sent over to the capital (Bihé) two envoys, who discussed the matter, the chief of Utulumba distinctly taking our side. The Bihé chief, it seems, replied that we would be let off on payment of a mule to him as tribute, but the Utulumba chief refused to allow this request to reach our ears, and called to his assistance the chief of Chisende, a large district close by. He came over on Saturday, and made quite a demonstration in our favour (he knew me years ago), saying emphatically that our mules on no account were to be interfered with. We gave him some cloth, and a copy of John's Gospel, which he said his Portuguese interpreter would read to him. On Lord's Day a smaller chief, Silumbu, arrived with his company, and a fine sheep as a present. He said he had come on Lord's Day because he not only wanted to declare his friendship, but also wished to hear us tell again, to him and his people, the Gospel story, which we had preached in his village some four weeks before, when nearly all our party walked several miles (across the Kunji river) to his town and addressed about 200 people. We had a most interesting time, and the old man left, thanking us most heartily."

A more recent letter from Mr. Arnot, dated April 8, says:—"A crisis has passed over Bihé, ending in the suicide of Senhor Porto, and the flight of the Portuguese representative. All is quiet with us, however."

THE SERVANTS' MISSION.—For twenty-three years this work has been carried on in the West-end of London, with results of a very cheering character. The Christian Servants' Association includes among its members some devoted servants of Christ. During the year, 210 different men were received into the Men's Home, 14, Sloane-terrace, Chelsea; and 180 women temporarily accommodated in the Women's Home, 162, Warwick-street, Pimlico. The total abstinence cause still prospers; while staying in the Homes, servants not only learn lessons in temperance, but are instructed in the way of salvation. The report says, "God has seen fit to remove still more of our old subscribers, yet our hope is that others will be led to fill up the many gaps that have occurred."

INTOLERANCE IN IRELAND.

REV. T. B. ROBERTSON, with his wife, held an open-air meeting at Ennis on Saturday afternoon, May 31. They sang hymns, and Mr. Robertson interspersed the singing with words of explanation and exhortation. The meeting passed off very quietly, until the people saw the visitors were Protestants. They then began abusive and obscene language, accompanied by the throwing of filth and stones. A bucket of water was thrown; Mr. and Mrs. Robertson were covered with filth and struck with the stones. They were more than an hour in the street, but during the latter part of the time could not be heard for the yelling of the mob. The insane hatred manifested knew no bounds.

It is sad to have to state the part that the Protestants of Ennis have played in this affair. The following extract from The Clare Journal will speak for itself:—

> At the meeting of the Select Vestry of the parish of Drumcliffe held to-day, a resolution was unanimously passed strongly condemning the action of a neighbouring clergyman in coming into the parish, and trying to disturb the harmony which has existed amongst the members of the different denominations in Ennis, and drawing the attention of the Bishop of the diocese thereto. Those present were Rev. J. H. Griffith (rector), Rev. C. McDowell (curate), John W. Scott, J.P., H. Faircloth, J. Hill, J. H. Harvey, and Pierce O'Brien, J.P.

On the Thursday following another instance was given of the terrible intolerance of Popery, and the deep-rooted hatred of the Romanist priests to God and his truth. It was reported that the rev. gentleman was going to preach that day after the second mass in his own parish of Newmarket. It was freely stated in the village, and believed by Romanists and Protestants, that he would be killed if he attempted it. Those men who attended first mass were ordered to remain for the second mass, and to take part in the expected slaughter. The priests had instructed the people to prevent the preaching at any cost; which, to these ignorant people, meant licence to carry their wicked purposes to the bitter end.

When Mr. Robertson went into the village at the appointed time, the street was full with an expectant crowd. The police were present and so were two magistrates. One of the magistrates told him that he would not be permitted to preach; that if he did so he would be forcibly removed from the village, and the police were present for this purpose. He also assured the rev. gentleman that the people were determined to kill him if he dared to preach. As a matter of fact, he had not expressed any intention of doing so that day; but the experience is sufficient to show that there is no people so hostile to the Gospel as the ordinary Irish Romanist, and that the most difficult and dangerous mission field in the world is only three or four hours from the English shores.—Communicated.

In The Times of Monday a similar outrage is reported from Arklow, where the rector, his curate, and the Methodist minister held an open service on Sunday morning. Stones were thrown and two of the ministers were struck, besides having to listen to the violent abuse of the rabble. The report states that the services are to be continued, whatever the risk may be.

WOOD GREEEN.—A good work is being carried on in this North London suburb by the "Welcome Mission," Acacia-road. This is a mission to the working classes conducted by working men. The Sunday services are well attended by the people from the surrounding district, and the Sunday-school and Band of Hope exert good influence among the children. Cheering results of the work have been witnessed in many directions. The annual meeting was recently held in the Gospel Hall, and stimulating addresses delivered by several friends.

God will always take the best time to hand out mercies to his people: there is no mercy so ripe, so beautiful, as that which He gives in his own time. Though God delays thee, yet be silent, for there is no possibility of taking a mercy out of God's hand till the mercy be ripe for us, and we ripe for the mercy.

A BEAUTIFUL CONTRAST.

The literal reading of the first and second verses of Ps. xix. may be thus given:—

The heavens are telling the glory of God,
The firmament displaying the work of his hands;
Day unto day welleth forth speech,
Night unto night breatheth out knowledge.

The overflowing fulness with which day unto day pours forth divine instruction, and the gentle whisperings of the silent night, are contrasted.—Henry Craik.

An industrial workshop has been opened at the East-end for about twenty tailoresses, who are to have work direct from the factory, and are to receive three-fourths of the sum paid for it, instead of less than half, which at present is doled out by the sweater.

The evils connected with the insurance of children's lives are dealt with in a Bill introduced into the House of Lords by the Bishop of Peterborough. A more stringent limit is to be placed on the amount of the sum for which an insurance may be effected for a child.

Letter to the Editor.

THE DODS AND BRUCE CASES.

SIR,—I was astonished to see your Edinburgh correspondent, in the issue of June 6, describe the decisions in the Free Assembly in the above cases as "satisfactory." I can assure you they are regarded as the very opposite by a very large number of Free Church members, and this feeling is by no means confined, as you seem to suppose, to the more northern parishes, but is shared in by very many in the south as well.

That your readers may understand the questions at issue, let me state very shortly the position of matters. Dr. Dods was accused of stating in various of his writings:—

(1) That a man may be a Christian although he does not believe in the divinity of the Lord Jesus Christ—and this is said not of a novice, as the man whom Dr. Dods describes in connection with the assertion is one far advanced in the Christian life.

(2) That a man may be a Christian although he does not believe in the resurrection of Christ. Dr. Dods believes in both of these facts himself.

(3) He holds that it is a matter of comparative indifference whether a man believes in Christ's death as an atoning sacrifice for sin, or simply as an exhibition of Divine love.

(4) He denies that the Bible is free from errors as originally given, but says distinctly that there are "errors" and "inaccuracies" in its pages, and that "immoralities" are "allowed, commended, and even commanded" in the Old Testament. This theory of inspiration is utterly different from that hitherto believed in the Free Church, or set forth in the Confession of Faith.

Dr. Bruce has published a book, entitled "The Kingdom of God," and, as it is rather the scope of the book than particular statements which is regarded as objectionable, it is more difficult to tabulate concisely the charges brought against him, even although his divergence from the truth is regarded as greater than that of Dr. Dods. In this volume he deals only with the first three Gospels, and gives as a reason for omitting the fourth that "Their reports are more indisputably Apostolic in their ultimate source, and, to all appearance, much less influenced by reflection on the part of the writers." With regard to the three Gospels with which he deals, he has great doubts if what we possess are the writings as they came from the hand of the supposed writers, and, even with regard to those parts which he is inclined to regard as Apostolic, he represents them, and especially Luke, as taking liberties which any honest man must regard as utterly unwarrantable, changing the words of Christ to suit his own ideas of what is right, putting on glosses to soften down expressions which he (Luke) regards as too harsh, and in this way representing the Apostles as guided, not by the Holy Spirit, but by their own ideas of right and wrong. Indeed the whole book, by its irreverence, conveys the most painful feeling to any mind which has been in the habit of regarding these Gospels as part of God's Word.

The attention of the College Committee in Edinburgh (whose province it is to deal with such matters) was drawn to these opinions principally by a large meeting of office bearers of the Church held in Glasgow. They (the College Committee) investigated the matter, and in a special report which they presented to the Assembly, whilst severely condemning the two Professors for indiscretion, say that they do not consider that what has been brought against them affords ground for further dealings.

When this report came to be considered by the Assembly, a day was set aside for the consideration of the case of each Professor, when motions were submitted which ultimately became the finding of the Assembly, and in which the statement of the College Committee, that there is nothing in the writings of the two Professors to warrant further action, is specially endorsed.

This decision places the Free Church in an entirely new position, and cannot fail to lead to the most fatal results. If the teaching of such doctrines in the past is not to be punished, it cannot be in the future. If professors may teach doctrines which are in the very teeth of what is taught in the Confession of Faith, then any minister may. In other words, such opinions are in the future to be regarded as open questions in the Free Church. "How is the gold become dim, and the most fine gold changed!" What a tremendous fall has this Church had from the pinnacle she formerly occupied.

You seem to think that the fight is now past; but this is not so; it is only commencing. The old moderates of last century held exactly the same false doctrines, and the evangelicalism within the Church was in constant, irreconcilable antagonism to them. You may as well attempt to get oil and water to mix as to hope to reconcile two parties holding these opposite views; it cannot and never will be. I hear that arrangements are already being made to stir the Church on this question throughout the length and breadth of the land. What the end may be God only knows, but duty is ours, and we must wait upon and look to Him who in many a dark and dreary day of trouble in the past has brought his Church into the light, and given the victory. Trusting that in his mercy and grace He may do so again, I remain, yours,

Glasgow, June 10. A FREE CHURCHMAN.

WALTER HAYNE—HERO.

BY WILLIAM LUFF.

An American telegram from Texas gives the outline of the following deed of bravery at the great fire, Spring Palace:—

A SPARK had kindled a burning,
The burning kindled a flame;
Till the gleam of the jewelled fingers
Waved high in a wild acclaim.

The palace blazed like an altar,
And the human victims seemed
To be bound with a spell of horror,
Where the blazing faggots gleamed.

And many the deeds of daring
Performed in that solemn hour,
As the shricks of women and children
Nerved hearts to their highest power.

I sing of only one hero,
The first of that noble train;
The wires have flashed the title
And the doings of Walter Hayne.

With many a living burden,
He passed through the blinding smoke;
Again and again he ventured,
And the chain of the death-fiend broke.

Again and again they cheered him,
As his tireless shoulders bore
The women and little children,
Till his hands had saved a score.

And still he worked at the furnace,
With a blacksmith's sturdy will;
His, only to break the fetters
That were holding the victims still.

It seemed that his work was over,
For his score had grown and grown,
Till a hundred women and children
Were rescued by Hayne alone.

It seemed that the flames were dying,
And Hayne seemed dying too;
For again he had entered the palace,
And awhile was lost to view.

At last, at an upper window
The blackened form appeared;
In his arms was a fainting woman,
And anew the people cheered.

But the flames seemed disappointed,
And followed the hero there,
As if in their last few moments
To revenge their fierce despair.

No ladder was near to save him,
So he leaped with his precious load
And broke the fall of the woman,
By crashing first on the road.

'Twas a fearful leap; and the people
Shuddered to venture nigh,
For his spine and his skull were fractured;
He had only leaped to die.

But the woman lay uninjured,
Her fall his body had borne;
For her he bled in the roadway,
Wounded, lifeless, and torn.

Do you wonder a free subscription
Provides for his loved ones' need?
Do you wonder men raise a pillar
To Walter Hayne's brave deed?

Then, what of my Saviour, Jesus,
Who saves from a burning hell
A multitude none can number?
What glory his praise can tell?

He leaped from the highest heaven,
A world on his mighty breast;
His body was crushed and broken,
That we might be saved and blest.

COOLIES IN THE WEST INDIES.

REV. JAMES RAE, Presbyterian minister, St. George, Grenada, West Indies, writes:—There are many hundreds of coolies, as they are called, living in this nominally Christian land without any effort being made by their employers, or the people among whom they live, to teach them the Gospel. These coolies are in the darkness of Paganism, though there is no scarcity of churches or ministers in the colony. The influence their priests (poor ignorant men they are too) exercise is very great. I do not despair of seeing even these priests brought to the feet of the Saviour.

Our mission to the Indians, the Grenada Coolies' Mission, has already made many converts, and there is now a good congregation composed entirely of Hindus, at Samaritan, in the north end of the island, worshipping in the language of their native land. They are instructed by means of catechists who are able to speak English and Hindi. Two schools have been opened for children. The work, however, suffers from lack of support. The expenditure last year was only £144, but it exceeded the income.

The people of Grenada are, as a rule, either antagonistic to or out of sympathy with our mission work; they are mostly Roman Catholics. We should like to get two more catechists, and build two additional schools, as we have, so far, only touched one part of the island. It is encouraging to know that the preaching of the Gospel of Jesus Christ among the coolies of Grenada is always productive of results. At present there is in the Colony Hospital in St. George a sick Indian, whose name is Cutal, and who was converted through the instrumentality of our Mission. For a time he kept back from a public profession of his faith in Jesus. His mother did not wish to see him a Christian, and for a time he yielded to her wishes. At last, however, he determined publicly to show his faith, and was baptized along with three others. After his baptism the catechist taught him to read and write in Hindi. When he went to the hospital he took his Hindi Testament with him, and, not content with reading it himself, he began to read it to the other Indians, two of whom are Moslems. Now it is his daily practice to gather them together and to speak of Jesus. The Hindus have heard the word gladly. God grant that they too may cast aside their old heathen notions and embrace Jesus as all their salvation and desire.

THE WHITEFIELD MEMORIAL CHURCH.—A large assembly gathered at the City Temple, on Tuesday evening last week, in sympathy with the movement for raising funds to erect the new Whitefield Memorial Church and Toplady Hall, in Tottenham Court-road, for the congregation of which Rev. J. Jackson Wray is pastor. The amount required is estimated at £20,000; towards this sum £5000 have been promised by the congregation, but it has been resolved not to commence building until £8000 have been secured. Mr. Wray pleaded for the maintenance of this centre of influence, for the benefit of the large numbers of young men and women engaged in the City, and the working classes who now crowded the tenement houses. Rev. Hugh Price Hughes warmly supported Mr. Wray's appeal. To allow the site of Whitefield's labours to be given up for warehouses would be disgraceful. Dr. Parker, as an illustration of the changes which time had wrought, mentioned that Dr Philip Doddridge remonstrated with Dr. Isaac Watts for opening a service for George Whitefield; and some young men in a Congregational College in London were deprived of their supper, if not corporeally chastised, for returning at a later hour than the College prescribed, after attending to listen to George Whitefield. Rev. Andrew Mearns and others also spoke, and between seven and eight hundred pounds was subscribed before the close of the meeting.

CENTRAL VIGILANCE ASSOCIATION.

THE annual meeting of the Central Vigilance Society for the Repression of Immorality was held on Friday last, at London House, St. James's-square, S.W. The report, presented by Mr. T. F. MYERS, secretary, gave an idea of the Society's work in several directions. In some measure the fallen are rescued; and, as far as means have allowed, steps have been taken to enforce the law against offenders against public decency. There is deplorable apathy in regard to the matters to which the Society gives its attention; it is hoped, however, that by arousing the public conscience, present laws will be more effectively administered, and defective legislation will be amended. Local committees have been assisted, in the provinces as well as in various parts of the Metropolis, so that the Society's existence has been abundantly justified.

The Earl of MEATH, who presided, expressed himself in cordial sympathy with the work. Mr. S. SMITH, M.P., urged the pressing need for arousing public sentiment on moral questions. Of late years there has been an upward movement in London, but much remains to be done. In Manchester, Glasgow, Sheffield, and other large cities, the police have, in recent years, worked so vigorously that an evil which once disgraced the streets has virtually disappeared from public view, houses for infamous purposes having ceased to exist. The streets of large sections of London are after certain hours practically given over to vice, and the police require the support of all the better portion of the public in their efforts to grapple with the evil. In many cases men are the greatest sinners, and the law ought to be applied to them as well as to women.

Rev. H. W. WEBB-PEPLOE told the story of the origin of the Society seven years ago. From the first a large amount of odium has been heaped upon all concerned, many good people having commiserated him for his action. Yet he could not but regard it as a bounden duty to continue the work so long as the evil exists. Not only is the moral support very scant, but the material assistance only amounted to £380 last year; and what could be done with such a small sum?

Bishop Billing and Lieut-Col. Everitt having spoken, Mr. SYDNEY GEDGE, M.P., dealt with the subject in other bearings. Our laws are more stringent to offences against property than they are to offences against the person, so young men may easily overlook the fact that immorality is a sin against society as well as God. We tell our young men to beware of gambling, but, with apparent force, they argue that there cannot be much that is objectionable in racing, seeing that the House of Commons adjourns over Derby Day! He rejoiced to hear of good policemen speaking words of caution to young girls, and trusted they would also seize opportunities to warn young men of the woes of the downward course. Short addresses were also delivered by Rev. J. F. Kitto and Canon Barker.

LONDON LOCK HOSPITAL AND ASYLUM, Harrow-road, W.—In a booklet entitled, "Upward Steps in Rescue Work," Mr. Algernon C. P. Coote, the secretary of this Institution, shows how, from the very day patients enter the Hospital, efforts are made by the chaplain, the matron, the nurses, and the lady visitors, to induce them to give up the evil and "seek that which is good." There are altogether 140 beds in the Hospital, and 70 in the Asylum. Patients received from Refuges and similar Homes are accommodated in special rescue wards. The Asylum is a Home for the reclamation of those who have fallen. The several "upward steps" are well set out in the booklet, and it is impossible not to admire the spirit and method of the work. Several friends of rescue work bear witness to the value of these institutions, for the maintenance of which about £6000 a year is required; at least £2000 being needed in fresh annual subscriptions.

Y.M.C. ASSOCIATION.

A MEETING of the National Council was held at York on June 6, the forty-sixth anniversary of the founding of the Association. The Lord Mayor entertained the members at the Mansion House. Mr. George Williams presided, and there were present many influential friends.

The report of the executive was of a very encouraging character, especially as regards Ireland. The financial statement showed a deficit of £400, which was subscribed in the room. Amongst other matters of interest submitted to the Council was that of the extension of Young Men's Christian Associations among artisans. The question of the spread of gambling among the young men of the land also engaged much attention.

In the evening a meeting of the friends of the Association was held, when several hearty speeches were delivered, commending the work to the Christian public of the city; these resulted in some substantial gifts to the local work.

BILLINGSGATE CHRISTIAN MISSION.

THE twelfth annual meeting of friends of the Billingsgate Christian Mission was held on Tuesday evening last week in the new Mission premises, which face the Market. Mr. F. A. BEVAN presided, and rejoiced to see in the work promise of widespread spiritual blessing. The toilers in the Market have but few privileges, and are exposed to many temptations. Their great need is the Gospel, and he trusted that many would share the joy of pressing its claims upon them.

Mr. A. WALTERS, hon. sec., made a statement as to the work which is being carried on. The various Gospel services held since the new premises were opened, have been well attended, and the visits of the missionary have met with gratifying appreciation. Mr. Walters was able to add that there had been at least two cases of conversion since the meetings were commenced in the new hall. Mr. W. H. WILLIAMSON, hon. treasurer, intimated that there is still a debt of about £4000 on the building. For the maintenance of the work the co-operation of more friends is sadly required.

Mr. H. W. MAYNARD spoke a few hearty words, being followed by Mr. FINLAY GIBSON, who remarked upon the special character of the work. It entrenches upon no one else's field of labour. The field is a large one, and, with the blessing of God, the Mission will make an impression for good upon Billingsgate and its life. Rev. J. T. WIGNER encouraged the workers to continue as they had begun. If the Lord had not meant to bless, He would not have shown signal mercy to his servants in the past. The speaker rejoiced to notice the growing favour with which such undertakings are now viewed by the churches. A few years ago there was considerable jealousy with regard to outside work; but to-day the necessity for the work is realised, and the churches are glad that devoted Christian people take it up. In conclusion, Mr. Wigner urged the workers to have strong faith in God, as only by that means could they have the much-needed love of Christ to constrain them to acceptable and persevering service.

MR. AND MRS. BLAMIRE have been in England for some weeks. Mr. Blamire's health was not good on arrival, but he soon became seriously ill, and grave fears were entertained as to his condition. To have the best skill and care he was recently removed to a private ward at St. Thomas's Hospital, and we are thankful to learn (says Echoes of Service) that there is hope of his restoration; but his system has been much run down from constant overwork.

THE IKWEZI LAMACI MISSION.

In a recent letter Mrs. Aitchison reports the receiving of nine more Griquas into Church fellowship. These people are half-castes, originally from the Hottentot race, who have mixed with Dutch, Germans, French, English, and Kaffirs. Mr. Aitchison has sought them out, and now there is a good congregation in and near Harding. English is becoming more and more the speech of the people, who have put up a building to serve for religious meetings and school purposes. In the latter there are forty scholars, including the chief, who is forty-five years of age, and bright and intelligent.

Mrs. Aitchison writes:—"Near the close of the past year we received an invitation from a chief twenty miles towards the coast, to commence work among the people. It came to us as a great surprise. My husband had a long and interesting conversation with him, and arrangements were made for a fortnightly service to be held in his kraal, and some of the boys are to come here to school until ways and means allow of a school being opened in the tribe. The chief, Mlotywa by name, is a famous "rain-doctor," claiming power to bring or withhold rain. The Government, however, does not allow him to take cattle, or any kind of payment, for the practice of this 'art.' He is something of a spiritualist. His proceedings in reference to mission work are wonderful in the eyes of the surrounding tribes.

"A little before Christmas we had a visit from Brigade-Surgeon Robinson, well known for his zeal and labour for the Master during thirty-one years of army service. In the few years he has been quartered at Maritzburg, he has been a very useful and much-owned worker in the churches. Dr. Robinson took the long and expensive journey here purposely to see something of the native work amongst the heathen tribes, and to gain a personal acquaintance with Ikwezi and neighbourhood. He held meetings daily, visited the out-branches, and conversed with the chiefs and people. His words of warning and comfort were blessed on all hands. There are many inquirers, my husband's class being very promising. We have now four schools to direct and maintain: we need much wisdom and guidance. Pray that our labour may be blessed of God!"

The address of the Mission is Ikwezi Lamaci, near Harding, Alfred county, Natal.

LIVERPOOL SAILORS' HOME, with its dispensary, continues to fill a very important place in the social economy of seafaring men. From the 45th annual report it appears that during last year eighty men of the Argentine Navy made a prolonged stay at the port while their vessel was undergoing repairs. The missionary's interest in them was excited, and he lost no time in acquiring their language, so as to be able to converse with them in regard to life and godliness. As much as £36,000 was received from the men for transmission to their relatives or themselves on arriving home. Efforts made to induce men thus to deposit their money are worthy of all commendation, as they prevent much dissipation and improvidence. The manager and secretary of the Home is Mr. Thomas Haumer.

HACKNEY-ROAD MISSION.—The twentieth annual report of this East-end work is full of interest. The Mission strongly commends itself to public support, inasmuch as those who conduct it, not only give their labour, but contribute of their own means to meet the continual expenses. The agencies are numerous, and all designed to further the cause of Christ. The open-air meetings have been carried on with increased vigour; the Sunday-school is still well attended, and a sphere of encouraging effort; and a grand work is being done in connection with the Band of Hope. The hon. pastor and superintendent is Mr. John Girling, 47, Mildmay-road, N. At present a special effort is being made to re-seat the mission hall. The necessity is unquestioned, and the cause sadly requires new friends.

"ONE TUN" RAGGED SCHOOLS.

The annual meeting of these schools was held in the girls' schoolroom of the building in Old Pye-street, Westminster, last week. Mr. W. Burdett-Coutts presided, and was accompanied by the Baroness Burdett-Coutts.

The day, night, and Sunday-schools, and all the other agencies, according to the Secretary's report, are in a satisfactory condition. In the course of the evening the recitation of some chapters from the Bible by two classes of boys and girls made it apparent that what had been committed to memory was well understood; no better short test could have been offered of the general intelligence of the children and of the painstaking nature of their religious instruction. Specimens of needlework gave evidence which indicated that the industrial departments also were in a high state of efficiency. The singing was wonderfully correct and expressive.

In a very earnest address, the Hon. and Rev. Stafford Northcote said he could not but feel that the work of the "One Tun" schools was done from a Christian motive, and after the example of our Lord who had commanded his followers not only to preach but to teach the Gospel to the poor. Whatever proficiency might be attained in mere secular knowledge, it was impossible that children could grow up to be Christian men and women unless the wants of their spiritual nature were properly supplied out of the Word of God. He hoped the Institution would receive all the sympathy and support necessary for a continuance of its good work.

The Chairman said that, if the work begun and mainly sustained there by the late Mrs. Barker-Harrison were allowed to perish, he would be inclined to believe that the influence of noble example was dying out in the world. He trusted the work would be continued in even increasing efficiency in memory of its self-denying foundress, who had laboured on inspired by the highest motives, though she was little recognised by the world.

Prizes were distributed by the Baroness Burdett-Coutts to a large number of the children and to former pupils of the schools, who had conducted themselves well in their present situations. Her ladyship spoke a few graceful kindly words of commendation and encouragement to each of the recipients.

Rev. W. Williams and Rev. Andrew Stirling delivered brief addresses. The former stated the willingness of the Church to co-operate by supplying workers, and the latter expressed his belief that ragged schools were as necessary now as ever for the spiritual elevation of the poor.

Late in the evening the Baroness Burdett-Coutts pathetically dwelt on the life and labours of Mrs. Barker-Harrison, whose memory would ever be warmly cherished. She reviewed the nature of the training given in the schools, and considered it calculated to promote happiness in this life and to fit for the life beyond. In concluding, she directed some special words to the very young children, to the older pupils, to the parents of the scholars, and to the teachers and friends of the Institution. Among those who spoke were Mr. Burgess of the Sunday School Union, and Mr. John Kirk of the Ragged School Union.

TWO ABERDEEN PUBLICANS have been fined for supplying drink to a man in a state of intoxication. Hundreds all over the country daily break the law in a similar way, but the police seem conveniently blind.

LORD FRASER, giving judgment in a recent Scotch case, decided that publicans who, under the Early Closing Act (Scotland), were obliged to close at ten, instead of, as formerly, eleven, had no legal claim to any remission of the licence duty.

COMMON LODGING-HOUSES.

On the evening of Tuesday week representatives of the Christian workers among the inmates of the common lodging-houses met in conference at the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street. General Sir Robert Phayre stated that the main object of the meeting was to initiate a union of the workers, so that the efforts now being made to rescue the forty or fifty thousand persons who live in the common lodging-houses in the Metropolis might be more systematically and adequately conducted. Something more than mere teaching was needed. The Gospel of the grace of God consisted in doing as well as in speaking; and the conduct of the Good Samaritan must be their example.

Mr. John Harvey, the secretary, said they did not desire in any way to supplant or supersede the present workers, but on the contrary to grant them moral and material support. Thirty per cent. of those at present living in the common lodging-houses would willingly leave, if facilities were afforded them. It was not the intention to confine the union to the Metropolis, but to embrace Liverpool, Birmingham, and other towns, so that the central body would be broadly operative and truly representative.

A worker from the South-east of London and a representative of the Christian Community having given their views of the union and the conditions necessary to ensure its success, Rev. W. Thomas made an eloquent appeal for unity, so as to induce more outside sympathy with the workers and with those they sought to rescue. He formally moved that all engaged in lodging-house mission work should as far as possible be united for that purpose. After some words by Rev W. Frith and Mr. Paynter, the motion was accepted. Mr. George Nokes and Mr. T. Franks having spoken, Lady Ashburton expressed the hope that God's blessing would continue to attend the work in its future operations. A letter was received from the Baroness Burdett-Coutts recording her full accord with the objects of the Mission. At the end of the meeting representatives from Bow, Stratford, Hoxton, and St. Giles signified their willingness to affiliate themselves at once with the Mission.

THE DUNDEE Y.W.C.A. is doing excellent work of an evangelistic, educational, and social character. The aim is high, and the workers are often greatly cheered by seeing Divine blessing attend their labours. The thirteenth annual report shows how admirably the Association meets the varied needs of the young women of Dundee. Over 150 new members were added during the year. Classes in Domestic Economy have been established, in which young women are instructed in the laws of health, and every detail of practical household work. The influence of the Association is good all round, and we trust it will greatly increase. The Institute is at 33, Tay-street, the president of the Association being Miss M. N. Jessiman, Rosebank, Broughty Ferry.

BELIEVERS' MEETING FOR BIBLE STUDY.—The fourteenth annual meeting for Bible study will be held at Niagara-on-the-Lake, for eight days, July 10—17. An hour daily will be given to the study of Christ in the several great divisions of the Holy Scriptures. Another hour will be devoted to a consideration of the Christian's walk, confidence, service, and other kindred themes in relation to the Holy Spirit. A third hour will be occupied with subjects pertaining to the Lord's return, the restoration of Israel, and the coming kingdom. The preaching of the Gospel, missions to Jews and Gentiles, the life eternal and the doom of unbelievers, will be considered in connection with these various subjects. A number of well-known teachers are expected, and enlarged accommodation has been arranged for.

WORKING BOYS IN LONDON.

ONE of the most useful of the many London charitable institutions is the organisation that provides Homes for Working Boys. There are eight of these Homes in different parts of London, and they shelter about four hundred working lads, who might otherwise be homeless, and exposed to all the dangers of life in common lodging-houses. The boys are thus helped to help themselves in earning an honest livelihood, while they are surrounded by all the happy and preserving influences of Christian tuition and example.

The expiry of the leases of two Homes has created a crisis in their existence, and the good friends who conduct this excellent endeavour are making an earnest appeal to the Christian public to help them in raising at least £3000, so that the work may be sustained. The twenty-first anniversary of the founding of the Homes was signalised on Monday last by a festival dinner, at Westminster Town Hall—not to the well-to-do members of society, but to the boys themselves. Some 300 of them gathered, and of course they had a good time. After dinner a meeting was held, under the genial presidency of the Marquis of Lorne. Addresses of a helpful and encouraging character were given to the boys by the Chairman, Mr. E. J. Kennedy, Lord Kinnaird, and others. The Hon. T. H. W. Pelham (who is the mainspring of the work) made a brief statement as to the position of the Homes, and urged their claims on the attention of the Christian public. We sincerely hope the present monetary difficulty will be overcome. Instead of curtailment, there ought to be large expansion, in view of the splendid service the Homes are rendering to orphaned and otherwise friendless lads in our great city.

MOUNT HERMON GIRLS' ORPHAN HOMES.—The twenty-ninth annual report is another testimony to God's loving-kindness in supplying the orphans' needs. During the year, seventeen children left the Homes, all of them for situations in which they are giving satisfaction. Nineteen were received, and at the end of the year the inmates numbered 116. Mrs. Parry, the superintendent, rejoices that so many friends bear in mind the needs of the Homes, which are situate in Cambridge-avenue, Kilburn, and Mill-lane, West-Hampstead, N.W.

A Y.W.C.A. HOME has been opened in one of the best situations in Windsor, for the benefit of the young ladies in business, visitors, and others, who can have board and lodging at moderate rates. The house was formally opened on May 20, when Canon Eliot, of Bournemouth, and Miss Faulkner gave addresses. The latter also addressed the members on the following evening. Princess Christian has signified her wish to become patroness of the Windsor and Eton branch. Application as to terms, &c., to be made to the lady superintendent, The Homestead, 20, Park-street, Windsor.

THE NATIONAL ANTI-GAMBLING LEAGUE.—A largely attended demonstration was held on Sunday afternoon, at St. James's Hall, Piccadilly, to protest against the betting and gambling evils. Rev. Hugh Price Hughes presided, and maintained that betting and gambling bear a similar relation to stealing that duelling did to murder. He suggested legislation for the prohibition of the publication of betting intelligence in the newspapers. Rev. J. W. Horsley, late chaplain of Clerkenwell House of Correction, declared his conviction that next to drink, betting and gambling are the great predisposing causes of crime. A letter was read from the Bishop of Durham, who said: "When the inherent waste and selfishness and cruelty of gambling and the hope of gaining through another's loss are once clearly apprehended, such an intelligent and strong public opinion will be formed as will make legislation possible and effective; and many who feel at present, that the mental relaxation obtained by games of chance is an ample return for the stake which is involved in them, will, I believe, be led to give up, for the sake of others, a form of amusement which is liable to serious misunderstandings and grave abuses."

Obituary.

M. ED. DE WATTEVILLE.

THE death is announced of M. Ed. de Watteville, president of the Evangelical Society of the Canton of Berne. Of eminent piety, and a powerful preacher, he exercised a ministry of exceptional influence during a long period. For nearly forty years he discharged onerous duties in the direction of a large school for girls, to whom he gave religious instruction, for which hundreds have prayed blessings upon him.

MR. ROBERT WILLIAMS.

The death is announced, at an advanced age, of Mr. Robert Williams, the well-known banker, of the firm of Williams, Deacon & Co., of Birchin-lane, and formerly member for the old Parliamentary borough of Dorchester. The deceased had renounced politics of late years, and had devoted all his energies to works of a religious and philanthropic nature. Mr. Williams had latterly resided at Bridehead, Dorchester, where his funeral took place on Friday last.

MISS MARY L. G. McGAW.

Miss Mary L. G. McGaw, whose death in painful circumstances at the early age of twenty-three has just been announced, was the eldest daughter of Rev. J. T. McGaw, General Secretary of the Presbyterian Church of England. During the last seven years of her father's ministry at Sale, near Manchester, she was an indefatigable and most successful Christian worker. Her natural gifts were of a high order, and had been assiduously cultivated. Not long ago she decided to give herself entirely to work in connection with the Manchester Prison-gate Mission. The strain, however, proved too great for her intense nature, and brain fever and melancholia ensued. Placed under the care of an experienced nurse at Brixton Hill, she made rapid progress towards improvement. A few days ago she went out alone, and later on, her body was found in the Thames. She was the light and joy of her father's house, and although there has been sorrowing through her untimely end, the mourners remember that the Lord is King, and that eternity will show his providences to have been merciful and righteous.

FRANCES KIRKHAM.

In our last we regretfully recorded the death of Frances, the beloved wife of our dear brother, Gawin Kirkham, of the Open-air Mission. The following particulars will interest our readers, and, we trust, stimulate others to tread in her steps:—She was a true Christian worker, and many will bless God for her labours. When resident in Bermondsey, she was one of the district visitors in St. Paul's parish, and continued to act in the same capacity on removing to St. Michael's, Islington, thirty years ago. There she also conducted a large mothers' meeting. Her district visiting was resumed at St. Jude's, Mildmay Park, on removing there eighteen years ago.

Her forte was in personal dealing. Armed with a handful of tracts and periodicals, she would give them on her walks among working-men, cabmen, carmen, policemen, and others whom she met. The rougher the man, the greater the attraction he had for her, as she seemed absolutely devoid of fear on these occasions, though naturally very timid. She seldom gave a tract without a word in season. She almost invariably entered into conversation with those who came to her house, whether traders, workmen, or beggars, and exhorted, warned, or encouraged them, as their cases required. She delighted in having her poorest friends round her to tea, and the last tea in her garden was for railway porters, milkmen, and others.

Missionary enterprises had a great charm for her, and she eagerly read all missionary literature that came in her way. She had set times for praying for missions, and the mission workers are now the poorer for her departure, except indeed that He who has called her hence will assuredly fulfil her petitions; and that the Spirit will lead others to exercise a like ministry of prayer. Like most women, she had a kindly side for the animal creation, and many a man will remember her for her warm remonstances against ill-using his horses, and for the tracts she distributed on kindness to animals. Being naturally timid, she had the fear of death before her more or less all her life. But during the last illness, grace was given to triumph in Christ, and she wished all her friends to know that she had neither doubt or fear. "So He giveth his beloved sleep."

MRS. MARY BINGLEY, TUNBRIDGE WELLS.

After an illness of many years, borne with cheerful resignation, God has taken to Himself one who was peculiarly the friend of young people. Mrs. Bingley (née Singleton) was formerly of Armthorpe, Yorkshire. Laid aside from more active service, she drew within her gentle influence an ever-increasing circle of young and loving hearts; and amid much pain and weariness sought to lead them to consecrate their youthful energies to the Master's work. Associated with her in the fund well known as "Mrs. Bingley's Bible Pennies," they learned the secret of a happy, useful, and consecrated life; and many—besides her children—"rise up and call her blessed."

CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES.

A NEW CHRISTIAN VILLAGE has been started among the Nagas of the Assam Hills, called Abmu (A.B.M.U.), from the initial letters of the American Baptist Missionary Union.

THE PRESS OF BERLIN is largely in the hands of the Jews. At least twenty journals, several of them very popular and widely circulated, are altogether subject to Jewish direction and influence. The capital of Germany has a Jewish population of 90,000.

FRANCE.—M. Ernest Naville, the well-known Swiss scholar and traveller, has been made a Knight of the Legion of Honour. This distinction, conferred upon a Protestant held in high esteem in the churches for his spirituality of mind, has given much joy both in France and Switzerland.

BASEL.—The first report of the House of Deacons, directed by Pastor Stahel, gives details of interesting progress. Of six young men who entered, five are now engaged in the hospital of Basel. On leaving the House the "brothers" declare their intention to do their utmost during the succeeding four years, with all deference to those under whom they may labour, to serve the sick, and conduct themselves as men living in the presence of God and at his constant disposal.

GAMBLING AT GENEVA.—The State Council has ordered the immediate closing of four clubs which had been veritable gaming houses. A short time previously complaint had been made by the Genevan Association for the Suppression of Gaming-houses, and the Government of Geneva had been requested to enforce Article 35 of the Federal Constitution. These facts are encouraging for persons and societies who protest against such evils.—Journal Religieux de la Suisse Romande.

CALUMNIATION OF THE REFORMERS is singularly rife at present among Continental Romanists. Having been foiled in their attempt to blacken the character of Luther, they have now turned attention to Theodore Beza, whom a Genevan zealot has been describing as if he were a despicable villain. M. H. Reymond has vindicated the character of Beza. As a result of personal examination of contemporary records, he has shown that, while in his early days, as a Papist, Beza led a sinful career, and exerted a harmful influence by his pen, after his conversion all was different, his great natural gifts and energy being devoted to the spread of the truth, which he adorned by consistent purity and nobility of life.

PROTESTANTISM IN GERMANY.—A Berlin correspondent of The Pall Mall Gazette writes:—"There can be no doubt that the orthodox Protestant party, so long ill-treated by Bismarck, and neglected for the more powerful Catholic Centre, is rapidly gaining ground. The Evangelical Social Congress, held a few days ago, is significant in this respect. The Evangelical Church has not for many generations made itself so much felt in all departments of public life as it does now. It is the decided ambition of the Emperor and the Empress to make the Imperial crown a Protestant one, just as that of the Middle Ages was a Roman Catholic one depending on the goodwill of Rome. As yet the Imperial dignity is not a Protestant one by constitution, but only in so far as it is connected with the Prussian Crown which can only be worn by Protestants."

ITALY.—Amongst the martyrs of the sixteenth century was Aonio Poleario, a professor who, accused of leanings towards the Reformation, was imprisoned for three years, and ultimately burned at Rome in 1570. Recently, at Colle de Val d'Elsa, near Sienna, a company of atheistic Freethinkers celebrated the event, claiming Poleario as an "apostle of reason." Professor Comba, however, established the fact that the martyr died in a nobler cause, being a faithful and true servant of Christ. For the most part the people heard with joy that the martyr was a man of faith, and the occasion was improved to their instruction as to the distinction that subsists between the Gospel and the Papacy. It is the heel of Rome that the Italian populace is kicking against. When the truth is put before them there is a ready recognition of the fact that bearing the yoke of Christ is to enjoy true freedom.

Missionary Conference at Chamounix.—A missionary Conference is to be held at Chamounix during August, probable date 18 to 22. Information concerning missionary effort will be given by Rev. F. B. Meyer, Pasteur Vernier (Valence), Pasteur Lecoat (Brittany), Monsieur R. Saillens (Paris), &c. Christian friends are invited. For information as to railway fares, board and lodging, &c., application may be made to Rev. N. L. Bluett, Avenue de la Gare, Annemasse, Haute Savoie, France.

"THE KING'S DAUGHTERS."

IN the "American Notes," which appeared on April 18, our correspondent said of "The King's Daughters":—

The Unitarians control the majority of these bands; all evangelical reference to the blood of atonement has been purged from their tracts. A Unitarian magazine openly endorses "The King's Daughters" by this statement: "We are now satisfied, since 'The King's Daughters' make Christ a Saviour, as General Grant was a Saviour."

This was questioned by a lady in England, who said:—

The executive committee and all the controlling officers are evangelical Christians, and the whole tone of the order is decidedly Christian.

Our American correspondent replies by sending us an article reprinted in The Episcopal Recorder from The Western Christian Advocate (Methodist). We make the following extracts:

Those familiar with the origin of the order will understand why we W.C.A. said it had a strong flavour of Unitarianism from the start. They know that it was suggested by Dr. Hale, the great Unitarian leader, as a sort of counterpart of his clubs, whose mottoes "The King's Daughters" have borrowed...It is well calculated—though certainly not so designed by its eminent founders (what effect upon orthodoxy Dr. Hale may have anticipated, when he suggested it, is not for us to say)—insidiously to destroy the faith of our children in the essentials of our holy religion. We believe the protesters asked the only thing that would have made the order for all time an efficient ally of the Church. As it is, it has little promise for any but the Unitarians. The slide is toward Boston.

Mrs. Meredith in her monthly magazine, Open Doors, recently expressed the same view of the Order as our American correspondent, and kindly drew our attention to it. We have waited, however, to hear from our correspondent who, we think, has proved his original assertion.

Speaking for ourselves, we view with no satisfaction the organisation of new Associations and Orders to do the work which the Lord Christ committed to his body the Church.

THE BIBLE CARRIAGE MISSION.—In a report just issued, Mr. Northcote Willy says that during the two years ended December last about two hundred and seventy villages and towns were visited, and over 49,000 Bibles and Testaments, and about 367,000 books, tracts, Scripture cards, &c., circulated. The Gospel was preached both indoors and out, and the workers have had the joy of seeing many pass from death unto life. Of late the work has been progressing with encouragement in north and south Staffordshire, and the county of Durham. At the end of last year, the Mission was in debt to a considerable amount. Mr. Willy's address is 66, Cambridge-avenue, Chapeltown-road, Leeds.

MR. WILLIAM NOBLE AT MALVERN.—The many friends of this well-known temperance advocate will be glad to hear that he is again able to undertake platform work. In seeking restored health he was directed to Malvern, and his stay in that delightful locality has had the desired effect. On Thursday last week, on the invitation of some old temperance friends, Mr. Noble gave an address in the large hall of the Assembly Rooms. An audience was gathered numbering about 500. Mr. Noble's words had in them all his accustomed fervour and pathos. His unswerving faith in the coming triumph of the temperance cause gave his address a hopeful and refreshing tone. He was listened to with the deepest attention.

HOPE MISSION, BANNER STREET, E.C.—Miss James, 33, Highbury-place, N., writes to us:—"There is good of the highest kind being seen week by week, especially among the young, many coming and joining themselves as followers of our Saviour, and then helping in various agencies. In my long illness, it is a comfort to hear of all that is going on in the Mission which I have loved for fifteen years." For some years the work has been carried on in temporary premises. At last, however, a freehold site has been secured, on which to erect a suitable permanent building. The total cost is estimated at £3975, of which sum only about £800 remains to be raised. Many have helped nobly by means of contributions; and it is hoped that the committee will soon be in a position to build. The hon. treasurer is Mr. R. J. Moser, 23, Maresfield-gardens, Hampstead, N.W.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Bishop and Mrs. Selwyn have contributed £3000 towards the cost of an auxiliary steam vessel for the Melanesia Mission service.

The Bishop of Liverpool opened a new mission church for the parish of St. Cuthbert's, Everton, Liverpool, a few days ago. Dr. Ryle, in the course of a practical address on "Faith," spoke highly of the increasing necessity for mission work in parishes.

Rev. H. B. Swete, D.D., rector of Ashdon, Saffron Walden, has been elected Regius Professor of Divinity at Cambridge, in succession to Bishop Westcott. Dr. Swete has lectured on Divinity at Cambridge, and is now Pastoral Professor of Theology at King's College, London. He has brought out several theological works.

The Church Missionary Society has now definitely fixed the areas and dates of the "February Simultaneous Meetings" for 1891. The old name is still kept; but the meetings in the dioceses of Durham, Newcastle, Carlisle, Manchester, Liverpool, Chester, and Sodor and Man will be held from January 26 to January 30. Yorkshire and Wales will occupy the first week in February.

The annual meetings of the Yorkshire Evangelical Union have lately been held in York. Among the subjects discussed were, "The Bible, in reference to some current sceptical thought," and "How may we maintain religion in our families on the basis of evangelical truth?" The speakers included Archdeacon Hughes-Games (of the Isle of Man), Canon M'Cormick. Canon Tebbutt, Canon Fausset (who presided), and many others.

On Wednesday evening, last week, in St. Paul's Cathedral, the Bishop of Chester preached a special sermon on the housing of the poor, at the annual festival service of the East London Church Fund. Taking as his text the words, "Ready unto every good work," Dr. Jayne said it was the duty of the Church to join hands with the State in all questions of social amelioration. The homes of vast numbers of the labouring poor in our densely populated towns were fearfully wretched in their surroundings, their squalor, and their penury, and he earnestly appealed to Christian people to support the movement to provide them with better dwellings.

BAPTIST.

Rev. E. H. Ellis, of Stoke Newington, has felt compelled to relinquish, for the present, his work in connection with the Baptist Forward Movement in Central London owing to pressure of other work.

In connection with the church at Barry Docks, Cadoxton, a mission-room has been opened at Halton. Services will be held both morning and evening every Lord's Day. Cottage prayer-meetings have been held in this place for some time past, and as the result there are some applicants waiting for baptism.

Rev. C. H. Spurgeon has been unable, through indisposition, during the past week to see, as usual, those anxious or desirous about joining his Church. At the Metropolitan Tabernacle on Sunday morning he was obliged to lean on a stick during portions of the service. Were he to consult his own feeling, he said, he should refrain from preaching for a short time, but he could not do so, and would go on preaching the Word of God as long as he was able.

CONGREGATIONAL.

The day of special prayer set apart by the Congregational Union has been changed from October 5 to September 28. At many churches it has been arranged to have a week of prayer.

High-street Church, Auburn, Maine (says The Boston Congregationalist) has, during the past year, employed Rev. James Heath in missionary work similar to that in which he was engaged in Birmingham, Eng., visiting families not connected with any church. He has made over 3000 calls, held 54 cottage meetings, and 80 meetings in schoolhouses, and brought into churches and Sunday-schools about 25.

Rev. Nigel MacNeill, LL.D., was publicly recognised a few days ago as pastor of Bedford Church, Charrington-street, N.W. Dr. MacNeill declared his intention to use every authorised instrument in order to reach those who were "out of the way," believing that no class were sunk so low as not to be touched by the love of the Master when that love was presented to them in a form which they could understand.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. John McNeill conducted his last service at Exeter Hall on Sunday afternoon. Next Sunday afternoon he will speak at the open-air service by the bandstand in Regent's Park, along with Revs. Dr. Monro Gibson, Z. B. Woffendale, Duncan Sillars, and other ministers.

Rev. John Watson, after six months' absence, has returned in restored health, and occupied his pulpit in Sefton-park Church, Liverpool, on the morning of Sunday week when there was an overflowing congregation. Rev. R. H. Semple, the new assistant, occupied the pulpit in the evening.

At the meeting of the London Presbytery last week, Rev. D. Fotheringham, of Tottenham, was cordially welcomed home after his tour in the Holy Land. Mr. Courthope Todd, of the Theatrical Mission, was licensed as a minister. Rev. D. M. McIntyre reported that a tent mission would be conducted this summer in connection with College-park Church, Willesden. Rev. James Paterson reported that Rev. John McNeill's Sunday afternoon services had extended to nine weeks. The Presbytery thanked Mr. McNeill for conducting the services, and the Exeter Hall Committee for granting the free use of that building.

METHODIST.

The Canadian Methodist Conference has authorised the establishment of a sisterhood for church work and evangelisation.

The Government has granted to the Wesleyans a site for a movable chapel to be put up between the "New Wimbledon" (Bisley Common) and the Guards' encampment at Pirbright. The building will be used as a Soldiers' Home during the week, and will cost £250.

SALVATION ARMY.

A new Rescue Home has been opened at Norwood.

Marshal Ballington Booth states that there are now about 350,000 members of the Army in the United States.

The lease of Finsbury Chapel has been secured by the Army, and noonday services, &c., will be announced shortly.

Camp meetings are held on a very large scale near Stockholm. At the close of one recently a number of penitents knelt in front of the temporary platform.

The tenth anniversary of the Army's advent into the United States has been celebrated at the Y.M.C.A. Hall, New York, which was crowded. A surprising testimony was given by a Spanish ecclesiastic who had been wonderfully blessed through the Army in Switzerland.

Two days' meetings were conducted by Mr. Booth at the Birmingham Town Hall last week, the attendance being highly satisfactory; amongst those who took a practical interest in the gatherings were Rev. Messrs. Wiseman, Knight, Odell, Mantle, Stephens, and Cariss, also Mr. Richard Cadbury and Alderman Edwards.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

Friends' Missionary Advocate says:—"Four young Africans from Mary Sharp's school in Liberia, have been sent to Central Tennessee College, America. Their education is to be provided for by Friends of Iowa."

Mary M. Haines and party, of Philadelphia, now in Japan, are sending home very cheering accounts of work there. The meeting in Tokyo is healthy and grows, and new meeting houses will soon be needed at Mito and Bancho. A boys' school is in contemplation. The Friends look with anxiety towards coming military laws and developments, as the new constitution in Japan includes conscription.

The National Women's Christian Temperance Union of America recommended the first Sabbath in June as a "Peace Sunday" to all its local unions, and The Christian Worker encouraged Friends to take up the subject earnestly, while the next Sabbath (the second in June) was set apart as "Children's Day" within the bounds of Western Yearly Meeting. A collection to be taken that day to be devoted to the education of young men and women who feel called to preach the Gospel.

Esther Butler, writing from Nanking, describes the purchase of ground, and preparation for building now in hand. "Both the orphanage and Bible-women's work are comparatively new for this part of China. So far as I know there is no Protestant orphanage, purely missionary, in China, but Friends are going to establish both." Esther Butler presses the supreme need of a call and conviction from God in undertaking mission work in China. Only this sustains amid all difficulties.

During the recent London Yearly Meeting of the Society of Friends two meetings were held in the interests of anti-vivisection. George Gillett (London) presided, and spoke earnestly in favour of the abolition of legalised vivisection, several others also spoke and manifested great interest, and a Friends' Anti-Vivisection Association was formed. Joseph Storrs Fry (Bristol) was appointed president. T. Beaven Clark, Somerton, Somerset; and E. Isabel Hall, Pembury-avenue, Tottenham, are the hon. secretaries.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

A meeting convened at the instance of the Manchester Women's Christian Temperance Association, for humiliation and prayer on account of the drink traffic, was held in the hall of the Y.M.C.A., Belfast, on Monday evening week.

A Home of Rest in connection with the Y.W.C.A., similar to that founded about a year ago at Portrush, co. Antrim, for overworked girls in the North of Ireland, has been opened at Greystones, near Dublin, for girls in the South and Midlands.

The annual Methodist Conference has been in session in Belfast during the past week. Four ministers have become supernumeraries, and five died during the year. Ten young men were received as suitable candidates for the ministry, and four were declined; seven young men who have satisfactorily completed their probationary course were received for ordination, and twenty-two others remain on trial.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

Rev. Edward Horley, rector of Sefton, Liverpool.—Rev. James Peet, Wesleyan minister, Stainland, Halifax, formerly a missionary in the Gambia, West Africa.—Rev. William Alexander, senior pastor of Duntocher Free Church, N.B.—Rev. A. L. Blachford, American Presbyterian missionary to Brazil.—Rev. John Calder, parish minister of Partick, Glasgow.—Dr. J. G. Adamson, of Lurgan, a Presbyterian elder.—Mr. James Tyrell, of Mullingar, Methodist class leader.

A Chinese Christian in Tientsin, educated in America, has started a crusade against the inhuman custom of footbinding.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

These Notes run concurrently with the Readings of the "Bible and Prayer Union," founded and conducted by Rev. Thomas Richardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Mile End-road, London, E., of whom card of membership may be had for 1d., and Monthly Notes, prepared by himself, for 1s. per annum, post free. We hope many of our readers will become members of the "Bible and Prayer Union," and take its Monthly Notes, which of course are entirely different from these.

SUNDAY, JUNE 22.—Psalm XLIV.

THIS Psalm is so like lx. that they were probably occasioned by the same circumstances. While David was fighting with the Syrians, the Edomites made an incursion. Amid the anguish of the time this Psalm may have been composed by the sons of Korah. David's return was God's answer to their cry (2 Sam. viii. 13, 14). Others refer it to 2 Chron. xx.

It well befits any time of the Church's history when her former prosperous condition contrasts sadly with her depressed and suffering state. Rom. viii. 22 points the application of ver. 22.

Thou hast helped us (1-3). Thou must help us (4-8). Thou art not helping us (9-16). We are not conscious of having done aught to forfeit thy help (17-22). We invoke thy help (23-26).

3. Deut. viii. 7-18.—All that we are, and have, and hope for is the gift of God's undeserved mercy. We need not boast, but we need not fear to lose.

4. We cannot expect deliverances till we have made Christ our King.

8, 9, 10.—Sometimes God takes away all sensible enjoyment and encouragement, to see whether we will still cling to Him for Himself. Happy are we if we can adopt ver. 18.

20, 21. Josh. xxii. 22.—The path to victory lies through death and the grave.

23.—Though the Lord seem to sleep, it is in the stern of the boat. Do not be afraid. If He is with you, no storm can prevail to your destruction (Mark iv. 40).

MONDAY, JUNE 23.—Psalm XLV.

The inscription of this exquisite Psalm, to the chief musician, indicates that it was intended to be employed in God's service. Therefore, though it was probably suggested by Solomon's marriage with the daughter of Pharaoh, we must pass beyond the mere outward interpretation to consider these glowing words in their relation to Christ and his Church. The Psalm is distinctly applied to Him (Heb. i. 8); and the union between Him and his people is often described in such imagery (Eph. v. 23, &c.) Let us pray for the time when the universe shall ring with this marriage-ode, as the hour of the marriage of the Lamb shall have come, and heathen nations partake the joy (Rev. xix. 7). Shoshannim means lilies, and tells of the purity of heart that becomes this song of love.

1. Oh for the heart, like a geyser, kept ever on the boil with love for Jesus. We should make things about our King, weaving chaplets, composing hymns. When the heart is full, there will be no difficulty about the tongue (Acts ii. 4).

Here is good matter indeed. His beauty (2); his victorious might (4); his Divine nature and everlasting reign (6); his joy (7); his sweetness (8); his bride (13); the splendour of the royal procession (15); the number and royalty of his posterity (16).

2. Happy are they who live in his presence (1 Kings x. 8; Luke iv. 22).

3, 4. These imperatives are predictions of what the King will do. Though his plans are made, prayer is required to put them in operation. Because of truth means in the cause of truth. Our King fights for us, and conquers Death, Satan, and the Grave. We march to victory over a fallen foe.

7. Here is the secret of perennial joy. So far as we enter into Christ's spirit, we shall share in his joy, such as our fellows cannot know.

8. The word smell might be omitted. The royal robes are as sweet as if they were made of myrrh.

11. Those are likeliest to know the preciousness of Christ's love who, in an abandonment of surrender, cut the cords which would hold them back from Him, and bind them to old and worldly connections. Be only for Christ, so shalt thou taste his secret love.

13. Within is in contrast to out of the palaces (8), and refers to the interior of the royal residence. Is there not also a reference to the hidden beauties of Christian character?

17. Let us pass on that precious name, that the people may break forth into praise in all ages and climes.

TUESDAY, JUNE 24.—Psalm XLVI.

The historical occasion of this Psalm cannot be certainly determined. But it is very probable that it was composed when Jerusalem was beleaguered by Sennacherib's hosts (Is. xxxvii.). It befits every era in which the Church is in danger from her foes, and foretells the final destruction of Antichrist. It was Luther's favourite, and is rendered into verse in his memorable hymn, Ein feste Burg. During the sitting of the Diet of Augsburg he sang it every day to his lute, standing at the window, and looking up to heaven.

The theme, the security of God's people amid storms, is elaborated in three divisions, at the end of each of which Selah recurs.

1-3. These words inspired Hezekiah's address to the captains (2 Chron. xxxii. 7). We never know how near God can be till we are in trouble. Mountains stand for the most stable things on which we had been wont to fix our confidence. The roaring of the restless sea might well strike with panic the heart which has not got into the covert of its refuge—God.

4-7. In opposition to the raging of the sea is the even flow of the pellucid river. Alone among great cities Jerusalem lacked a river, but God Himself was all to her that a river was to them (Is. xxxiii. 21). The river, throughout Scripture, from Eden to the New Jerusalem, is a symbol of the presence of God. The margin (5) gives a beautiful alternative reading: "When the morning appeareth." Distress, in the case of God's people, is limited to a night's stay. But probably there is an allusion to Isa. xxxvii. 36. God is never before his time, but never a moment too late (Matt. xiv. 25).

8-11. War in the Church and the world is doomed, and shall become an extinct art before the Gospel of the love of God. We must cultivate the habit of stillness in our lives, if we would detect and know God. If Jehovah is willing to be known as Jacob's God, I too may claim Him, though I be but a worm (Isa. xli. 14).

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 28.—Psalm XLVII.

This Psalm probably dates from 2 Chron. xx. Without a battle, Israel obtained a victory. They stood still and saw the salvation of God, given in answer to King Jehoshaphat's prayer. The Korhites, whose name is inscribed above it, are expressly mentioned as having been present (19). Before the people left the field, they held a thanksgiving service in the valley of praise (26). From that valley God is depicted as having made his ascent to heaven, having wrought deliverance for his people. This Psalm was probably sung in that valley of blessing. It is a double call to praise, addressed first to the heathen (1-4), and next to Israel. The name Elohim occurs seven times.

1-4. In these days of world-wide evangelisation, the Gentile peoples are beginning to respond to this invitation.

3. If He can subdue nations, surely He can overcome our sins (Luke x. 19).

4. Let God choose for you.

5. An anticipation of the Ascension (Ps. lxviii. 18).

6. Let no heart be cold, no tongue be dumb. Holy songs stir the spirit.

7. God claims the kingdoms of this world, which is in revolt, but the end is sure (Rev. xix. 6).

8. Holiness is the basis of God's rule.

9. The shields of the earth are the princes, as protectors of the people (Hos. iv. 18, marg.). Compare Rev. xxi. 24.

THURSDAY, JUNE 26.—Psalm XLVIII.

This Psalm was probably composed on the same occasion as the foregoing, only that was sung in the valley of Berachah, and this on the return to Jerusalem and the temple (9). Tekoa was only three hours' march from the city, and commanded an extensive view, so that vv. 4, 5 were literally true. Let the reader turn to 2 Chron. xx. 27, which tells the occasion of this burst of jubilation. There is also a special connection between ver. 7 and the circumstances described in 1 Kings xxii. 49.

The divisions are easy: the dignity and beauty of Jerusalem, as the city of God (1-3); the special instance of Divine deliverance is gratefully recorded (4-8); glad thanksgivings (9-11); and exhortations to commemorate God's goodness to coming generations.

2. Zion was the heart and centre of the holy city, which clustered around its northern slopes. The Church is the city of God now, in which He dwells, and is known for a refuge.

3 The grandest palace without God is no refuge for the weary, hunted soul. But a hovel becomes a palace if God is known and loved there.

5. Notice the magnificent brevity of this verse. As if one glimpse of that city struck them with panic.

7. The destruction of the foe was as sudden and total as the sinking of a vessel struck by a cyclone.

8. Whatever God has done in former days, He is able and willing, if needs be, to do again.

9. Let us cultivate the habit of holy musing on this sweet and boundless theme.

13. Consider God's wonderful dealings with his people. Their choice, redemption, adoption, sanctification, eternal inheritance. Each is a subject for marking well and pondering.

14. Let us replace the our by my; and bind this text as a jewel on our heart.

FRIDAY, JUNE 27.—Psalm XLIX.

The subject of this Psalm is the prosperity of the wicked, as contemplated by the righteous. This was a frequent cause of wonder to these Hebrew thinkers. And the singer presents to us the only consolation within the reach of those times, that the glory and success of the ungodly was but temporary, and that it would pass away as a shadow; whilst the righteous might count upon long vistas of unbroken blessedness in the presence of God.

We may divide thus: The introduction (1-4); the argument (5-15); the conclusion (16-20).

4. The Psalmist has no hesitation in asking for universal audience, because he only speaks what he has heard with the ear; he brings forth in song what he had learnt from God. There is melody in God's darkest sayings.

5. The second clause might be better rendered, "When the iniquity of my treaders-down compasses me about."

7. Men are very foolish to take airs on themselves, because they are rich. After all, money cannot do much for its owners. It will not enable a man to redeem either his brother or himself from untimely or sudden death. "A million of money for a moment of time," cried Elizabeth on her death-bed.

10-12. And yet, though wealthy and wicked men are surrounded by death, they try as much as possible to ignore it, and endeavour to obtain immortality for themselves in this world by the perpetuation of their names on their estates.

14. The idea here is of a flock of sheep, with death as shepherd, conducting them to the fold of the grave and sheol. What a contrast to Ps. xxiii. 1! The morning of resurrection glory is not far away, with its songs of triumph; lift up your heads, your redemption draweth nigh.

18. Our Lord's parables are the best commentary on these words (Luke xii. 19; xvi. 25).

SATURDAY, JUNE 28.—Psalm L.

Asaph is named as the author of this Psalm. Perhaps he who is mentioned 1 Chron. xv. 17, 19, and in 2 Chron. xxix. 30. It contains a severe rebuke of the hypocrite who contents himself with giving a mere outward obedience to the ritual of God's house, but withholds the love and homage of his heart.

In the earlier part God is represented as coming again, as once at Sinai, but now to vindicate and explain the spiritual requirements of his holy law (1-6); then the errors in observing the first table are discovered (8-15); after which the Psalmist indicates the violations of the second table (16-21); then there is an impressive conclusion (22, 23). The Psalm is very interesting, because showing how the devout Israelites viewed the Levitical ritual as being only the vehicle and expression of the yearnings and worship of the spiritual life, but not of any value apart from a recognition of God's claims on the devotion of his people.

1. God still calls the earth through the Gospel of Jesus.

5. There are times when the saints have to stand before God, and receive into the depths of their heart his searching scrutiny (Mal. iii. 1-3).

9-13. God holds the keys to the commissariat of the universe. Dost thou doubt that He can supply thy table?

15. There is no uncertainty here. God knows our troubles, but He demands that we should call. Days of trouble are often sent to make us call.

21. The silence of God in sight of the evil around is due to his longsuffering, but it will not be for ever (3).

23. What a spectacle for the holy soul! Our way may seem dark, but if we dare go on doing right, we shall certainly experience the Divine deliverance. Stand still, and see the salvation of God.

International S.S. Lessons.

Sunday Afternoon, June 29.

REVIEW OF THE QUARTER'S LESSONS.

GOLDEN TEXT: JOHN iii. 2.

IT was the miracles Jesus did that led Nicodemus to recognise in Him "a Teacher come from God" (Golden Text). These give Him a claim upon the attention, and faith, and obedience of all (John v. 36; x. 25; xiv. 10-11). This purpose his miracles serve to-day. They prove his teaching true.

Recall the miracles recorded during this quarter's lessons. The raising of the widow's son (vii. 11-18); the raising of the ruler's daughter (viii. 41-56), and feeding the multitude (ix. 10-17). The Transfiguration adds strength to his claim to be heard and believed (ix. 28-36). What did the voice from heaven say concerning Him? What use did John (i. 14) and Peter (2 Pet. i. 16-18) make of this incident? God, by his own voice, and by the miracles which Jesus did, demands that we "hear Him."

What has He taught? The Law of Love (vi. 27-38), in which He gave a very high ideal. (Recall, and get the scholars to repeat, the Golden Rule.) The lesson on "Forgiveness and Love" (vii. 36-50) shows how such an ideal can be reached. An unforgiven man cannot live the life of love. (Again ask for the Golden Text, 1 John iv. 19). The parable of the sower shows what hindrances our own hearts present to the reception of the Gospel (viii. 4-15). Men are unsaved because they do not hear the Gospel aright. (The Golden Text again applies the lesson). In the mission of the seventy the Golden Text (x. 11) reminds us of our responsibility. Neglected opportunity increases guilt. If the Gospel has come nigh to us and we have rejected it, our condition at the judgment shall be worse than that of Tyre and Sidon, or even Sodom. The good Samaritan (x. 25-37) gives another illustration of the law of love. It must count every sufferer as a neighbour to be loved and helped. And the next lesson (xi. 1-13) reminds us that our help must be accompanied by intercession. The two last lessons warn against the dangers besetting this life of love. The one is covetousness (xii. 13-21), and the other anxious care (22-34).

There can be no doubt that this teaching describes the only life worth living. It begins with forgiveness; therefore urge to the acceptance of that. But do not stop there. Forgiveness is only in order to a life of love.

Then, if the ideal still seems too high, recall the miracles again, and remember He who wrought those miracles is able to work out in our life what He has taught us. Scholars—and teachers too—will soon find their own helplessness, and will have to fall back upon what "He is able" to do. "Is anything too hard for the Lord?"

THE REGENT'S-PARK CHAPEL MISSION BAND visited Hendon last Saturday. Tea was kindly provided at the Baptist Chapel, and a meeting was held, which was addressed by Rev. F. B. Meyer and Rev. G. D. Hooper. Afterwards an open-air meeting was held which was largely attended.

MADAGASCAR.—Rev. E. H. Stribling, of the London Missionary Society, has issued, under the title of "Among the Malagasy," a sketch of mission work during last year in the province of Antsihanaka, about one hundred miles north of Antananarivo. The Sihanaka, or "lake people," are darker in colour than the Hova tribe, and not a few of them are of fine physique and possess considerable mental power. The majority of the people are real heathen, living in superstition and degradation, and given to rum-drinking. The Christian community shows an increase upon the year; and, notwithstanding surroundings eminently unfavourable to a vigorous spiritual life, maintain a standard fairly comparable with others who possess far greater advantages. Total abstinence makes good progress; but the schools have suffered much through the drafting of boys into military service. So the story is not exclusively encouraging. Moreover, the missionaries deplore sad indifference on the part of the Christians to aggressive efforts upon the surrounding ignorance. Every church member is earnestly called upon to render personal service; and so the great need in Madagascar appears to be precisely the same as so many are realising wherever the name of Christ is praised.

INQUIRERS' COLUMN.

THE CONQUERING CHRIST.

IN an address on 1 Cor. xv. 22 I stated that Christ took upon Himself a human (not sinful) nature, similar to Adam's. Where Adam fell Christ conquered, although it was possible for Christ to sin, even as it was for Adam. Some dear servants of God are doubtful as to whether I was Scripturally justified in using the words in italics, as He was God, though man, and therefore could not sin.

We read (1) Heb. iv. 15: "He was tempted in all points." Would it be temptation, if there were not the possibility to sin? (2) Rev. iii. 19: "I also overcame." Would it be overcoming, if there were no possibility of being overcome?—Yours,

May 22. INQUIRER.

REPLY.

Such a statement as that in italics is not justified by any word of Scripture, and, therefore, is beyond the authorised message of an ambassador of Christ. It was not because He was God that Jesus could not sin, for He had emptied Himself, and as a perfect man lived by perfect faith in God; "He was anointed of the Holy Ghost, and went about doing good, for God was with Him." The prince of this world had nothing in Him.

Christ was indeed tested; but there was in Him no "mind of the flesh" to respond to temptation. His sole purpose was to do the will of God, which included the "putting away" of sin with our weaknesses and infirmities. Christ can perfectly sympathise, for He bore them; as to our sins, our lapses, He did not share them, but put them away, redeemed us from them, and their consequences as well. This latter He could not have done, if, in his own personality, He had not been emphatically "holy, harmless, undefiled, and separate from sinners." The Lord was the "stronger than the strong man;" that He should overcome was, therefore, a foregone conclusion.

RECONCILIATION AND SALVATION.

HAVING heard a sermon on Rom. v. 10, I wish to know the meaning generally given to the words of that text. I was rather surprised by the definition put upon it, to the effect that reconciliation was not salvation! Surely the former is a preliminary step to the latter. According to Acts xiii. 38, we have forgiveness and pardon by the death of Christ, and by his resurrection we are justified from all things. Christ's resurrection from the grave is the great testimony of the acceptance of the Atonement. Being reconciled to God, by the suffering of the penalty of our sins by his Son, we are saved; and that salvation is much more abundant by his life. "Because I live, ye shall live also," says our Saviour. "Reconciliation" and "salvation" cannot, I think, be divided in the way the preacher seemed to do.

Yours truly in Christ, T. C. VAUGHAN.

REPLY.

Rom. v. 9.—The word "reconciled" is used here, and is prominent, because in the previous clause we are represented as being, naturally, enemies. The Gospel teaches that "God is, in Christ, reconciling the world unto Himself." We are responsible for the quarrel, if it is kept up. The cross is the love-token of heaven set up on the enemy's land. Thus we are reconciled. Now, being thus, we are saved by (or in) his life. We cannot be more perfectly delivered from wrath and judgment than we are already through the blood of Jesus. Further than this, however, there is a salvation going on between salvation from hell and the entrance into glory. "Because I live, ye shall live also." In a risen Christ, in an ascended Saviour, in a coming Lord, we have a security for joy, peace, safety, counsel, constant supply, grace for life, service, death (if need be). All in his life, through the Spirit. There are three stages: (1) Cleansed by the Blood, salvation accomplished—"God, who hath saved us" (2 Tim. i. 9.) (2) Preserved on the journey, salvation in progress—"the Gospel...by which ye are being saved" (1 Cor. xv. 2). (3) Glory in the end, salvation consummated—"through the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, we shall be saved" (Acts. xv. 11). Reconciliation and atonement (i.e., expiation) are not the same thing; it is through atonement that reconciliation is effected. Reconciliation and salvation are not identical. But they co-exist, and cannot be separated.

COVENTRY Y.M.C.A.—Formed at the beginning of 1888, this Association has made steady progress. A year ago the present premises were entered, 50, Cross Cheaping, and in that period the membership has increased from 108 to 150. Bible-classes are held regularly, and other means are employed to evangelise young men and the public in general. The general secretary of the Association is Mr. F. Smith, 17, King-street, Coventry.

THE STAR VILLA ORPHAN HOME, Godwin-road, Hastings, conducted by Mrs. H. Willis on the family system, aims at the eternal salvation, as well as the temporal welfare of friendless children. When the eighth annual report was issued there were twenty-five orphans in the Home, and many had been refused admission through want of funds. The girls generally leave the Home for domestic service at the age of fifteen, but are still watched over as long as they need a mother's care. We are glad to notice in the report a reference to the interest taken in the work by several young ladies and gentlemen who engage in teaching, and the collection of funds. We could wish that more excellent institutions had such earnest supporters, also that the Home itself had as many friends as it really requires.

BRONCHO-PHTHISIS—PRECEDED BY HÆMORRHAGE—MR. FRATER, of LEEDS.

In August of last year this patient, MR. ALEX. A. FRATER, of 50, Briggate, LEEDS, applied to me. Referring to the case recently published of the Rev. W. R. Capel, of Bickenhall Vicarage, he says:—"This has been my experience exactly—always delicate when a young man, every winter attacked with asthmatic bronchitis on the slightest cold, the chief symptoms now being night cough, thick expectoration, soreness of the chest, and great difficulty of breathing." There was also loss of flesh; strength also had failed since the hæmorrhage.

The disease had commenced with the rupture of a blood-vessel nine months before, which laid him up for four months. After this had ceased the symptoms above narrated appeared. Pains in the right side had become severe, and he was beginning to lose flesh.

I advised him fully. In a little more than three months, after due perseverance, he writes me:—"It is due to you that I should inform you of the benefit I have received. In a week after commencing your treatment I felt better. I have persevered. I am now perfectly free from the distressing cough. I have gained six pounds in weight. I am recommending you to others. You can use the testimony as you see fit. I shall be pleased to answer any inquiry," &c., &c.

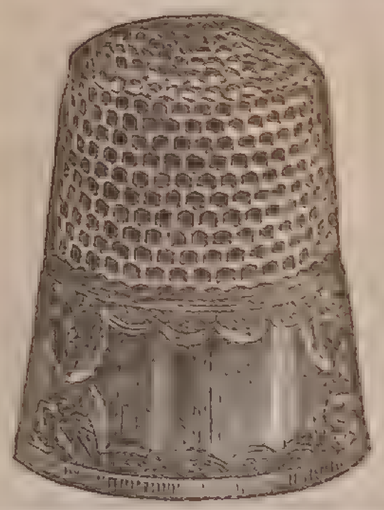
The "DORCAS" THIMBLE.



(Horner's Patent.)

STERLING SILVER.

The Queen, May 8th, says:—"The 'Dorcas' Thimble is more durable than the generality of these almost indispensable work-table implements; it is made in three parts, the inner and the outer being silver, and the intermediate Steel; these three are all struck up together, forming a resisting power not obtained in silver only. What is more uncomfortable than sewing with a thimble that has seen service to such an extent that it has holes in its sides? With the 'Dorcas' Thimble this annoyance vanishes."

The "COMPACTUM" UMBRELLA.

UNIVERSALLY ACKNOWLEDGED TO BE THE GREATEST TRIUMPH OF INVENTIVE GENIUS IN UMBRELLA MANUFACTURE.

59, Hugh-street, Eccleston-square, S.W.
April 12, 1889.

"About eight years ago, when you first opened your shop at 13, Poultry, for the sale of 'COMPACTUM' Umbrellas, I bought one, and although I have had it in constant use ever since, the frame has only just given way, and that through old age; in fact, it is quite rusty, and cannot be re-covered.

"I have much pleasure in stating that the advantages you hold out of the "COMPACTUM" Patent are quite correct in every point. I shall recommend them everywhere.

"I have just bought another, and am pleased to hand you the old one to make what use of you like, together with this letter.—"Yours faithfully, (Signed), "FRANK T. POULTER.
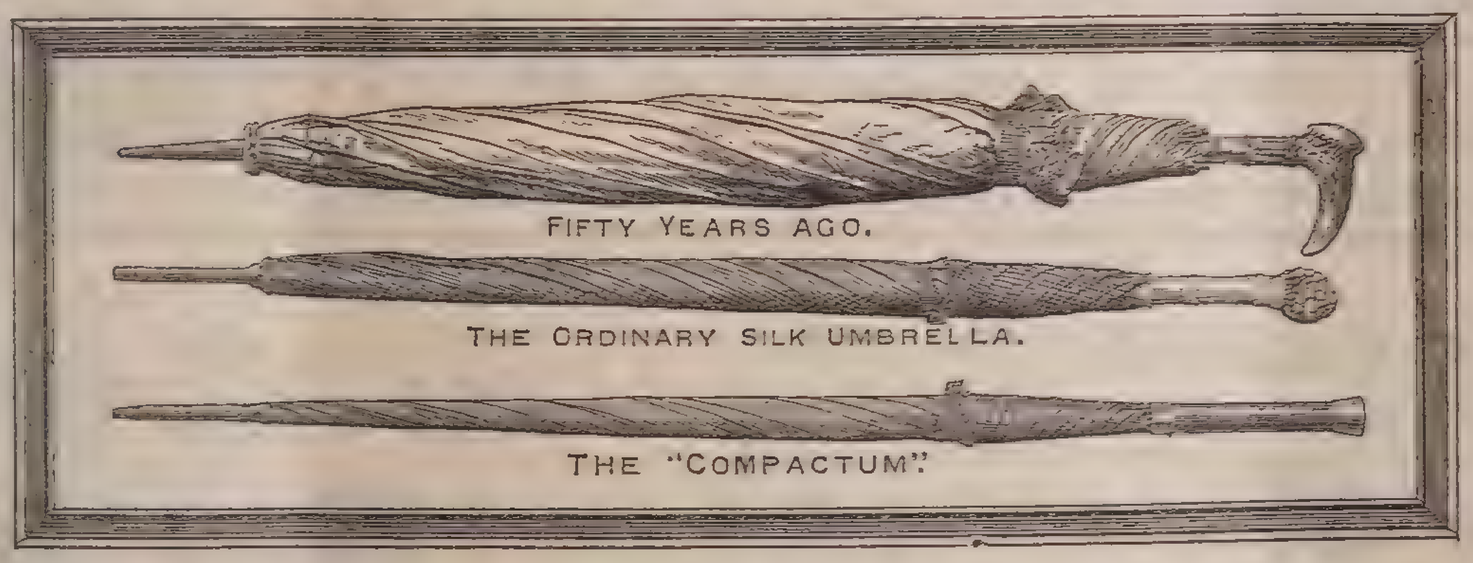
"Mr. H. A. Davis."



112, Commercial-street, E.
November 27, 1888.

"Please re-cover the 'COMPACTUM' I left you, with the same material as it was originally covered with. I take this opportunity of expressing my satisfaction with your Umbrellas. After using one all day and every day for two years, it would not have required re-covering now, but for coming in contact with a refractory nail.

"The 'Compactum' is therefore the cheapest as well as the most sightly of Umbrellas.

"You are at liberty to make what use you like of this letter.

Yours truly,
(Signed), "A. A. PHILLIPS.
"Mr. H. A. Davis."

THE NOTES and READINGS contained in this volume originally appeared in the pages of The Christian week by week. The interest taken in them at the time of their issue has led to republication in their present form. It will be observed that the Chapters have been considerably extended and enlarged since their appearance in The Christian; and several new features have been added.

It is believed that these "NOTES" and "READINGS" will be found of service by Sabbath School Teachers, and by Bible Students; whilst Ministers and Evangelist, may also be able to gather some help from their pages.

It should be understood that the present work is intended to be a HELP for Bible Readers. It is not, therefore, prepared with a view to being read through like an ordinary volume. But as chapter after chapter of the Pentateuch is perused by Bible Students, it is hoped that they will have this book open at their side for constant reference. In this way the use and value of the work will be the most fully realized.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Rev. J. Macgowan, of the London Missionary Society, Amoy, China.

☞ Our next issue will be a Double Number (price 2d.), and will contain full reports of addresses at the Mildmay Conference being held this week.

A special committee of friendly investigation, officially appointed by the Congregational Union, has published its report on the methods of work in connection with the London Missionary Society. Its meetings extended at intervals from June of last year to February of this, and were aided by the presence of successful missionaries. In dealing with the question of missionary celibacy, the committee, while recognising it as necessary under special limits, endorse the opinion that it is to be deprecated as a rule. It approves of the scheme of sending out for a term of years lay evangelists who have not had a theological collegiate training; and insists on the importance of institutions for training native agents. It recommends fixed centres rather than a vague itineracy. Such select Conferences may do much for foreign missions at this crisis.

A writer in The Nonconformist and Independent, who damages his testimony by the admission that he occasionally smokes himself, thus warns young ministers against the habit:—

> The pipe obtains a power over you as a chain of iron. It keeps a smoker indoors when he ought to be out. He will come to imagine that he cannot think or compose a sermon without it, and so the pipe becomes everything to him, and with the result—a clouded mind, a drowsy spirit, inevitable nervousness, and a thousand hypochondriacal fancies. The beginning of trouble in the matter of health lies here.

The beginning of trouble also, in the quenching of influence, very often lies here.

The appointment of a Select Committee of the House of Lords to inquire into the question of the insurance of children's lives is a step in the right direction. The terrible amount of infanticide, and of culpable negligence almost equivalent to infanticide, has made a measure based upon the recommendation of the Committee of the House of Commons absolutely necessary. That greater restrictions are necessary also in regard to baby farming establishments is proved almost every day.

The tone of the chairman's address at the anniversary meeting of the English Church Union on the 19th inst., when firm Protestants were called "misguided fanatics," and when "the simple teaching of the Book of Common Prayer" was quoted as the standard of belief rather than inspired Scripture, justifies the conferences of the Evangelicals. One of these was held at Tunbridge Wells on June 17, Canon Hoare in the chair. The subject was the "Causes and Remedy of Ritualism." The appeal was only to Scripture, and the teaching of this in addition to preaching was strongly emphasised as indispensable to meet the crisis. In Liverpool and Birmingham laymen have conferred with evangelical clergymen. It was said by one of the speakers at the latter place that a paper at a like conference twenty-five years ago on "Lay Help" was shunted. A change of opinion among the Evangelical party on this matter is as healthy as it is a marked sign of the times.

Last Monday evening Mr. Hormuzd Rassam read a paper before the members of the Victoria Institute, in the House of the Society of Arts, on "The Garden of Eden and Biblical Sages." He used his large geographical knowledge in proof that the only part of the world which can be assigned for the ancient site of the Garden of Eden is the country which surrounds Lake Wan in Armenia. He thus disposed of much that appears in modern learned books; and, allowing for changes through natural causes, contended that the present sources of the Euphrates and of the Tigris start from Lake Wan, and that the courses of the four Biblical rivers may be found in the country which lies on the highlands of Armenia. Whatever judgment may be passed upon this, it is becoming certain that topographical Biblical problems will be settled by men like Mr. Rassam, who are at once Christian believers and great explorers.

Much attention has of late been directed to the Gothenburg and other systems of regulating the drink traffic. The Daily Chronicle has recently given an interesting account of the result of the action of a party of gentlemen in Bergen, who obtained a monopoly of the licences in that place. Although the consumption of drink decreased very remarkably, in thirteen years they made a profit of £112,430, of which sum they paid to the municipality £66,475, in addition to large amounts to charities and various good movements. Unfortunately, however, only one side of the account is furnished. It is not stated what has been the outlay of the municipality in the repression and punishment of crime, the alleviation of poverty, and the treatment of lunacy due to the existence of these profitable drinking establishments.

The new partition of Africa, clearly defining British and German spheres of influence, will, it is hoped, turn out to the furtherance of the Gospel among millions who are now sitting in darkness. Holding single and paramount influence in Zanzibar, Britain will be in a position to do much more than hitherto for the suppression of the slave trade, both on sea and land. Africa lies, at the present time, very near the hearts of earnest Christians. May the burden impel to holy zeal! If missionary effort can be made to keep pace with the openings of God's providence, our eyes may soon see immeasurably greater things than hitherto, done in the name of the Lord Jesus in Central Africa.

A correspondent sends us a Salvation Army bill, which, we do not wonder, appears to her a burlesque. It is not, however, so bad as others we have seen; though it announces "a crowd of Hallelujah Amazons;" and "Eternity's Engineering," as the topic of a "Holiness Convention." And for another evening, "Everything tip-top; winding up with shouts of Victory and Glory." Nothing of this, unseemly and inconsistent as it all is, seems to us so irreverent as the announcement beforehand of "Baptisms of the Holy Ghost," advertised in The War Cry to take place at the forthcoming demonstration in the Crystal Palace.

At a quarterly clerical and lay conference, under the presidency of Archdeacon Taylor, held at Walton a few days ago, some earnest and searching words were spoken by Rev. T. J. Madden, vicar of St. Luke's, Liverpool. The subject of his address was "Some Causes of Failure in our Work for Christ and his Church," and in the course of his remarks he said:—

> The causes of failure were ofttimes personal—lying in the ministers and not in the parish or the people. He knew of nothing more fatal to all true spiritual work than professionalism, to which they were all liable. The constant use of sacred words and the daily ministry in holy things tended in this direction. Another cause of failure was want of faith in the God who had called them to his work, to use them to bring glory to his name. Why should it be accounted a strange thing with them to have conversions constantly, as the result of the delivery of his message of love and reconciliation? The churches now seemed to put their faith in choirs, clubs, and guilds—in armies, and societies, and services—all useful and necessary in their way...As to the message they had to convey, the temptation to say something witty about the present-day preaching was very great. No doubt it might be inscribed upon many pulpits, "Mangling done here," but was not that a reason for sorrow rather than laughter? They wanted in their preaching and in all their work a little more sympathy with their people, that Jesus-like feeling of compassion for the multitude. There was only one way in which they could gain true sympathy with their people. They must be much amongst them, in touch with them, rejoicing with those that did rejoice, and weeping with those that wept. They might also see another reason for failure in the inconsistent lives of the church workers—a godless organist, a giddy choir, an intemperate churchwarden, a showy and dressy Sunday-school teacher. If the clergy were not to be failures, they must be men full of the Holy Ghost. To be faithful was their part; the success they left in the hands of God.

The Archdeacon sympathised with the high standard that had been raised—the deep and solemn chord that had been struck, and hoped all would seek to be more earnest and consistent, and avoid that rock upon which every branch of the visible Church was striking—an undue indulgence in worldliness.

In a like spirit we find a faithful Nonconformist minister, Rev. F. C. Spurr, Cardiff, strenuously condemning a recent performance of Welsh operas at the Theatre Royal in that town, the actors and chorus having been mostly drawn from members of Christian churches in Cardiff and elsewhere. The Western Mail said substantially that what Nonconformity had been tyring to do for centuries had been undone in one week. Mr. Spurr said:—

We have had the spectacle of a company of professedly Christian people on the boards of our Theatre Royal. One of them, the daughter of a Congregational minister, one the daughter of a Church of England minister, two or three the daughters of Cardiff Chapel deacons, a number of them members of chapel choirs and members of the churches themselves, principally in this town. I feel that what some of us have been saying and doing has been completely undone by that week's work at the theatre. I give you one specimen. Two little girls, who are, I think, daughters of a Welsh deacon—or, at any rate, daughters of a deacon of a Welsh Baptist Chapel in Cardiff or Penarth—were overheard speaking thus: "Have you been to see 'Blodwen?'" "No," was the reply. "We have been. We never went to a theatre before. We do hope we shall be able to go again. The theatre is just jolly." It is the thin edge of the wedge. It is creating a taste in those girls' minds for this sort of thing, and nobody knows where it will stop.

One of the newspapers calls it "a violent sermon," but faithful, stern, and even vehement rebuke is needed.

Mr. Dyer's interview in April last with Li Hung Chang, Viceroy of China, places in a clearer light than ever the duty of Christians in Great Britain in regard to the iniquitous opium traffic. In a letter to us, Mr. Dyer says:—

The Viceroy spoke in strong and emphatic terms of the moral and material evils of opium smoking. He said the Central Government were most sincere in their antagonism to the opium trade, and if the foreign import were prohibited, they would at once turn their efforts effectually to put down the home growth. But, he asked, would not the demand for a prohibition treaty with Great Britain, bring on a third opium war?

The fear expressed in this question is unquestionably a very real one in China. The late Marquis Tseng, a few days before his death, repeated what he had said before: "We are not free; we cannot take the first step." Obviously, the Chinese do not credit us with a desire to do justice and seek mercy in international affairs.

How sad it is that such a fear should have any degree of historical justification! Mr. Dyer was, we are glad to learn, enabled to present to the Viceroy memorials from India and Scotland, which plainly showed that the opium policy of Great Britain is totally at variance with the principles of Christianity. We fervently pray that God will cause the Viceroy's question to fall deep into the hearts of British Christians, and that they may be led to exert themselves in such a direction as will facilitate the pursuit of a patriotic and righteous course by Chinese statesmen. At the same time, we trust volume will be given to the demand for suppressing the growth of the poppy in India, so that the people of our great Eastern Empire may also be saved from the opium curse.

BLAENAVON.—Tent services, arranged by Lady Henry Somerset and a ministers' committee, were commenced on Sunday afternoon, June 8, and were conducted each evening by Mr. Charles Inglis. The tent was crowded each evening, and the after-meetings were held in the Wesleyan Chapel. These meetings were times of great saving power, and not a few have been brought to accept Christ. Christian workers have been much cheered, and believers have been quickened. O. T.

Rev. W. Haslam will conduct a mission at St. James's Church, Ryde, commencing June 28.

Un-Holiness.

WE noted in our last the painful fact that movements professedly in the direction of holiness sometimes take a quite opposite direction. We mention a few cases for the warning of our readers. The shameful delusion of the Agapēmone was revived, when it was dying, mainly through the agency of James Ker, who has since had to leave the country. The frantic orgies of J. W. Wood at Brighton were also practised in the name of holiness, and their disastrous consequences are sufficiently well known. The Kentucky evangelist, with his watchword, "God is love and nothing else," was the means of wrecking two ministers in East London. He paved the way for Mr. C. P. Carty, who persuaded his followers that if they believed him they would never more be sick, or sin, or die; and a great deal more.

In addition to these unhappy cases we have before us that of Mr. W. H. R——, who was a preacher in the Illinois Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church. The minutes of the Conference of 1869 at Lincoln, Illinois, contain the following:—"W. H. R—— was deposed from the ministry." A printed circular declares that "the charges against him were...leaving his wife and children and living with another woman, ...He went to Arcola, Illinois, to assist in a revival meeting in the Methodist church; and he introduced his vile doctrines, ultimately leading forty members out of the Church into another organisation called 'Pilgrims,' meeting in private families, holding their services until one or two in the morning, shouting and rolling over each other in promiscuous excitement on the floor of the houses. The results were too shocking to describe, but four words tell the story—free love, divorce, family separations, illegitimacy...All this was done under the name of Holiness—a wild, fanatical antinomianism, a caricature of Scriptural holiness.' These are extracts from a printed statement signed "James Shaw, Illinois Conference," and dated, "Bloomington, Illinois, U.S.A., August 23, 1887."

W. H. R—— has for some years visited this country, and in July, 1887, went to Keswick with a party of adherents from Belfast, and there netted a friend of ours, to the deep sorrow of the wife and children. The Scriptures which he specially misuses are such as Luke xiv. 26: "If any man come to Me, and hate not his father and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren, and sisters, yea, and his own life also, he cannot be my disciple." The way in which this is perverted is to lead wives to ignore their husbands, and husbands to put away their wives. In a communication before us, it is said:—"Some young men in Belfast, who are in this strange following, have left their parents and gone into apartments, and say they have no parents in Belfast; that their father and mother are in New York—referring to W. H. R——, and ... his wife, though Mr.——[one of his votaries] is careful to explain that it is a 'spiritual marriage.'" It is enough to show the absurdity of the interpretation put upon Luke xiv. 26 to say that, if it were consistently carried out, it would lead those who hated their own life to commit suicide.

All these men trade upon the perversion of some text or passage of Scripture. The first cry of "Br. Prince" was, "Behold He cometh." He called himself "the servant of the Lord—the angel or messenger—who came in the spirit and power of Elias." He declared that "Jesus Christ, having by his Spirit fulfilled the Gospel in Br. Prince, has laid aside for ever the Gospel as a dispensation." He took an innocent girl and lived with her as his wifes He wrote and printed the blasphemou. assertion that "the Holy Ghost did this through Br. Prince," and added, "Be assured these are the true sayings of God." We quote from a printed pamphlet—entitled, "The Testimony of Br. Prince concerning what Jesus Christ has done by his Spirit to redeem the earth. In Voices from Heaven. Voice the Fourth"—dated, "The Agapēmone, January, 1857."

The tendency of each of these self-constituted leaders is to draw away disciples after themselves. Even Frederick Boyce, in his comparatively harmless lucubrations, claims to be "the Lord's messenger in the Lord's message." Wood, of Brighton, called himself "King Solomon."

Prince is styled "Beloved," and is declared to be "dispensationally perfect under the Gospel," as "Jesus Christ was perfect dispensationally under the law." We do not dwell on the character of this jargon; we only quote it to show the monstrous claims which, the more absurd they are, seem to be the more readily received by some silly men and women.

W. H. R—— in like manner must be head and chief of his "Pilgrims." He claims that the religion which he propounds "is all in taking the living God-sent teacher, and letting him into all the affairs of life; and to reject him is to reject God: to keep him out of any part is to keep God out." Thus the right to repeat all the evils of Popery exposed by Michelet in his Priests, Women, and Families, is claimed in the name of Holiness.

While writing this we receive a booklet entitled, "The Mother, the Woman clothed with the Sun," in which "A Son of the Church" pleads the claims of an anonymous woman to be:—

Our heavenly Mother, the Queen and Representative of the New Jerusalem which is above; and Who is the Mother of us all. She it is who is the Bride, &c.

The Divine Feminine is now incarnated instead of the Divine Masculine as at the first advent. The incarnation of the Lord took place in the house of Judah-Israel, in their old home in Palestine; the incarnation of the Lady has now taken place in the house of Ephraim-Israel in the new home where the lost Ten Tribes have been located ...and resuscitated in the Anglo-Saxon race of the British Isles.

We can only account for the extent to which people have followed such false teaching by recognising the magnetic power residing in some men—and women; for verily their dupes are morally and spiritually hypnotised. But every-one who expounds Scripture in any non-natural and artificial sense, out of harmony with the rest of Scripture, helps to pave the way for these wild and mischievous delusions.

Directly Scriptures like 1 John i. 8 are turned aside from their obvious meaning because they inconveniently disprove the claim to restored Adamic innocence, the door is opened for destructive error; for whatever is contrary to "sound doctrine, according to the Gospel of the glory of the blessed God," will assuredly lead away from the fruit of the Spirit to the works of the flesh (1 Tim. i. 9, 10; Gal. v. 19, 22).

THE THREE GARDENS.

BY REV. JAMES CULROSS, D.D.

THE GARDEN OF GETHSEMANE

I.—The Man of Sorrows.

THE Garden of Eden was the scene of human innocence, of temptation, and of the Fall; and there, too, the dawn of grace began. Century after century passes slowly on, dark and dread, laden with unutterable woes, till at length the Redeemer comes—but comes too lowly to be known: "He was in the world...and the world knew Him not."

Suffering is one of the largest facts in our world. It is one of the largest facts in the recorded life of Jesus. Suffering came upon Him from every side. He stood (so to speak) in the very focus of attack; while the greatness of his nature broadened the target at which arrows were shot. His was suffering, too, of the most varied character. All the waves and billows—even the whole flood-tide of suffering that rolls over humanity—rolled over Him. No one can read the four Gospels without seeing what breadth of experience He had in this respect, fulfilling the prophetic description, "A man of sorrows and acquainted with grief."* We have all seen grief and sorrow in our time; no one can live long without doing so, God knows; the mere pressure of humanity is a terrible thing for a man with a heart; but it is not one sorrow or two that makes one a man of sorrows; not one meeting or two with grief that makes him the acquaintance of it. How the Holy One endured, with what fortitude and patience, with what faith in God and delight in his will, the prophetic description does not bring into view; but rather the fact that sorrows came thick and heavy upon Him, like wind-driven rain on an unsheltered head, and that grief was present with Him, as his close companion through life. And not mere personal affliction, as when Job was stripped of his property, bereft of his children, seized with a loathsome and painful disease, in which his whole body was covered with burning ulcers, taunted by his wife, tortured by his friends; this sorrow is the sorrow of a Saviour, in whose heart burns that saddest and most blessed of all passions—the love of man.

He came into the world to bless men. But it is impossible to do men real and lasting good—it is impossible to love them—and not suffer. There is joy in the very heart of the suffering, but it is suffering none the less. Said a woman in the slums to a Christian visitor: "If you want to do us good, it is of no use to come and preach to us now and then; you must take a house in the court here, and live among us." She touched on a deep and wide-reaching principle. It is not enough to stretch down a helping hand from some serene and painless altitude; we must come down and identify ourselves in brotherhood with those whom we would save. In some real sense we must "bear their sicknesses and carry their sorrows." This is one of love's painful, blessed mysteries. All true helpers of man must step within the circle of man's pain; the more glorious the help they bring, the nearer the centre of that circle must they stand—He in the very centre, wearing the sharp regalia of thorns, the Saviour of the bruised heart.

One thing that laid Him open to sorrow was the unselfish and profoundly sympathetic love of his heart. A noble nature, repelled in its efforts to bless, is pained unspeakably more by that repulse, than by the crowding in of merely personal ills, or by all the stings and arrows of adversity. Paul and Silas in the dungeon at midnight, scourged and bleeding, with their feet fast in the stocks, prayed and sang praises to God—and that not faintly and feebly, but with a loud voice, so that "the prisoners heard them." The same Paul says: "I have great heaviness and continual sorrow in my heart...for my brethren, my kinsmen according to the flesh," who were rejecting the heaven-sent Saviour. His sorrow was not that of personal disappointment, but akin to the sorrow heard in that outcry of God's heart: "How shall I give thee up, Ephraim? How shall I deliver thee over, Israel?" Many a labourer for God since Paul's time has felt in the same way. If we would bless men we must not shrink from the pain. We must not let any personal chagrin or wounded pride get mingled with it. We must not take opiates for it. Accept it. Let it penetrate and search the soul. To be capable of feeling it belongs to our fitness for helping our fellow-men. The Lord Himself knew this very pain. "When He was come near, He beheld the city, and wept over it"—not because of his own approaching agonies, but because Israel rejected the mercy He brought.

In Gethsemane we see Him entering upon his supreme sorrow, with elements of profoundest mystery in it. "He giveth his beloved sleep," but here is the Father's Well-beloved, his Chosen One, in whom his soul delighted, bowed down even to the dust of death.

* "None ever said He smiled;
Yet there might have been a smile unseen,
When He bowed his holy face, I ween,
To bless that happy child."

Links of Faith and Service.

THOSE of us who have read the life of Rev. W. Pennefather have felt our hearts burn within us, not only at the recognition of his consecration, but of the mighty faith in God, so richly honoured, when, in answer to prayer alone, thousands of pounds for Mildmay work were offered to him freely and spontaneously. Is it as well known as it might be that Mildmay, with all the hallowed associations that cluster round that name, owes its existence to hidden links of consecration and prayer that stretch back into the last century?

It was at that distant date that Robert Haldane was converted, and led to see the privilege of devoting his all to Christ. As soon as he could carry out the desire of his heart, he sold his castle and lands of Airthrey that he might send the message of salvation to the heathen. Failing in his project of evangelising India through the opposition of the Directors of the East India Company, who refused to have the religion of the natives interfered with, he educated and supported many Christian young men (at one time as many as three hundred) for work at home and in Africa.

Mr. John Campbell, one of his missionaries to that Dark Continent, on his return home, settled at Kingsland, near Mildmay, which latter place at that date was laid out in market gardens for the benefit of the Metropolis. Many a summer evening has found the old missionary holding converse with God while walking about those nurseries, and praying the prayer of faith that that very spot where now stands the Mildmay Conference Hall might, in God's providence, be made a centre of blessing to London and to the world. Himself the fruit of the devoted consecration of Mr. Haldane, he became the link which by his effectual prayer united our present-day Conferences with that far-distant decision to offer an ancestral home to God in order that many others might learn the way to their heavenly home.

Methinks that these three brethren—the old Scotchman, the African Missionary, and Mr. Pennefather—will join hands in glad thanksgiving that they were links in such a chain of blessing.

True, it is only a few among Christians who have the privilege and power of doing as Robert Haldane did; and very, very few who recognise that privilege and use that power. For the sake of those who have not such store of the mammon of this world to transmute into everlasting treasure for eternity, let us glance at the case of a child of thirteen and a half, and what she was enabled to accomplish for Christ.* During the eighteen months since her conversion she has earned and given eighty-two dollars to the mission field. She lives in a small, rough hill country farm with her mother, who is lame and almost blind, and her grandmother, who is entirely helpless. She has to do the indoor work and much of the outdoor also, besides spinning and making her own clothes. Only in her leisure moments could she earn this money by pulling blackberries in their season, and carrying them on foot for sale four miles to the nearest village; by working in others' hayfields; by gathering stones out of the fields; and by tapping sugar from the maple trees on the farm, boiling it to syrup and selling it.

Delicate, slight in form, and already bent by her arduous toil, this child is brimful of the joy of ministry. One item from her little diary may be given:—"We may have a run of sap. I would turn the sweet into the sweeter. Verily, there is nothing so sweet to me as to give for missions."

Do we as Christians really believe that one soul only is worth a thousand art treasures? If so, are we practically acting out our belief? Do we often dwell on the fact that no Israelite was considered to have offered anything to the Lord till it was over and above his tithes, which tithes were an obligation, not a free gift? The Lord speaks of some having robbed him in tithes and offerings. Can we all plead "not guilty" to either or both these charges?

While it is true that God often calls us to sell what we have, and give it to the poor, He at other times expects us to administer our own gift, and show whether we devote the capital or merely the interest. Our duty is to obey, seeking and following God's guidance. This would save much squandering of money, possibly in some instances honestly given to God, as we have seen to our sorrow in Brighton and Bridgewater. Our Lord calls on each servant to use the talents and increase the pounds intrusted to his care, and warns us that we, not someone else, must account to Him for the expenditure of our Lord's money.

There seem three sorts of giving;—(1) When we give because we are asked, and feel we must for our own sake. This giving will scarcely fit the balances of the sanctuary. (2) When we feel it a sacred duty to give one-tenth and do so, not grudgingly but rather of necessity, because commanded in Scripture; because we are the Lord's, and feel it a duty to help his cause. (3) When, as in the two cases we have referred to, our heart's longing is to give to Him whose interests have now become our interests. Then our giving is not, How much must I give? but How much may I give? How may I moderate, as in the sight of God, all personal and family claims, so as to have the largest residue to help that which has now become to me the dearest cause on earth?

By our real heart-response to one of these three standards of giving, we can see our position in God's sight. Let us ask ourselves: Is giving an obligation, duty, or delight? D.

REDHILL.—A drawing-room meeting was held at Broomfield on Wednesday last week, in the interests of the varied work of the Ragged School Union. Rev. Henry Brass, vicar of St. Matthew's, presided, and addresses were given by Rev. H. J. Berguer, Mr. Charles Steinitz, and others.

Clapham Prophetic Conference.

THE seventh annual session of the Clapham Prophetic Conference was held on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday last week. Earnest companies of Bible students assembled in the Conference Hall, Clapham-road, and subjects of sublime interest were opened up by students of prophecy whose names have acquired a very widespread familiarity. The subjects were such as afforded opportunity for much teaching on the fundamental verities of the faith, and they were dealt with in such a way as to show that the prophecies, no less than the other portions of Holy Scripture, are "profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works."

With much fitness the first address was devoted to a consideration of the waiting of creation and of the sons of God for the coming of the Lord. That coming having been shown to be personal and pre-millennial, Scripture teaching was set forth as it regards Jewish prospects, the spirit and manifestation of Antichrist, and the judgments with which the present dispensation will close. The proceedings on the second day were equally varied and instructive. Mr. J. E. Mathieson occupied the chair in the morning and afternoon, and Colonel Martin Petrie in the evening.

delivered a very thoughtful address on "The movements and tendencies of to-day regarded as signs of the approaching end." Tokens of the dark days ahead were drawn from the prevailing disregard of God and contempt for his holy will. Leaving disputed standards of time, the speaker found a sufficiently clear indication of where we are at present, in the interpretation of the vision of the great image which Nebuchadnezzar saw in his dream, taken along with other portions of the Book of Daniel. The method of rule was shown to have been in a descending scale—from a rule set up by God, signified by the golden head, to a democratic rule which hardly coheres at all, signified by iron mixed with clay. God's purpose seems to have been to afford opportunity for the trial of every form of government in succession; and when all have been weighed in the balances and found wanting, the Stone cut out of the mountain without hands will establish the eternal Kingdom of righteousness and peace.

The forces of evil are rallying, and will culminate in the manifestation of one, who, by the working of Satan, will usurp universal authority and arrogate unto himself the title and prerogative of God in "the temple of God" (2 Thess. ii. 4), which is in Jerusalem. This development involves issues which may be foreseen in the light of present day activities. The lawlessness is already abroad, and government is quite different from what it once was. Legislators are at their wits' end, and a tide of Socialism and Communism is rising. The family life has been invaded, and too often order is on the lines of "Parents, obey your children," instead of vice versâ. Master and servant, ruler and ruled, all have been affected by the upheaval. On matters of religion there is no hesitation at exalting opinion and preference above the Word of God, and men speak and write of the Most High as if He were like unto themselves. The authority of the Church is exalted above that of inspiration, and fundamental doctrines are being displaced from confidence. The leaders of the people are causing them to err; and with a Buddhism which the Cingalese cannot recognise, so remote is it from the Oriental religion of that name, we are hearing much of just such a brotherhood as will, according to prophecy, culminate in the Antichrist of the last days. Millions of the human race in dark lands are under the power of spiritualism, which has of late made remarkable advances, and is more and more showing itself in immorality and sin. Having referred to the villainous uses to which hypnotism may be put, Mr. Liesching called upon Christians to hold fast by the fundamental truths of the Gospel, and wait, with lamps burning and loins girded, for Him who in due course will come and will not tarry.

MR. G. H. PEMBER

expounded Deut. xxxii. His address was essentially a Bible-reading, upon which a wealth of illustration and thought were brought to bear. Written at the close of Moses' life, the song celebrates the fidelity of God, subduing and surviving the perversity and sin of his faithless people. It depicts the way of everlasting joy and peace through mercy and disciplinary judgment. The first five verses are introductory; then there is an account of the "finding" of Israel by God—Israel's election and settlement in the land; then the apostasy of Israel and the punishment; and lastly, the deliverance. The standpoint of the song was not the time of Moses, but posterior thereto, for the people are supposed to have settled in the land, to have enjoyed its rich provision, and to have abandoned Jehovah.

The Holy God chose the people, but the people became corrupt. Looking ahead, Moses sees the nation in millennial glory, settled in the land of promise (vv. 8—9). In ver. 21 there is allusion to the calling of the Gentiles, and then follow predictions of judgment. These were remarked upon as giving details of Jacob's trouble at the end of the present age. In the end we read: "Rejoice, O ye nations, with his people"; God will save Israel, and bless the Gentiles through them. In conclusion, the speaker urged watchful holiness and prayer, that the Lord may hasten the day when He will take his great power and reign.

in the afternoon delivered a very instructive address on what is known as "The Great Prophecy on the Mount of Olives" (Matt. xxiv., Mark xiii., Luke xxi.). He treated the subject with the telescope rather than the microscope, not concerning himself so much with verbal details as with general outlines and lessons. He saw a wonderful propriety in the place of the discourses in the several books, and gave a very cogent answer to the question—"Why was not the prophecy spoken at an earlier period of our Lord's ministry?"

When Christ entered upon his public work, it was as the great Prophet sent of God. There was a definite time at which he began: Matt. iv. 17, "From that time Jesus began to preach, and to say, Repent," &c. At this period his works and words were all directed to magnifying the law, showing it to be holy, just, and good, and its commands, given in order to reveal man's impotence, so that he might cast himself upon the Omnipotence of the Saviour. This period culminated in the Sermon on the Mount, which was an exposition of the spiritual nature of the law of God.

Next, our Lord's discourses and acts were directed to showing forth His Person as perfect God and perfect man. This period begins in Matt. viii. and includes John vi. to x. He spoke of sins and their forgiveness, and worked miracles that only the Deity could work—two of creation and two of resurrection. Peter's confession is the culmination, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." Immediately afterwards the third period begins, as stated in Matt. xvi. 21, "From that time forth began Jesus to show unto his disciples how that He must go unto Jerusalem, and suffer many things of the elders and chief priests and scribes, and be killed, and be raised again the third day." So there was a time up to which the Lord had not spoken of his sufferings, and there was a time after which he constantly spoke of his death, as to its manner (Matt. xvi. 21, xvii. 22, 23, xx. 17-19), its purposes (Matt. xx. 28), and great result (John xii. 32) the "all men" being not all without exception, but all without distinction, not of one nation, but of all peoples. The great event of this period was the transfiguration, which had to do with Christ's sufferings, for he conversed with Moses and Elijah of "the decease which He was to accomplish at Jerusalem," and the scene showed forth his glory, the three disciples being, as Peter said, "eye-witnesses of his majesty." Just as at his baptism the voice from heaven, "This is my beloved Son," proclaimed Him Prophet, so at the transfiguration the same voice proclaimed Him as Priest. This was the commencement of the high-priestly office, when He "was crowned with honour and glory."

The fourth period is equally characteristic, all the parables, discourses, and miracles having reference to the future. In this period is included the great prophecy on the Mount of Olives. Matt. xxiv. and Mark xiii. describe one discourse, and Luke xxi. relates another. The latter was uttered first in the temple, and at a time when the Lord was in the habit of teaching there daily (ver. 37), and the former after He had left the temple (Matt. xxiv. 1; Mark xiii. 1). Variations in the questions which drew forth the discourses were pointed out, and are worthy of careful observation. By way of exposition, Dr. Bullinger showed that Luke xxi., as far as ver. 24, deals with the destruction of Jerusalem and dispersion of the Jews; the other prophecy deals with the corruption of Christianity, and begins in ver. 15 of Matt. xxiv. and ver. 14 of Mark xiii., to set forth the circumstances of the great tribulation of the latter days. After remarking upon a few of the details of the prophecy, the speaker pointed some practical lessons. Urging the importance of attention to the word of prophecy, as a safeguard against present day error, he vindicated the work of such conferences from the charge of idly pursuing knowledge or prying into the future. The true object is to stimulate the faithful witness-bearing until the Lord Himself shall return.

MR. G. WARRAND HOUGHTON was the first speaker in the evening, his subject being "The Antichrist and the Jews." The personality of the Antichrist was maintained on the authority of John v. 43: "I am come in my Father's name, and ye receive Me not; if another shall come in his own name, him ye will receive." In Gen. iii., we see the dragon, the woman, and the man; in the Apocalypse, the dragon, the harlot, and the beast. Satan intended in the Garden of Eden to establish a Godless trinity in unity, but he did not succeed. Though, in the Apocalypse, Satan's plan may, at times, seem near realisation, it does not attain complete accomplishment. At the building of Babel, Satan made another attempt, but God restrained his purpose. Nimrod and his wife Semiramis stand out in the history of the time, the idolatry of which was one having the three characters—the dragon, the harlot, and the beast. Satan's great mystery of Antichrist has been postponed until the end of the present age, when the Jews will receive one who comes in his own name.

Going through the Book of Deuteronomy, the speaker pointed out commands and sanctions which the Jews disobeyed and disregarded in their rejection and crucifixion of Christ. In time to come injunctions of Moses will also accuse the Jews for their acceptance of Antichrist, which will involve, among others forbidden things, making covenant with a foreigner and conniving at sorcery. The people will prove themselves to be, what the Lord called them, the seed of the serpent. In due course, however, the mystery will be completed, and afterwards God's great purpose in creation will be performed to the glory of his Holy Name.

REV. J. GOSSETT TANNER

delivered a lucid address on "The Reign of the Saints of the Most High." Supporting his statements by Scripture testimony, he enlarged upon the glorious future when "the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High" (Dan. vii. 27). The rulers and the ruled, the glory and the honour, were spoken of in joyous language, and, in conclusion, some stimulating words were addressed to those who rest in the blessed assurance, "if we suffer, we shall also reign with Him."

The proceedings on the third day covered a still more extended field, the scope of vision taking in the judgment of the great white throne. To a number of Bible students the Conference was a season of great spiritual profit.

Missionary Reporting Ethics.

DEAR SIR,—I am writing this under the hospitable roof of the Royal Niger Company at Akassa, waiting for a steamer to take me up river. There is one point which has struck me very much as a new-comer to the mission field, and which seems to me a very important one; it is in regard to the reception of missionary information. A true knowledge of what is actually going on in the mission field is surely at the foundation of missionary progress. If there is good work being done let us know it, and give God the glory; if there is failure, let us know it, and at once seek to remedy the evil.

What, then, are our sources of information? First and foremost, of course, we have the reports from the missionaries themselves. But there is another source (and it is of this that I wish to speak), viz., the information which we get from those outside the mission, such as traders, officials of the Government, and others. It seems to me that they have been most unfairly treated, and thus injury has been done to the missionary cause. By your permission I should like to point out and seek to find a remedy for them.

The mistakes which have been made may be divided into two parts: one class of people assign anything that may be said concerning failure in the missionary's work, to prejudice. The other believes every piece of reckless gossip without the least hesitation. To take the first point. We all know what happens when General ——, or Sir ——, is to address a meeting in favour of missions. How big the bills are, and how large his name is printed! And it is certainly a great advantage to hear the opinion of an independent witness. But suppose that the individual in question ventures to suggest, even in private conversation, that the work at a certain place is not going on so well as it should be, or that the missionary's influence is not all that could be desired, he is told that he is prejudiced; that it cannot be as he says, and he is put down as an opponent of missions. No wonder that such a man is disgusted at such unfair treatment.

Let me take an instance lately told me, which occurred in connection with work of a philanthropic character. A gentleman who had been engaged in such work at home went to occupy an official position in the country to which he had been appointed. On inquiry he found that the evils he expected to find had been considerably exaggerated, and when he returned home he stated the same in public. When, however, the Society with which he had been connected heard of it, and were asked to publish a paper in their official organ giving the results of his observations, instead of rejoicing over the fact that the evil was not so bad as had been stated, they refused to insert the communication, saying that

"IT DID NOT TAKE THEIR SIDE."

Such is the way that truth is perverted.

Of the second class very little need be said, as they are very well known, and their conduct has often been denounced. There still exists this class of people who will believe the story of any idle ne'er-do-weel, who may have picked up his information at second hand, and who has never seen anything of missionary work.

How, then, should we receive such information? We should certainly be very cautious how we hear, and give no quarter to idle gossip. Nor should we on any account speak carelessly about the faults of others. But, if there is wrong in missionary work, let it be taken to the right source. Let the committees of the societies be told quietly and calmly, and let the truth be known. Thus can the breaches be made up, and the weak places in the battle strengthened. In many cases this has not been done. The public Press has been made the medium for discussing missionary conduct, and heartburnings and discord, in some cases, have resulted. We cannot hide from ourselves that there has been failure in missionary work, and we ourselves, who are just entering upon new work, need your prayers, that we may be kept faithful, and that Ezek. xxxvi. 23 may be fulfilled: "The heathen shall know that I am God when I shall be sanctified in you before their eyes." Surely this is as true now as it was when it was first written, and if the conditions are fulfilled the result must be certain.

Yours in Christ's service,
C. F. HARFORD-BATTERSBY.

FIRST AID FOR SEAMEN.—A knowledge of the steps to be taken for first aid to the injured is most necessary for those at sea; three-fourths of the deaths in the merchant service arise from accidents. Dr. Woods, of Sunderland, has given a series of lectures to sailors on this subject, with special reference to life on board ship. Examinations have been held, and about thirty certificates of competency given. Medical men at other seaports might do much good by getting up similar ambulance classes for seagoing men.

A HOME FOR TIRED WORKERS.—Many of our readers may be glad to know that a Convalescent Home was opened last June at West End, four miles from Southampton, for those needing change of air and scene, or for tired Christian workers. It is in a healthy position, on gravelly soil, on the highest point in South Hants, and in a lovely country. The house is well appointed with every home comfort, standing in its own grounds of an acre. It is under evangelical Christian influence, and would be a real place of rest to anyone needing such. From July 1 it will be for a time available for men as well as women. Many can testify to the benefits received. The terms, which are extremely reasonable, may be ascertained on application to the Lady Superintendent, Fir Cottage Convalescent Home, West End, near Southampton.

FRESHWATER, I.W.—Great need is felt that something should be done for the spiritual welfare of the soldiers quartered in this neighbourhood, there being no public places of resort available for the men except public-houses. A lady staying at Totland Bay, with the help of a few friends, took a small room in the house where she lodged, and had it arranged as a reading and refreshment room. During the ten weeks' time granted for the use of the room a number of men visited it; some by their frequent visits proved their appreciation of the interest taken in them. It is deemed advisable to make a further effort on a larger scale. There is now a Camp of Instruction every summer, so that, in addition to the ordinary garrison, batteries from other parts succeed one another (some 200 men at a time), to be stationed here three or four weeks. An appeal is made for funds to establish a small Soldiers' Institute near the Headquarters. Wholesome literature, &c., will be provided, but the moral and spiritual needs of the men are the chief consideration. Major Playfair, Afton, Freshwater, I.W., is one of a number of friends interested in the project.

CONVENT LIFE IN ENGLAND.*

THE narrative contained in this volume will be a startling revelation to many readers, though to others it will only confirm what they have long believed. The Bishop of Bath and Wells has said, "There is a deliberate conspiracy on foot to bring back the Church of England to communion with and obedience to the Pope of Rome"; and the statements of Sister Mary Agnes go far to prove the truth of the assertion. She was for seventeen years a recluse in the convent of "Father" Ignatius, and gives a graphic account of his influence and character as a monk of the Order of St. Benedict. The book is valuable as an illustration of the way in which the work of Rome is being done in our land under Church of England auspices. Witness the fact that the Office Book used by the Sisters under the "Father's" direction was the "Roman Catholic Benedictine Breviary," while for years the Romish "Ordinary of the Mass" was employed at the altar, although of late the Sarum Missal has been adopted in its stead. The "Perpetual Adoration of the Blessed Sacrament" is also declared to be practised and taught by him, while degrading penances are enjoined upon the victims of the delusion such a system involves. Auricular Confession of the most humiliating kind is enforced, and the same rules are observed in relation to it as have always existed in the Church of Rome. The rights of private judgment are completely set aside, and the most sacred ties and obligations of relative affection overruled.

Nor is the Llanthony establishment the only one under Church of England patronage where such a state of things exists. The Feltham Convent, where it is said "a clergyman holding a licence to officiate in the diocese of London acts as chaplain," follows in similar steps, while the growth of Ritualistic teaching and practice is manifest on every hand. The dishonesty of such a line of things being pursued in connection with an avowedly Protestant Church is surely obvious to every discerning mind, and calls for earnest protest. Sacerdotalism in the Established Church of these realms is as deadly and antagonistic to the Gospel of Christ as in the Church of Rome.

It is the fashion now to claim toleration for everything, and to let a spurious charity cover up what fidelity to conscience would denounce and expose; and so "Father" Ignatius is welcomed by many Protestants, because in his public addresses the Gospel is said to be preached. Evangelical Christians are to be found helping by their example to bring others under the fascination of his teaching and the spell of his influence. We can only trust that a record such as this volume gives will serve to break that spell for some who have already felt its force, and to save others from coming within its reach. In the interests of the pure Gospel of Christ, as distinguished from priestcraft and superstition, which "nunnery life," whether in or out of the Church of England, seeks to uphold, we wish the book an extensive circulation. Young Christians specially should be made cognisant of its story.

A preface by Rev. Lancelot Holland guarantees, from documentary evidence, the truth of the statements contained in the book.

PROTESTANT GOVERNESSES.—A fund has been started to establish a small Free Temporary Home at the seaside for poor Protestant governesses whilst waiting for engagements, or needing change and rest; to give clothing and pecuniary help, thereby throwing a little sunshine across some shady paths. Those who know of such cases should communicate with Miss Clementina Kingdon, 8, Saltoun-road, Brixton, S.W.

PARIS.—Rev. Dr. McAll, of Paris, in a recent letter, notes his intention to have anchored in the Seine a large missionary boat, which has done service in many of the French seaports. "It will be the first time," he says, "that this mode of evangelisation has been attempted in Paris, but though the population is not seafaring we have the impression that, with God's blessing, the novelty of the method will draw the attention of many hitherto ignorant of the Gospel. The cabin of the ship will contain nearly 200 persons, and we hope to have daily services on board for two months. The authorities have given us every facility and protection."

Convention at Guildford.

THE religious gatherings last week at this beautiful and centrally situated Surrey town, might be aptly described as a reproduction on a somewhat smaller scale of the Convention annually held at Keswick. A large tent was erected for the occasion on the outskirts of the town, and the speakers were very much the same as those whose forms and voices are now so familiar to the Keswick habitué. The conveners were Rev. F. Paynter, of Guildford, and Rev. Evan Hopkins, of Richmond; but the burden of the arrangements fell mainly on the former, at whose suggestion the Conference was summoned, and who presided at all the leading assemblies in the tent. The attendances were large from day to day, and the practical outcome of the Convention was so manifestly encouraging that it will doubtless become an annual event. Being within easy distance of the Metropolis, many friends went down from London to get a share of the spiritual stimulus afforded by the meetings. Numbers also came from more distant parts of the country.

At the preliminary meetings on Sabbath week the chief speaker was Rev. Wm. Haslam, whose rousing Gospel appeals were, as usual, very impressive and full of awakening power. The earlier gatherings of the week were utilised to clear the ground of misapprehensions as to the nature and scope of the ideal Christian life; and the teaching, as at similar Conventions, was cumulative in its force and bearing. As a fairly representative specimen of the whole, we may give some outline notes of the addresses delivered on THURSDAY.

At the forenoon meeting the first to speak was Rev. J. A. JACOB, who urged the need of a definite reception of the gift of the Holy Spirit. Referring to the discovery by the journeying Israelites of water at Beer, he pointed out that though the people had to dig in faith at the spot to which God had directed them, yet their digging was necessary. In our theology, we are apt to overlook the human side, in the desire, praiseworthy enough, to magnify the Divine side. While there ought to be no painful strain in the Christian life, there must be healthy effort. We are not to sit at the fireside all day with our Bible on our knee, while the world is going down to destruction. Christianity, if it is allowed fair play, will produce strong characters, and the world is quite mistaken in thinking that Christians are a soft, weak, insipid, and indefinite sort of people. These Israelites of old sang as they digged the well. Is there not a lamentable absence of joyousness in the Christian life of to-day? If God has put a new song into our mouths, should we not sing it?

Rev. W. HASLAM spoke of the high calling that awaits every true disciple of Jesus Christ now, as much as when He chose and commissioned his first Apostles. The Christian is first called out of the self-life; then he may be called to go to the ends of the earth with the Gospel message. The early disciples were told to extend their efforts beyond Jerusalem, after the gift of the Holy Ghost had come upon them; instead of that they tarried in the city and were only scattered by persecution. Are we not guilty in this land of keeping the Gospel very much to ourselves? Do we want a persecution to come that we may be scattered abroad? Thank God for the stirring of missionary zeal that we have received, but more of it is needed. As to spiritual equipment, the Christian in himself is a broken cistern at the best. If he consents to be merely a conduit pipe through which God may send blessing to others, he will always be kept full and fresh. Alluding to Peter's imprisonment and his being fast bound in chains, Mr. Haslam said that many a professed Christian is tied hand and foot by the manacles of custom, conventionalism, and the fear of man; ay, even by the religious forms of the church. God threw his light into the dark prison where Peter was, and that enlightening process is what these Conventions are intended to accomplish. The Apostle obeyed without hesitation or questioning the command of the angel to arise, and so he was safely guided past sentinels and through doors and gates. If we render the same obedience, God will go before us, and remove all feared or fancied hindrances from our path. Many are waiting till the doors of service open, and the walls of Jericho fall, before they obey. It is for us to obey in spite of appearances; when we are willing to go forth at God's command, then He will interpose on our behalf.

A third exhortation came from Rev. F. B. MEYER. It is not enough, he said, to write a truth down in our note-book. Before we can call it our property we must have put it into practice. The truth we hear will either bring us nearer to God or widen the separation between us and Him. On the last day of the great feast in Jerusalem, Jesus stood and cried—as if it were to many the last chance, and He wished to make the message specially urgent. That message was to those who were athirst. Have the friends attending the Convention come to the point of strong desire for a better life? Are there any hearts breaking as if with an agony of longing to live a holier, more useful life? Some, it may be, are seeking victory over known sin. Some are yearning for habitual fellowship with Jesus. Others earnestly desire greater success in their Christian work. There is that in Jesus Christ which meets these and every other sort of need. The cure for them all is to have the fulness of the Holy Spirit. He will bring deliverance from the power of sin. He will bring the soul into close and abiding communion with the Saviour. He will secure success in work. The time seems to be coming in these Conventions when there will be less teaching, and more definite opportunity be provided for waiting on God for the enduement of the Spirit. If we have that, we shall have an answer to all our needs, and a cure for all our heart longings. We must not, however, set our minds on getting some cut and dried experience, and some strange outward manifestation: let us seek to have the thing itself. In order to this there must be an observance of the conditions. First, there must be the exercise of faith. Then Christ must be put on the throne of the heart. Then let there be a definite approach to Him; and a definite reception of what he would bestow. Let all realise that the blessing we seek is very close to us. Let us trust Christ, that He will make us overflowing channels of blessing to a dark and sorrowful world, so that it may again blossom and become beautiful as paradise.

AFTERNOON MEETING.

In the presence of a great and interested throng of hearers, Rev. E. W. MOORE continued the topic of the forenoon—the reception of the fulness of the Spirit. In Luke iii. we are told of the visible descent of the Holy Ghost on Jesus Christ. This baptism of Christ in Jordan was significant, both in its relation to Himself and to his people. Our Lord's public ministry not only ended with a Calvary, but began with one. What was his baptism but a taking of the place of the sinner before God and man? In that hour of his humiliation He received the testimony of his Father's good pleasure. His baptism was, moreover, a prophecy and pattern of Pentecost. He was the Holy One of God, and yet upon Him the Spirit fell. How much more do we need the baptism of the Spirit. Some years ago, said Mr. Moore, an old fisherman asked him whether he did not think that Christians nowadays were more like the disciples before Pentecost than after it, since they are so often found coveting worldly position and denying and betraying their Lord. This baptism is not the portion of a select few; it is the promised heritage of the whole Church of God. As a body they seem to have lost that heritage. This Gospel of the Holy Ghost has been a forgotten Gospel. Thank God, it is being revived in these days! The reception of the Holy Ghost is no small thing. It means an open heaven and our citizenship there. Alas! that so many should live as though it were not true; to them it is only a dream of the night, like Jacob's ladder with the angels ascending and descending.

What are the conditions? (1) There must be the Nathanael spirit—an absence of guile and prejudice. We must be honestly willing to have our difficulties removed. Christ knows them all, but He looks to see if our hearts are open and true before Him. Then self must go into the place of death—for that is what Christian baptism means. In submitting to the baptism of John, Christ lost his reputation among a large section of the people. We must be ready to do likewise. Let us distinguish between character and reputation. We must preserve the first, as before God; but the second we may have to lose in the reckoning of our fellow-men. There must also be believing prayer. As to the effects of this baptism, we shall find there will be (1) assurance of sonship; (2) power for service; (3) purification of heart.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED.

The closing minutes of this session were given to the answering by Rev. W. HASLAM of some questions that had been sent in. Of these there were about thirty, but time only permitted of giving answers to a few. We reproduce the spirit, not the exact words, of the answers.

Q. What does 1 John iii. 6 mean—"Whosoever abideth in Him sinneth not"?

A. Abiding in Christ is giving oneself right over to Him. It is not merely judicial, but experimental. Then where He goes we shall go. As his servants we are not to do our own will but his.

Q. How can one have a clean heart, if sin is not entirely destroyed?

A. David's prayer for a clean heart had reference to a particular sin into which he fell, and so far as we know, he was altogether delivered from that sin. We have to distinguish between sin and sins. Sin is the natural soil of a man's heart. God will not only forgive the believer, but cleanse him from unrighteousness. Yet the ground of the heart is not changed. Mr. Haslam, in illustrating the point in question, told how the garden of his predecessor in a Norfolk living was beautifully kept; not a weed was allowed to be seen. The gardener, he added, would have been a poor one if he had been content with cutting down the weeds, and had not rooted them out. One would have thought there was not a weed in the place—only the velvet lawn and the lovely flowers. Three months elapsed after the place was vacated before he took possession. When he went, the flowers were almost hidden with the tall grass and the great rank weeds. It looked as though they were taking their revenge for having been kept down all these forty years. Our Divine Gardener will never leave us; but if we leave Him, the weeds of sin will soon spring up. (This illustration was apt and interesting, but it seemed to some hearers defective, on the "uprooting" theory. Weeds cannot certainly spring up except from roots or fresh seeds. If the gardener had uprooted all the old weeds, as Mr. Haslam was understood to suggest, whence came the new ones?)

Q. Is it a sin to wear jewellery?

A. What do you want jewellery for—to keep you warm? Or is it, as Billy Bray asked, to make you more respectable? Can you ask God's blessing on jewellery, so that you may cut a good dash, and have people admire the jewels and you? What is the use of them?

Q. Is it wrong to play football and the like?

A. It is a matter of conscience. If you have nothing better to do, then tennis, football, and other amusements may be admissible. But surely you might be better employed as a Christian. It is a great insult to Christ to imagine that the world can make us happier than He can. If we are whole-hearted towards Him, these questions will never arise at all; they will answer themselves. But if the so-called "innocent amusements" come between us and Christ, that will suit the devil just as well as sinful amusements in the case of the ungodly world.

EVENING MEETING.

After some opening words from the Chairman, an address was given by Rev. J. GELSON GREGSON, on the power of the Spirit in giving an obedient will, in enlightening the mind, and in keeping the heart. Then followed an address by Pastor THEODORE MONOD. He referred to a report he had seen in an evening paper of a great battle that had taken place in London the night before (at the Military Tournament, Islington, we presume), and as to which the chronicler said, "the resemblance to real warfare was very striking, and reflected great credit on the stage manager." It is to be feared, in the lives of many who call themselves Christians, and who sing lustily about "marching on" and about being warriors and so forth, that "the resemblance to real warfare is very striking." Nobody is hurt but themselves. There is many a young soldier who dons the fine uniform, and who goes forth eager for victory; but he hopes to get it without any battles. So, many Christians believe in victory in the abstract, and even conflict in the abstract; but not in the hard real conflict where one feels the hand of the foe upon him, and where he must either conquer or be conquered. Perhaps some congratulate themselves on getting rid of the battle; they call it, perhaps, the "rest of faith," or the "peace of God," or something else, where they have to do nothing but fold their hands and sing themselves away to heaven. No doubt there are thousands who think that is the Christian life, and even the higher Christian life. It is not the Christian life; and, if it were, it would be a very low kind of Christian life.

The great question for us all is not so much whether we are walking very fast, but in what direction we are walking. Most of us here have, no doubt, turned our backs on the world, and are walking towards God. What we have to do is to go on in the fight of faith. Temptations come, and of course there is a fight. Do not let us try to escape from the temptation, but let us meet the enemy in the strength of Christ. The Apostle Paul did not consider that he had nothing to do, but he said: "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me." Christ was to do it, but to do it through him, and in the might of the Holy Ghost. That is the fight of faith. In one instance the Lord said to certain of his disciples, "This kind [of devil] cometh not out but by prayer and fasting." That seems to mean that the disciples were not then in the spiritual condition in which they could cast out those devils. They had not been watchful enough or prayerful enough. We must not imagine that Christ's power is, as it were at our beck and call, whatever be our spiritual condition. Many of our defeats come from thinking that we can. Pastor Monod illustrated "abiding in Christ" by supposing the case of a man saved from drowning and taken into a boat. He would not need to be exhorted to abide in the boat, for he would know that therein lay his only hope of safety and restoration to friends and home. Still less would he be inclined to leave the boat, if he began to help in saving others who were still struggling with the waves. In closing his address, the pastor cited an interesting testimony by the late Rev. S. Borton Brown, of Romsey, telling how he had received an access of spiritual power through attendance at the Brighton and Oxford Conventions, and how the blessing was felt in a marked revival in his church and congregation.

The after-meeting was conducted by Rev. EVAN HOPKINS, with much tenderness and wisdom, and a large number gave public testimony, by rising, that they had experienced blessing at the meetings of the Convention.

Work among the Jews.

THE missing link in work among the Jews is personal, loving effort to win them to Christ. It has too long been the impression that specially trained missionaries, having a knowledge of their sacred tongue, are the only men capable of bringing the Gospel before the Jews, and meeting their prejudices against Christianity. It is true that missionaries should be thus qualified; but, in addition to all that missionaries can do, there are large opportunities for private Christians lovingly and simply to set before the Jews God's way of salvation; and, as a matter of fact, Jews will often more readily converse with Christians who are not missionaries than with those who are, because they have the impression that missionaries are well paid for their work, have a handsome sum given them for each Jew they prepare for baptism, and therefore seek their conversion from mercenary motives.

The Jews as a nation have known so much of persecution, even under the Christian name, that true kindness is the more welcome to them, and, as through them God gave us the Scriptures, this is a good topic for first remarks. It is then easy to pass from expressions of gratitude for that, to conversation upon the Scriptures themselves, commencing of course with the Old Testament. God's great love to their nation, and the certainty of their restoration to the land of promise, from which they have been temporarily banished on account of sin, may form the commencement of a conversation that may lead on to God's faithfulness in other promises to their nation, some of which have already been fulfilled, and the rest only waiting God's good time and pleasure. Thus the two comings of Messiah, the first in humility and to be made a sacrifice for sin, already fulfilled, and the second his coming as a King to sit on the throne of his father David, yet to be fulfilled. The Christian may then quote one prophecy after another from the Old Testament, until, by the blessing of God, the interest of the Jew is awakened, and he may be further shown how the Mosaic sacrifices were but types of Christ. Then the Christian can take him to Isa. liii., and do as Philip did to the Eunuch, from this Scripture, fully preach unto him Jesus, going on to the New Testament to show how literally that prophecy was fulfilled in Him.

If this work at first requires an effort, will not God give more abundant help; and, in any case, will there not be to the Christian who does it for Christ's sake an abundant blessing? Two strong motives need to be in force: the first, love to Christ; the second, love to the Jew for Christ's sake. Given these two factors, with a knowledge of the Scriptures and an entire dependence upon the Holy Spirit for help, blessing must follow; and, though the Christian may be at first discouraged, yet, as "many waters cannot quench love," the efforts will be renewed, and the work carried on to the glory of God. New Testaments in Judeo-Polish, German, and Hebrew may be purchased; and also tracts (by the reading of which, before giving them to the Jews, the Christian may be helped to understand and meet Jewish difficulties and objections to Christianity). Particulars as to these may be had from Mr. Samuel Wilkinson, 60, Newington-green, N.

It may encourage Christians who are moved thus to try to win for Christ the Jews with whom they may be brought into contact (either in business or as neighbours, or by casually meeting them on travel), to know that the prejudices of a large proportion of the Jews against Christianity have been considerably lessened by the kindness shown to them by true Christians during the last fifty or more years. In consequence of this, and we believe in answer to much prayer, many are willing to read the New Testament.

Another way of winning them would be to invite them to churches and chapels, and to any lectures upon the Tabernacle and the Temple, especially if illustrated by models. They are very appreciative of kindness, and are among those who prove the rule that "kindness is the key to the heart." If we think only of the Jews who reside in the English-speaking countries of Great Britain and Ireland, America, and Australia, without taking into account the millions in other countries, the number of missionaries is lamentably small, and, were it multiplied a hundred-fold, it would even then be impossible for every Jewish family to be reached. The Jewish people have given us a Bible, and from them the Saviour came; therefore they have a greater claim upon us to give them the Gospel than any other people on the earth; shall there not, therefore, be more earnest and believing prayer offered for them than ever before? Shall there not also be more strenuous efforts to send missionaries among them? And, further, shall not every individual Christian who has opportunity use it to the very utmost to bring before them Jesus and salvation through Him, seeing that in none other is there salvation: for neither is there any other name under heaven that is given among men whereby we must be saved (Acts iv. 12).

Open-Air Service in Regent's Park.

THE Presbytery of London (North) has initiated an important movement, in order to reach the non-church-going masses. Arrangements have been made to hold open-air services in each of the public parks on appointed Sunday afternoons.

The united service in connection with the Presbyterian Churches situated in the north-west district was held last Sunday afternoon in Regent's-park. The following ministers, with their choirs and congregations, took part:—Revs. Dr. Monro Gibson, St. John's-wood (who presided); John McNeill, Regent-square; Z. B. Woffendale, Somers-town; Duncan Sillars, Haverstock-hill; D. M. Connan, Kentish-town.

The time appointed for the service was from 3 to 4.30 p.m., and the number of persons who attended was very large. Upwards of two thousand must have been present. Each of the ministers gave an earnest, telling, and powerful Gospel address, and all were listened to with eager attention. The hearty singing of the great multitude sounded far over the park, and produced upon the hearers a wonderfully solemn effect.

PREACHING IN A CITY CHURCHYARD.—Open-air preaching in a City churchyard is a revival of an old custom, and the curate of St. Botolph, Aldersgate, who daily addresses the resting pilgrims who spend their dinner-hour in the shady churchyard, appears (writes the London correspondent of The Birmingham Post) to be carrying one back to the days when the pulpit at St. Paul's Cross was the throne from which many of the greatest sermons of the Reformation were delivered.

Miss Mittendorff's Home, Epsom.—There will be a summer excursion to this Home at Epsom on Wednesday, July 2, to which all friends will be welcome. Tea will be provided at 4.30. Frequent trains leave London Bridge, Victoria, and Waterloo stations during the afternoon. Further particulars can be obtained by addressing Miss Macgrath, Clayton House, Epsom, or by writing to, yours faithfully, JOSEPH WEATHERLEY.

Letters from France.

V.—MORE WORK IN DEAUVILLE.

OF the lady to whom in my last letter I referred there is very much to record. I can only give one or two little sketches of what we were permitted to see, and commend her work to the prayerful and practical sympathy of all.

Our first introduction to her work was on Wednesday, May 14. We made our way through a passage into a back yard, sometimes dignified with the name of "garden." It was a small and incommodious place of meeting; but the sight that met us delighted us greatly. There were about twenty children, seated upon two forms, and upon any other kind of seat that could be improvised. For the most part they were without hats, bonnets, or shoes; a few had shawls over their heads; some had such thick, black hair that no other covering was needed; and, with only a few exceptions, all were ragged and dirty. Drunkenness among the parents is, in Deauville as in England, the cause of the neglected condition of many children. Yet their faces were bonny, and that brief half hour with them gave them a very warm place in our hearts.

Standing before a bowl, in which she was skilfully preparing their breakfast of salad, was this earnest Christian lady. While doing this, she never once lost her control of the children. The bowls were filled; a huge piece of bread was distributed to each, and the children set to work as eagerly as only hungry children can. But this was not the only feast their good friend provided. The Word of life had been patiently and faithfully taught them, so that one after another they came forward and repeated text after text, and some of them repeated long passages of Scripture, without any hesitation. We know that having the Word in the memory is not everything; but being there, it is more likely to reach the heart. In one at least, if not more, of these children it has already been proved "the power of God unto salvation." It was delightful also to hear their singing of Gospel hymns—favourites in this country—such as "Safe in the arms of Jesus," "Tell me the old, old story," and "There is a happy land."

We had many questions to ask about the work. About 160 children have been to this lady's meetings; but through priestly influence some who once came have since thrown stones at her in the street. This is an unwilling testimony from the priests to the value of her work. The Gospel hymns are evidently regarded as dangerous. One woman who was ill said that the priest had promised to give her all that she needed if this friend did not visit her to sing her hymns.

On the following Sunday Mr. Bernard Knight and I paid another visit to this young people's meeting. This was held in a little outhouse at the back of the yard. There were only twelve present, and one child was so ill with hunger that the meeting could not proceed until a piece of dry bread had been procured for her. We had the same delight as before in hearing the hymns and texts, but on this day there was a still greater joy in store for us and the earnest and devoted teacher.

Sitting by the children was an old man who came as often as possible, hoping to "hear words whereby he might be saved." He had been a schoolmaster years before, and had obtained from a colporteur some copies of the New Testament, which he adopted as a lesson book, purely because of the convenient divisions into chapter and verse. For this both he and the colporteur were condemned, but on appeal the schoolmaster was acquitted, while the colporteur was sentenced to fifteen days' imprisonment. This experience had irritated and vexed the schoolmaster so that he uttered some blasphemous things about the priests, the guilt of which so lay upon his conscience that he almost despaired of being saved. We obtained permission to speak with him, pointed him to Rom. v. 6, 8, as describing those for whom Jesus died; noted the interest and surprise with which he heard these texts applied to himself; hoped he would accept it, but were disappointed to hear him still refuse. Mr. Knight suggested the illustration of the clergyman continuing to ask for a cup of tea while his friend offered it to him. It was very simple; and the old man seemed amused while the lady told him the story. But the application of it, through the blessing of God, proved effectual. He testified his acceptance of the Saviour, and so flooded the soul of his faithful teacher with joy that, after a burst of thankfulness, she buried her face in her hands and struggled to suppress her emotion. He was hardly less overcome, and we shared the same feeling of thankful joy. We praised God, not only for the old man's conversion, but for the encouragement given to this lonely patient worker's heart.

This is not all her work. By visiting wherever she finds an open door, and especially among the sick; by meetings among the workmen at the new pier; by distributing Gospel books, and speaking a word by the wayside, she scatters the good seed. Who knows what a harvest she will yet be permitted to reap?

She hinted at the possibility of giving up the work; but the only reason we could discover was that supplies did not seem to be forthcoming. The readers of this letter will not allow the work to cease for such a cause.

GEORGE WAINWRIGHT.

STORY OF A Y.W.C.A.

WE beg to call attention to the subjoined history of a work which, from a very small beginning, has grown into considerable proportions, and promises, if only the necessary means are forthcoming, to become a very important Christian agency.

Early in 1885, a lady living in St. John's Wood was asked by some girls, by the hon. secretary of the Portland Town Association, and by the vicar of the parish to hold a Bible-class for young women. It was started, and during the year fifty joined it.

In 1886, two rooms were taken for their exclusive use, and a council of ladies shared the responsibility of the work, which was affiliated to the Y.W.C.A. These rooms proved soon to be too small, and a responsible person to live on the premises was found to be necessary, so that on January 1, 1888, a whole house—at 12, Portland-terrace—was opened for the use of young women.

Here ten young women live, business hands, governesses, and others. There is a "traveller's" bed, where respectable but unsheltered ones are helped on their way.

Over 180 members come backwards and forwards to classes or for advice, or simply as to a home. The superintendent, Mrs. Richardson, who devotes all her time and energy to the work and takes no renumeration, proves a true mother among them.

The police recognise the advantages of the Institute, while residents in the neighbourhood, and letters from the young women themselves, testify to the value of what is done.

But again the accommodation proves to be too small. The rooms are unhealthy when numbers come together. There is no room for the use of those members who, after business hours, have no place but their cold bedrooms to sit in, and who go, as their only resort, for walks in the streets, from where a wet evening tempts them to music-halls and other doubtful places of amusement. A centre also is badly needed for work among the factory and flower girls around.

The basis of the work is God's love to every one of his creatures, through Jesus Christ our Lord. The movement is strictly undenominational. Nor is any money paid in salaries, office expenses, or luxuries. But there is no church organisation to help, and the work is only among women. Surely its importance cannot be over-estimated when it is considered in reference to the coming generation. These girls' hearts can, it is demonstrated, be reached, and lives frivolous and degraded become strong and beautiful by loving personal sympathy.

GLOUCESTER CONVENTION.

GOD did great things for us at the Covention recently held in this town. The tone has deepened year by year, and this year we were conscious of the presence of God in our midst more than ever before. The teaching was strikingly clear, distinct, practical, and harmonious throughout. The brethren who spoke to us were manifestly under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, and there was fullest liberty of thought and utterance, combined with deepest reverence and solemnity.

Let us select a few points. Consecration was set before us as involving the surrender of (1) the heart, (2) the conscience, (3) the will, (4) the body. On the subject of the body we were reminded of two illustrations, namely, the members being used as "weapons" (Rom. vi. 13), and the whole body being a "temple" (1 Cor. vi. 19). Something must be done with these members. Are they used by the believer to fight against his Lord? How awful, how terrible is the suggestion! And yet this is actually the case whenever Christians wilfully commit sin, and a consecrated building may be defiled and desecrated.

Then we were exhorted to yield ourselves to God, "as those who are alive from the dead," for lack of which many fail to live a consecrated life. This life, like the risen body of the Lord Jesus, bears the marks of crucifixion. Following upon this, we were taught to live abidingly in the light of God—where God's eye, God's truth, God's presence surround and enlighten us, and thus to live under the continuous action and power of "the blood that cleanseth from all sin."

On the Thursday we seemed to have but one thought, namely, the fulness and power of the Holy Ghost, and much testimony was given to this truth; the simplicity and directness of the teaching on this subject were very remarkable.

You will not be surprised to hear that there was much humiliation before God. Clergymen have testified to the light of God being shed upon their motives. Others discovered the secret of the lack of power in their work. Men of business were brought "face to face with God," and saw what they really were. We rejoiced that Christ was admitted as Lord and Master, and no longer shut out from any department of our being or of our life.

The net result in my own heart is this: What would not the Lord do, if his people were crucified to sin, self, and the world! What would not the Lord do, if his people were baptized with the Holy Ghost and with fire! What would not the Lord do, if his people were united in heart? This conviction is burnt into my inmost soul. We have seen something of the Lord's power and grace—enough to make us feel what He could do, and would do, with us, even in these days of religious pride, and unreality, and self-satisfaction, and ignorance, and powerlessness, and withering worldliness in the Church of God. How humbling is such a convention as this! Christians, let us cry day and night to God for the whole Church. Oh that He may lay us all prostrate at his feet, and open our eyes to see, and our ears to hear, and with his own tender, pierced hand circumcise our hearts!

SEAMEN IN THE MEDITERRANEAN.—An interesting service took place recently at the Seamen's Institute, Savona, when the Bishop of Gibraltar paid a visit to the town. The Institute in this port is a branch of the Gibraltar Mission to Seamen, the welfare of which the Bishop has much at heart, and which, under his direction, has made a marked change for the better in the conduct and condition of English seamen in Mediterranean ports. Savona is a rising port, and the need for such a mission may be seen from the fact that 6609 British and American seamen passed through it last year. During the same period the number of attendances at the Institute was over 8000.

THE SAND—A BAD FOUNDATION.*

"And every one that heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them not, shall be likened unto a foolish man, which built his house upon the sand: and the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell: and great was the fall of it" (Matt. vii. 26, 27).

THE sands! oh, the beautiful sands! How lovely they look in the morning sunlight, when the tide is low! Have you ever been to the sea-side? If not, you do not know all the fun that is to be had upon the golden sands. It was our very first thought when we were children, and heard that we were going to the sea-side, as to whether there were any sands at the place named. How anxiously we used to watch the receding waves to see if our desire was to be granted, and then how great was our joy as, spade in hand, we raced down to the water's edge and began our play. What did we play at? Why, we made large heaps of sand, and beat it down as hard as we could; then, when we had formed a fine big castle, we made moats and earthworks between it and the sea, and the fun was to stand upon the castle, when the tide was coming in, and see whose fortifications would resist the water longest. Splash, splash, came the little summer waves, just as if they were at play with us, running up and running down again, and seeming at first to pretend that they could not get at us, as we stood upon our mounds. Then we would jump down and run after the water, and cry, "You cannot catch us," and the moment the wave rose to break again, we were back and on our castles, where it could not reach us. All very well for a little time; but steadily and quietly the water rose, and very soon there was a struggle to keep up the outworks, which somehow or other seemed to melt away, as if they were made of brown sugar; and at last those playful waves broke in against the tower itself, and very, very soon, the citadel was stormed, and we were in full retreat.

As for paddling! that was a joy that I never should have known anything about, had not a great wave one day taken pity on me, and come on to the shore with such a sudden splash and rush, that although I and my brother were playing above the water-mark, we were up to our waists in water in a moment, and to our very great delight, we were wet through for once.

But then there are such treasures to be found on the sands! In some places there are banks of shells, in others there are beautiful pebbles and cornelian, agate, and amber. Shells are houses of fishes, and most beautiful homes they are. The doors of some of them open with hinges, and the walls are tinted with pink and saffron: the chambers gleam with all the hues of the rainbow, and I do not think that any king or queen has a more beautiful palace. It was my great joy to gather baskets full of these pretty things; I used to spend hours in searching for new varieties. But could we always play upon the sands? Oh no. When the tide came up, we had to get away on to the cliffs; and woe to those who should be caught, busy at their play, in some little sandy nook amongst the cliffs, for those gentle, laughing waves knew no mercy, they could hear no cries for pity; by a law that controlled them, they were bound to rise, and they would drown everyone who stayed within their reach.

Now, what does the Lord Jesus mean by building a house upon the sand? I think He means founding our hopes and expectations on any of the things of this world. The rain and wind test the walls, but the flood tests the foundation.

I once saw, at a sea-side place, two worn and broken posts sticking up out of the sand. I looked at them, and wondered how they came there, for there were no buildings near, nor was there a breakwater in sight. Afterwards I was told they were all that remained of a house for a lifeboat, which had once been built on that sandy shore. The rain and wind had not destroyed the walls, but upon one wild winter's night the huge waves of the flood-tide had rolled in upon the house, and had washed it all away, for it was built upon the sand.

But what is the flood? I think the flood means Death; because King David, speaking by the Spirit of God, says: "The waves of death compassed me"; and Moses also says: "Thou carriest them away as with a flood."

And, dear ones! it may be that sickness and trouble may not come your way, to test your hopes, and melt away your expectations; but the flood, you know, must rise sooner or later, and then, if your hopes have been founded on the things of this world, the Lord says the house will fall down. Yes, it must fall, because nothing here can resist Death.

Now you will see how Death, like the great tide-wave upon the sea-shore, comes in, and sweeps everything away that belongs to this world.

Sometimes in the evening, at low tide, I have seen the sands covered with castles and houses that the children had built upon them. You could hardly step without crushing some beautiful building that busy little hands had made. But in the morning, when the tide was ebbing again, how smooth and bright the sands were,—there was not a single trace of all the fine buildings of the day before. Well, I think this world is very like the sands at low tide; men and women are busy everywhere building upon it houses of hopes, which must all go down before the rising tide.

Would you not think a man very foolish who was to build an expensive house on the sand without a foundation, where he knew that floods were certain to come? I am sure you would. And do you wonder that when the Lord Jesus looked upon this world, and saw people building all their hopes on a scene where Death is always busy, and where Judgment must some day fall, that He raised his voice and called them "foolish"? It must have looked such strange folly to Him, especially when He kept warning them of their danger, and they were hearing his words, but not doing the things that He said. He is in heaven now, but He has left us word that a terrible storm of Judgment will one day sweep over the world.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.—Writing with respect to a twelve days' mission for children at his church in St. John's Wood, Dr. Monro Gibson says:—"It is too soon to speak definitely of permanent results; but if I may judge by the spirit of my young people's Bible-class, and by other indications which I may not take the time to specify, we have reason to expect a rich harvest from these days of sowing."

GOD'S INSTRUMENTS.

EXOD. xii. 22; LEV. xiv.

THE hyssop growing on the wall
Is so unlike the cedar tree,
Which is so great, and grand, and tall,
While hyssop always small must be?

And yet the Lord had need of both;
Together they would oft convey
The precious blood that needs must touch
The one whose sins it took away.

Yet only in the priestly hand
Could tree or herb its work fulfil;
He chose which pieces he would use,
And fitted each to do his will.

And ere the blood could be conveyed
By hyssop or by cedar wood,
The branches must be fully plunged
Beneath the precious crimson flood.

. . . . .

Our great High Priest is seeking now
For something to convey his grace,
Channels of blessing, high or low,
That He can use in any place.

We come to Thee, O Saviour Lord,
Whate'er our lot on earth may be;
That, ever cleansed by thy blood,
We by thy grace may work for Thee.

Resting within thy hand of power,
Our simple message will be blest
To bring to many a sin-sick soul
The news of pardon, peace, and rest.

MISSION WORK IN SYRIA.

MRS. MENTOR MOTT writes of the success attending the new Female Medical Mission which has been started in connection with the British Syrian Mission School at Baalbec. She also speaks of a great opening for similar work at Tyre; she says:—"It is important that we should endeavour to secure the honorary services of a lady whose medical skill and missionary spirit would make her a blessing to the utterly neglected women, who, by law and custom, are entirely debarred from consulting a medical man. She would of course reside in the school-house, and have her home with the lady superintending the Mission."

Will any lady, able and willing to consecrate her service to this work, communicate with Mrs. Auriol Barker, Camano House, Tunbridge?

In another recent letter Mrs. Mentor Mott says:—"Yesterday I wanted to get something for some of our poor blind, and every shelf was empty, not a single article of clothing, not a single yard of material to convert into clothing, and not a shilling in the bank to enable me to buy anything." If any friends can help to fill the empty purse and shelves, let them send their gifts to Miss Poulton, 18, Homefield-road, Wimbledon.

ALEXANDRIA.—We recently announced the fact that Rev. Thomas Ranger Lawrence is in England, raising funds to clear the Sailors' and Soldiers' Institute in Alexandria from debt. It is gratifying to learn that, so far, he has received £1200 of the sum of £2000 needed to defray the debt on the building and meet working expenses. Mr. Lawrence's present address is The Priory, Mill Hill, N.W.

THE Y.M.C.A. IN SCANDINAVIA. — A conversazione took place in the drawing-room in Exeter Hall last week, for the purpose of giving an opportunity to Mr. Graham, the chairman of the finance committee of the Young Men's Christian Association at Stockholm, of giving a short account of the work, and of putting before those present the project of a building to be erected at Stockholm, as the headquarters of the Association. The building, it appears, will cost from £20,000 to £25,000. Mr. T. A. Denny pointed out that the project should be more matured before support could be expected from England; while Mr. C Williams gave it his best sympathy and support.

The Fight with Rome.

WE have received letters from several of our readers approving of the stand we have taken against the aggressiveness of Romanism—its audacity on the one hand, and its subtlety on the other. We cordially thank our friends for their assurances of good will, and for the evidence which their letters contain of a knowledge of the subject on which they write. But we have also received letters which distress us, because they show how sympathy with Rome is leavening even evangelical circles, and how a false liberalism, no less than a reviving sacerdotalism, is paving the way back to the superstition and the persecution of the days before the semi-Reformation.

Not from any disrespect, but because we believe that they represent others who have not written, we reply to these correspondents in print rather than by private letter.

One correspondent, whose letter we this week give, complains that we "oppose Parliamentary measures for the more complete emancipation of Roman Catholics." We have indeed opposed the Bill proposed to be introduced for making Romanists eligible to become Lord Chancellor of England and Lord Lieutenant of Ireland. In the "complete emancipation of the Roman Catholics," then, our friend must include the abrogation of the Act of Succession, and opening wide the door for a return to a Romish sovereignty—that is, really to the domination of the Pope. We are not prepared for that.

We would not restrict a Romanist or anyone else in the exercise of his religious views, except where he claims the right to restrict the liberty of others. We have never written a bitter word against our Roman Catholic fellow subjects; we too deeply sympathise with them on account of the iron tyranny under which, consciously or unconsciously, they lie. But we will oppose for ever the Godless apostasy which by no figure of speech, but according to the sober prose of history, we have called a "veneered heathenism."

Yes: we hope to meet above with Bernard of Clairvaux and other saints of God quoted by another correspondent. But Bernard, and Monica, and Catherine of Siena, and Thomas à Kempis, and the Venerable Bede, and Madame Guyon, and the rest, were not of Rome though they were in it. It is an abuse of language to confound the communion which these holy men and women held with God, with the uncleannesses of the Confessional as ordained by its authorised directors Dens and Liguori, and as imitated in its English form by "The Priest in Absolution."

If the Apostle Paul was justified in anathematising the teachers of another gospel which was not another, because it was veneered Judaism, à fortiori are we called upon to lift up our voice against another gospel which is not another, but a Christened Paganism. And if it would be unjust to charge Paul with becoming the enemy of his Galatian children in the faith, because he told them the truth, no less is it unfair to charge us with bitterness to deceived and self-deceived Roman Catholics and wavering Protestants, because we warn them that the priestcraft of Rome is at deadly and irreconcilable enmity with our Great High Priest, Jesus the Son of God.

Patient Waiting.

By REV. NEWMAN HALL, LL.B.

THE tide was very low, the briny sands stretched far and wide, the briny sea spread away till its azure blended with the sky. During centuries that shore had been alternately saturated with salt and scorched by sun, now dry, now moist, but never yielding refreshment to the faint. What less inviting than that arid plain, what more tantalising than that watery waste! The "sad sea waves" sullenly breaking, reminded of the thirst it could not slake.

But suddenly beneath me a tiny pool appeared, bubbling amid the sand. I dipped my finger to taste it. It was fresh, living water, forcing its way from hidden depths, irrepressible. Little birds came to sip it. My thirst was quenched. My soul was refreshed, for it sang an old familiar song—"O rest in the Lord, and wait patiently for Him."

There are times when life seems a dreary desert. Yet, after days of weary travel, we reach some Elim with its palm trees, and if, as at Marah, the inviting waters are bitter, God casts some tree of promise into them, and makes them sweet. We camp in some oasis to refresh us before we go forward again across the wild. We rest after long toil beside some Jacob's well; and, though it be deep, faith draws up its living water. The children of Israel fainted and murmured, but God opened fountains from the flinty rock. And often the children of God in their utmost straits have realised the assurance: "I give waters in the wilderness, and rivers in the desert, to give drink to my people, my chosen." Let his people therefore "rest in the Lord, and wait patiently for Him."

The character of God encourages restfulness. He was known to David as Refuge, Fortress, Shepherd. He is known to us more fully as the Son of Man, the Image of the Invisible God. His human sympathy and Divine power encourage in us undoubting confidence, absolute rest.

We could not rest in weakness. Fugitives from an invader flee to some strong city, but its walls might yield to the battering ram, or its garrison be starved into surrender. The strongest ship may founder, the bravest champion yield, the resources of the ablest friend be exhausted. But underneath the weakest believer are "the Everlasting Arms." The Red Sea still opens at His touch. The wildest storm obeys His word, "Peace, be still."

Strength without love does not give rest. But He in whom we trust is our compassionate Father. He gave his Son for our salvation. He dwells in us by his Spirit. He tells us that we are "graven on the palms of his hands." If an earthly father will not leave unsuccoured the child who appeals to him in want or peril, "how much more will your Father who is in heaven give good things to them that ask Him?" Of this He Himself assures us by his Son, who still says: "Let not your heart be troubled." "My peace I give unto you."

We seek earthly succour from sources on the permanence of which we cannot absolutely rest. The cistern leaks; the river dries up; lava streams desolate the vineyard; the seemingly solid ground may turn to quicksand. Even the friend may forget, or be alienated. But Jesus Christ is "the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever."

He has been tested. He is not an unknown God: "We have heard with our ears and our fathers have told us what things Thou didst in their day, and in the old time before them." We have ourselves proved his power, love, and constancy. He has delivered us from a worse bondage than Egypt, led us safely in the desert, fed us with manna, and refreshed us with living waters from the rock. He has promised never to leave us or forsake us: "They shall never perish." Let us, then, "rest in the Lord, and wait patiently for Him."

Patient waiting is sometimes more difficult than actual suffering. How distressing the suspense when expecting critical tidings, waiting the arrival of the physician, watching for rescue from a sinking ship! But, if our help cometh from the Lord, we may "wait patiently for Him."

Patiently, because He acts on a plan, not on impulse—a plan prompted by wisdom and love, deliberately formed, carefully carried on, sure to be perfected. Why should we not wait during the process? The deliverance which seems delayed is being accomplished meanwhile. The frosts and rains which intervene before the summer flowers and the autumn harvests are "preparing for our use the kindly fruits of the earth, so that in due time we may enjoy them." During the darkest hours of night the earth is rolling onward to the dawn. Vessels on different tacks, bound to the same port, may seem going from it, yet they are thus approaching it, and by that contrary course are escaping wreck on the threatening head-land, or from being carried hopelessly out to sea. Only children disturb the roots to see how their mustard and cress are growing. Impatience hinders, not helps. Why pluck the fruit before it is ripe? Be patient, and let it swell into fulness, and sweeten in the sun.

Wait patiently because God is patient. In nature how patiently the silent stars, with seeming slowness, yet unpausing alacrity and certainty, pursue their course. How patiently the seasons change, and day succeeds to night. The husbandman has long patience till he reaps the reward of his ploughing and sowing. God is patient in his providential work. Patient during Joseph's enslavement, and reproach, and imprisonment, till the Divine plan was perfected in the protection and nurture of the chosen race. Patient during the sins and wanderings of the Israelites, till, purified and strong by trial, they were fit to occupy the promised land. The disciples waited patiently for the promised Comforter, and the Church still waits patiently, century after century, "looking for that blessed hope," the glorious appearing of her Lord. How patiently has God waited for us! How year after year He came after us, though we closed our ears to his call; how long before our heart opened to Him, He waited, saying, "Behold I stand at the door and knock." And shall we not wait patiently for Him? His season for manifested succour is the best. "God is never before his time, and never too late." Let us tarry the Lord's leisure. "If the promise tarry, wait for it: it will surely come: it will not tarry."

Wait patiently. However long the interval, it is comparatively short. "Yet a little while." The pain, the heart-grief, the privations, the fears, are but "for a moment," compared with the "eternal weight of glory." Heaven is not far off. Safely landed on the heavenly shore, we shall not think the passage of the river tedious. In the home of God for ever, we shall wonder that the trials of the wilderness journey seemed long. And these very trials are the pathway to that home, strengthen us in reaching it, and fit us for better enjoying it. They "work out for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory."

Let us, then, rest in the Lord. Alas for those who rest on the shifting sands of earth! Resting in God, we build on the Rock of Ages, which no waves of trial can shake. Let us respond to our Saviour's call: "Come unto Me all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Resting on his atonement for salvation, in all our weakness we may rest on his strength; in all sorrow on his sympathy; in all perplexity on his guidance; in all need on his help; in all danger on his deliverance. We may wait patiently the fulfilment of his faithful promises, and in prospect of death in the sure and certain hope that "absent from the body we shall be present with the Lord." We can wait patiently his coming to his collective Church on earth, or his coming to us individually. "I will come again and take you to Myself, that where I am there ye may be also."

MRS. AMANDA SMITH,

Formerly an African Slave.

WHEN the Lord makes up his jewels, his choice will not be confined to the white race only. The truth of those remarkable words in 1 Cor. i. 26-29 is exemplified in AMANDA SMITH, the subject of this week's sketch.

Born in slavery at Long Green, Maryland, in 1837, she was redeemed by her father, Samuel Berry. Although no worldly wealth was hers, she had what was far better: parents and a grandmother who were truly pious people. Her grandmother was mighty in prayer, and her parents often said that it was to her prayers they owed their freedom. For in their days it was an exceptional privilege for a slave to be able to buy himself and his family. Her mother, inheriting the spirit of prayer, was a woman of great faith and strong moral courage; and these qualities descended to the third generation.

Amanda had few opportunities of going to school. Once when she was maligned for being a poor scholar, she wrote: "I never had a chance for as good an education as the most common white person has; I was born in slavery, and bought by my father, and only had about three months' schooling all my life." After a long struggle with ignorance and darkness she definitely received the pardon of her sins through faith in Jesus.

She was first married to C. Devine, who died in 1856. Three years after, she was married to J. H. Smith, of Philadelphia, a local deacon in the African Methodist Episcopal Church, who died in 1869. Of her five children only one daughter survives; and, as she is married, Mrs. Smith is free from family claims.

In 1868 she was awakened to feel the need of personal holiness. She says: "Not hearing this point definitely preached or taught, though I believe there were many of the older brethren and sisters in the church who enjoyed this experience, I was much confused in my mind, and hence blundered along in darkness, not knowing that this blessed grace, like justification, was received by faith in Christ alone." A sermon by that good man John S. Inskip, from the text, "Put ye on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness," was the means of leading her into liberty. Relating this circumstance, she says: "As he went on explaining the truth, it pleased the Lord to send the Holy Ghost upon me in great power, assuring me there and then that my prayer was heard." From that hour Mrs. Smith has never doubted the power and purpose of God, not only to justify, but also to sanctify and keep the soul stayed on Him in all the experiences of this mortal life.

A short time afterwards, the Spirit of the Lord led Mrs. Smith into public life. Her power as an evangelist became so widely known and appreciated that she had many invitations in all directions. It was at this juncture that some friends casually proposed a trip to England, promising to find the means. Believing that the Lord would use her there for his glory, she consented, and arrived in Liverpool just in time to attend the Keswick Convention, in 1879. She was most warmly received by the friends there, and found it a time of great spiritual refreshment. From there she had many invitations to work in different parts of England. She first went to Lancashire to work with Mrs. Stephen Menzies, where the Lord gave great blessing.

After a year and some months in England, an American lady, who was returning to India, proposed to Mrs. Smith to accompany her. Feeling that the Lord had work for her there also, the matter was laid before Him, and being furnished with the wherewithal to meet expenses, she landed in Bombay in October, 1880. There the Lord showed that He had opened a wide door for her; a number of letters awaited her arrival, inviting her to hold meetings in different places in north and south India, Madras, Burmah, and Lucknow, being some of the places visited. Dr. Thoburn, now Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church in India, was a warm friend, and did much to assist her in the work.

Strangely but surely the Lord now called Mrs. Smith to go to Africa. After much prayer and thought, she decided to return to England, and arrived in June 1881, in time to attend the great Œcumenical Conference of Methodism held in City Road Chapel, which she enjoyed exceedingly. After the Conference she had many calls for further service in England, but the deep conviction that God had need of her to go to Africa never left her, and on December 24, 1881, she sailed from Liverpool for Monrovia, the capital of Liberia, where she arrived on January 18, 1882. When Bishop Taylor came to Cape Palmas to establish his self-supporting Mission, Mrs. Smith went with the party that accompanied him up the Cavalley river and on the Kroo coast. Mrs. Smith was present at all the councils held by the Bishop with the native kings and chiefs, so that when the missionaries arrived her experience was of much use to them.

Mrs. Smith would have remained longer in Africa, but, being thoroughly broken down in health, she was advised by the doctor to leave for England or America as soon possible. She had two little native children given her while in Africa, a girl and a boy. The former, being in bad health, was obliged to be left at Freetown with a Christian family. The little boy she brought with her to England last winter. Mrs. Smith says the Lord has wonderfully opened the way for him; his foster mother has succeeded in getting him settled in a school at Southport, where he is very happy. A few weeks ago this little boy was led to give his heart to the Saviour, and the change in him is very marked. Mrs. Smith's heart is full of praise and thankfulness to God who doeth all things well. His future is in the hands of God, and Mrs. Smith hopes that he may yet go back to teach and preach among his own people. Our devoted sister is herself now seeking a much-needed rest in this country; we believe she intends proceeding to the United States about October next.

As an interesting and, we trust, profitable supplement to the preceding outline sketch, we reproduce the account of Mrs. Smith's conversion, as related by herself at the Broadlands Conference in 1879, and printed in our issue of August 21 for that year:—

I was very definitely converted to God in 1856. I was very ignorant, but I had been taught that God would save me the moment I believed. I lived in the country in a family of "Friends," and went to town only once a fortnight. When I was convicted of sin I prayed, fasted, wept, read my Bible, but the more I read the more confused I got. I used to think my one trouble was disobedience, and it seemed to me I needed someone that had not sinned to intercede with Jesus for me. Therefore I cried to the wind, the sun, and moon, and stars, to carry my sorrow to the Lord: "O wind! you never sinned like me; tell Jesus I'm a poor sinner." When the sun got up and lightened the world I said, "O sun! you never sinned like me; tell Jesus I am a poor sinner." At night, when the moon and stars were shining, I cried in my distress, "O moon and stars, you've never sinned like me, but kept your place as God made you; tell Jesus I'm a poor sinner." Thus I pleaded second-handedly with Jesus through the heavenly bodies; but, oh! the wonderful forbearance of God! I can't understand it.

I sat down one day almost in despair. The suggestion came—"You've been sincere; you've fasted, wept, prayed, read your Bible. You've been three months like this. God does his work quick: if He'd meant to convert you He'd have done it long ago. Give it up!" But it seemed as if the Holy Spirit said, "Pray once more." "Yes," I said, "and I'll be converted this afternoon, if there's any such thing as conversion." It was March 17, a bright and beautiful day. I got all my work as forward as I could, and then went down into the cellar and began to pray, "O Lord, convert my soul." The suggestion followed, "That's just what you've said many times before. It's no use." I began again, "O Lord, please convert my soul. If you'll only do it, I'll love and obey you all my life. O Lord, if not, I've come down here to die. Salvation or death! I'll never leave this cellar alive unless I have that which I have been praying for so long." Well, I did die; but I came to life again very quick. I said, "O Lord, I will BELIEVE." The darkness that had filled my heart so long all passed as before the noonday sun. When I got a glimpse of Christ my Saviour, my bonds were loosed, and I cried, "Why, Lord, I do believe; this is just what I've been asking for. O Lord, I do believe!" and down it came like a wave all through me again and again.

Why didn't they tell me it was like this? Why didn't they tell me it was only by believing God? I was a new creature. I was all new—my flesh, my head, my whole being. I rubbed my hands together and said, "Oh! I'm new!" You know what colour they are; but there seemed a halo over them. I made but two springs out of the cellar. The glory of God filled my heart. I wanted to tell some one, and I thought, Must I wait a fortnight before I can tell out my joy? How many times I had prayed for hours in that kitchen after they had all gone to bed! Now I struck the table at which I had so often knelt, and cried, "I'M SAVED!" and the table seemed to bound with delight. I wanted to see if I was the same. I might have been as green as grass or as black as the ace of spades, but I felt new. There was a large mirror in the parlour, and I went in there to see if I was the same, or if some wonderful change had come upon me.

When I told about it, some of my people said, "There'll be a vacillation. Wait till the devil fires a few bomb-shells, and you won't be as happy as you are now." Not being taught that God would sanctify and keep me, I was sometimes on the mountain, sometimes in the valley; but in reading my Bible and praying very much I began to see that God had more of the same kind to follow, and being so much more it really was better than the beginning.

In a sketch published in The Union Signal of Chicago, Miss Frances E. Willard says:—

I first saw Amanda Smith at Ocean Grove, that wonderful Christian watering-place, a sort of Gospel ship anchored beside Long Branch. She seemed to me almost as unique a character as "Sojourner Truth." Her talk had what reporters call "solid chunks of wisdom"; it was epigrammatic. She was a most mellow Christian. I shall never forget one Sunday evening, and the surf meeting, of which she was the principal figure. Anywhere from ten to thirty thousand people were seated on the sand; they seemed to me to be somewhat assorted into family groups; little children had their pails and shovels, and engaged in that most fascinating play in which they mimicked the work of both sculptor and artist; gentle-faced women watched their play, or looked off over the sea; men tilted their hats over their eyes in that convenient way they have, and seemed to be in a brown study. Everybody felt the grandeur of the scene, and was stirred by the basso profondo of the sea. Everybody wanted something said about it, but no speaker's voice could reach them all. Some person with a happy thought improvised a sort of stage, made of chairs and dry-goods boxes, two or three men lent a hand, and a weird figure took possession, high enough for all to see that it was Amanda Smith, the African sybil, the Christian saint. Her tall, well proportioned figure was outlined against the sunset, her long arms swinging to the rhythm of the tune; her wonderful, velvety voice rang out in a vibrant contralto, deep, and so swelling that all could hear, as she sang (beckoning toward the ocean):—

There's a wideness in God's mercy like the wideness of the sea,
There's a kindness in his justice that is more than liberty.

She went through the whole of that wonderful hymn all alone. Tears came into women's eyes; little children stopped their play, and men pulled their hats down farther over their faces. It was a grand hour, and Amanda had put the final touch to it, which she could not have done except that she had a grand soul.

BIRMINGHAM Y.M.C.A.—The annual breakfast meeting of this Association took place on June 18, when nearly 230 of the members and associates sat down to an excellent repast, kindly provided by a member of the Committee. Earnest addresses were delivered by Rev. James Henry, secretary of the Church Pastoral Aid Society; Rev. Walter Searle, of the Birchfield Congregational Church; and Mr. Henry Armstrong, travelling secretary.

AN ARCTIC MISSION SHIP.—A ceremony possessing many points of interest was performed at the London Docks on Wednesday evening last week, in the speeding of the missionary ship annually sent to the Moravian stations on the north-east coast of Labrador by the Society for the furtherance of the Gospel, in connection with the Moravian Church and mission agency. The vessel is the barque Harmony, the fourth of the Society's ships which have borne that name. Her ordinary crew number twelve, exclusive of the captain, Henry Linklater. The average duration of her voyage, including the stay on the coast and visit to the stations there, is 117¾ days. There are six stations in Labrador, dotted at intervals of from forty to ninety miles along some 250 miles of the rocky coast. Their congregations number altogether 1250 souls.

GOSPEL PROGRESS IN FRANCE.

IN connection with the Foreign Aid Society for the diffusion of the Gospel on the Continent, Pasteur Théodore Monod spoke at a meeting in Morley Halls, Regent-street, over which Lord Kinnaird presided, on Wednesday week. While the Society, which is in its jubilee year, has no special missionaries of its own, its peculiar work, according to the plan of its devoted founder, the late Prebendary Burgess, is to assist, as the representative of English Christians, those native organisations which it finds to be in possession of pure and unadulterated faith, and of a wise and energetic plan of labour. There are in existence certain Sociétés Evangéliques, evangelistic and Protestant in character, which the Society has for many years assisted by funds collected in England.

Miss BURGESS described a meeting of 3000 children and teachers in the Trocadero Hall, as an indication of the hold which evangelical and Protestant truth is gaining in Paris. The many societies have the same aim, and, though occupying varying fields of action, tend to fusion into one grand work. France is groping for the light, thirsting for the Gospel, and her pastors are overworked for lack of funds to send them aid.

Pasteur MONOD said he had been more immediately associated with Mr. McAll's Mission; but his numerous brief references to persons and places under personal observation, covered a wide field, and were of an encouraging character. Experience convinced him that there are a great many unknown Protestants in France, who hide their faith through fear of losing social or business position. Recently, the Oratoire Church was packed to the upper galleries—another recognition of the McAll Mission by the united evangelical churches. There is everywhere in France a disposition to listen to the Gospel, especially amongst young men; for the conviction is growing that the vile immorality with which the country has been flooded for years must end in national ruin. An able sceptic, writing in a pubilc journal, has said that, if the ears of the people are to be gained, it must be by religion. Mr. McAll's Mission has made the Gospel to be known everywhere, in a certain sense, and the people see that Papist portraits of Protestants are false. The same buildings now accommodate a mission and a church, whether the latter be Lutheran, Reformed, or Baptist; and, without rivalry among the churches, the latter have been fed by the Mission. Some adults, not themselves favourable to the Gospel, nevertheless desire that their children should be brought under its influence; and there are 300 mission schools, as compared with 80 parish schools. It is a hopeful sign that at the last monthly prayer-meeting for Protestant pastors 20 attended. Six years ago there were 871 Protestant pastors in France; and French Protestants, who numbered only 800,000 in a population of 36,000,000, contributed annually towards the support of worship and Christian work 4,700,000 francs. Increased aid afforded to Continental countries would return in reflex blessing upon England.

Rev. Mr. FREEMAN pointed out that increased financial support is needed to utilise existing spiritual agencies in France and Belgium. Pastor CHOISY said French pastors are encouraged amidst the difficulties under which they labour by news of efforts to bring their needs under the notice of English Christians.

Lord KINNAIRD gave expression to some earnest thoughts concerning methods of making the Society's operations better known, and especially suggested that travellers should take opportunities of seeing Continental work for Christ.

Pastor Lecoat, of the Breton Evangelical Mission, having received from a friend a magic lantern, would be glad to receive slides illustrating the life of Jesus, or other New Testament narratives. His address is Tremel, Brittany, France.

Deep Sea Fishermen.

IN presiding over the crowded annual meeting in Exeter Hall, on Thursday week, the LORD CHANCELLOR said the rapid success of this young association shows that the necessities of a great national industry long left without spiritual or physical care, have gone to the hearts and consciences of the country, though the funds are by no means adequate to all the need. On its eighth anniversary, the Mission has an income of £20,000 a year, and ten fully equipped vessels, three of which are hospital ships with skippers instructed to some extent in the principles of first aid in the accidents and complaints to which the fishers are exposed. Refining and enlivening literature is provided for weary times of enforced inactivity, and warm woollen clothing for cold and dark days. The coper, or Dutch drink ship, has nearly vanished from the North seas, where the civilising influence of Christianity is fulfilling the expectations of those who believe in God's promises concerning what shall follow the diffusion of his Word. From various quarters and different sources comes uniform testimony to social, moral, and spiritual benefits from the Society's practical and sensible methods of work, which influence not only the men at sea but their homes in almost every seaport upon the south coast.

Canon FLEMING moved a resolution recognising God's hand in the Mission's work among men who lead a hard, perilous, and lonely life, and who form one of the most important classes of the community, whether regarded socially, commercially, or religiously, and one which is very susceptible to good impressions from kindness and sympathy. There was no trouble, he said, about "compensation" when the coper disappeared. Sunday is now, perhaps, better observed on the sea than in London, where the East-enders buy and sell and the West-enders play lawn-tennis and give dinner parties on that day.

Rev. Dr. SINCLAIR PATERSON said Christ honoured fishermen by making them the first heralds of his Gospel; and there are no better evangelists to-day. The work is sympathetic, surgical, and spiritual. Injuries may last a lifetime for lack of ready help. New gospels effect nothing; but men can lead others to the Rock when their own feet are planted thereon.

Mr. JAS. E. MATHIESON was sure that as long as the Mission Scripturally combined the healing of the body with the gospelling of the spirit, abundant success would continue.

Mr. TAYLOR, secretary of the Hull Trawlers' Benefit Society, who has spent twenty-five years in the North Sea, and skippers from Lowestoft, Grimsby, Yarmouth, and elsewhere, bore grateful and cheering testimony to the happy results of the enterprise, in bodies healed and comforted, lives gladdened, savage natures changed, and souls saved. Their manner of speech, and song in their favourite and special musical compositions, was frank and hearty.

A resolution, pledging the meeting to increased support of the work, was moved by Rev. CANON BELL, who had come up specially from Cheltenham to show sympathy with the Mission. It is the fashion to say that the Word of God is behind the age; but that Word has changed and revolutionised the whole of this fishing community, both on sea and land.

Mr. HARRISON MUDD, chairman of the Grimsby Smack Owners' Association, testified that members thereof derive much satisfaction and benefit from the improved manners of the men; and that the trade is consolidated by the spirit of unity between employers and employed.

Mr. G. F. COOK, the well-known temperance lecturer, delivered a fervent appeal for increased support to the Mission. While it is true that the coper cannot live where the Mission ship is, yet it must be remembered that there are nineteen fleets and only ten ships to work among them.

The income for current expenses has greatly dwindled of late. From past special efforts, the Mission is nearly out of debt; but the great work of the summer months is at hand, when the expenditure is necessarily augmented, while the receipts, from the scattering of helpers and other causes, suffer reduction. The Council earnestly pray and hope that the harvest time of spiritual reaping may be entered upon with no deficit.

The Stockwell Orphanage.

THE annual festival and celebration of the President's birthday was held on Thursday last week in the beautiful grounds of Stockwell Orphanage, in charming weather. Though by no means well, Mr. Spurgeon was present, accompanied by his venerable father, and his son Charles. Fifty-six years of age, his words and ways were characterised by much of his early vigour, sweetened by experience and growth in grace.

A large body of friends attended, and the afternoon meeting was in every way a success. The annual report afforded the text of interesting addresses. Here are some sentences respecting the children received:—"Every child is fatherless, and some have lost both parents; to ninety-one of the fatherless and orphaned, the blessings of this Orphanage have been newly given. They come to us from homes upon which the dark shadow of death has fallen, eclipsing family joys, and blighting happy hopes; they come to a sunny spot where all is lively cheerfulness. Our boys and girls are not only rescued from degradation, but they are introduced to comfort, to religion, and to every hope of success in life. We challenge our friends to look in at the Orphanage at any odd time they choose, and see if it is not the abode of as free and orderly a set of boys as ever lived. Let them also pop in upon a sudden upon our girls, and bear witness to their liveliness, their mirth, and yet their ready obedience." As is well known, the complement of inmates is five hundred. Up to March last, 1420 have been admitted into the Orphanage, where everything possible is done to supply the place of Christian parental influence.

Mr. SPURGEON was cordially greeted, every good birthday wish being warmly cheered. In the course of some remarks at the outset of the meeting, he said God had been very gracious to the Institution, providing for all its needs, and giving a little to spare, so that borrowing had been unnecessary. Mr. R. CORY, of Cardiff, who occupied the chair, urged Christians to lay up in the bank of heaven by contributing liberally to the Orphanage. He thanked God for Mr. Spurgeon and his grand work. Rev. EVAN H. HOPKINS spoke in a similar strain, saying: I have a warm admiration for Mr. Spurgeon, who is a man I love in the Gospel, and for whose faithful testimony to the truth for many years I heartily thank God. In these days especially we want men of solid backbone, robust Christians of the John Bunyan type. Rev. Dr. MACEWAN rejoiced in a thirty years, personal acquaintance with Mr. Spurgeon. If ever there was a man raised up and equipped for God's work, that man was the pastor of the Metropolitan Tabernacle, whose influence, by his writings is co-extensive with Christendom, so that he may be regarded as having received a cosmopolitan apostleship.

Rev. JAMES SPURGEON, in a financial statement, said the income had been £12,239. While there had been a fall in the amount of legacies, subscriptions to the general funds had been more than in any previous year. Ninety-two per cent. of the boys passed a Scripture examination held in connection with the Brixton Auxiliary Sunday-school Union. He thanked God for the work of grace that had been going on in the Orphanage. Though distinctly unsectarian, the Institution is pronouncedly Christian. Church of England congregations, as well as Nonconformist bodies in the neighbourhood continue to show sympathy, and from all sections children are received and trained for the one Christ.

Brief addresses having been delivered by Revs. James Knaggs and J. Baillie, and Mr. James East (Mayor of Kingston), there was a call for some words from Mr. Spurgeon's father. Few and gracious were the words of this aged servant of God, whose appearance told of a remarkably well-preserved and active constitution. Having given expression to his thankfulness to God for what his son had been enabled to do, the speaker, in a few words, extolled the righteousness of Jehovah. Then, touching his son on the shoulder, he said: "The Lord continue to bless you, my dear son, and prosper you. Continue in the old paths. I have heard of fifty-seven conversions through one of my old sermons; and wherever I go I preach it, if I have not already given it. Your grandfather said he had preached ninety-eight times from 'By grace are ye saved.' He intended to preach the sermon 100 times, but did not live long enough."

After the meeting there was a "march past," which was enjoyed by the children and the spectators alike. The band of Dr. Barnardo's Homes was in attendance, and as darkness came on the grounds were illuminated. A second meeting was held in the evening, presided over by Sir Henry Doulton.

SAVED BY A TRACT.

IN a letter to Rev. E. W. Moore, of Wimbledon, Miss F. Barclay of the China Inland Mission writes:—

"I must tell you of an incident at a small place not very far from here, named Tan-Ling-Shien. A man from there got hold of one of Dr. Griffith John's tracts and took it home. After reading it once he put it aside, and thought no more about it. Some time afterwards he came across it again, and re-read it. This time he became interested, and wanted to know more about it, and went to a city near here to see if he could find out anything. From that city he brought back a Gospel, and the result was that he was converted, and was the means of his wife's conversion. She wanted to be baptized at once, and was not to be daunted. She knew there were 'foreigners' at Chen Tu, and walked there (I am afraid to say how many days' journey), and arrived while a service was going on, after which there were to be some baptisms.

"She was so evidently genuine that after hearing her story they could do nothing but baptize her forthwith! An evangelist returned with her, baptized several others in her village who were ready, and now there is a native church with about fifteen members! That is one instance of which we hope and trust there are hundreds."

CANTERBURY.—The Consistory of the French Church at Canterbury proposes the establishment of a "French Protestant Home" for foreign Protestant pastors and students, who desire to learn English, and to study the religious life of this country.

THE CHURCH ARMY.—Rev. W. Hunt, for the past six years curate of Ravenhead, St. Helen's, has been appointed assistant secretary to the Church Army. This, it is hoped, will lighten the increasing load which is falling upon Rev. W. Carlile and Rev. J. J. Chambers, hon. and central secretaries, through the great extension of the work, both centrally and in local branches. The Tramps' and Inebriates' Home continues its work. Fifty men have passed through it since its inauguration. One has been restored to his home, and another sent to an Industrial Home Sixteen are out in situations earning their livelihood at an average wage of 25s. per week. Fourteen are at present in the Home, of whom several will shortly be starting work.

ANTI-VIVISECTION SOCIETY.

"PASTEURISM and crime" was the key-note of a Conference held at the Westminster Palace Hotel last week by the Victoria-street Society for the Protection of Animals from Vivisection. Canon WILBERFORCE was in the chair, and in the course of a rousing speech referred to the action of the Society in respect to the Mansion House meeting, which the Lord Mayor convened last year, in support of the proposed Pasteur Institute. That meeting, said the chairman, was carried on with locked doors, and with the most careful selection of those on whom tickets were bestowed. The Society's committee, however, had caused the hoardings of the Metropolis to be plentifully placarded with large posters, containing the list of those who had died after treatment under M. Pasteur's system. Very little in consequence had been heard, he believed, of the matter since that time, and there had been no further attempt to found a Pasteur Institute in this country. For himself, he could find no words that were too forcible in speaking of the abominable devilry called vivisection; the baking, and boiling, and freezing, and roasting, and carving up of live animals to serve no beneficial purpose whatever. When he had had his heart set on fire by the burning words of Frances Power Cobbe, he wished for a whip in his hand to lash the rascally vivisectors through the world. There was not one single evil that any man had been able to remedy by the fiendish cruelty of which he had been guilty. The Society objected to vivisection because it appealed to all that was selfish and cowardly in human nature. They believed it brutalised an honourable and useful profession, in support of which belief the chairman quoted the opinions of several eminent surgeons. It was not only useless, but positively harmful. The human system had suffered and not benefited by the attempts that had been made to apply to it the results of experiments on innumerable dogs, as might have been known from the very beginning, when it was reflected that the very osteology and nature of the dog are altogether different from that of a human being.

Mr. B. BRYAN, the secretary, remarked, that no new legislation had been obtained last year, but efforts were made to enforce the existing law. This resulted in showing that the Act as it stands fails to answer its purpose. It protects the vivisectors but not the animals, and it was found necessary to take steps for bringing the matter before Parliament.

Dr. CLARK said the members of the Society had to contend against powerful opposition; but, having righteousness on their side, they would at last triumph. Rev. JOHN R. WRIGHT cited as a sign of progress, the manifest disinclination of their opponents to engage in a full and free discussion of the question. Dr. BERDOE said, that while in Cambridge—the stronghold of vivisection—it made him sad as he looked on the beautiful faces of the students, to think how they would after a time become brutalised. They were to be engaged in work, the nature of which they would not dare to speak of in public, or perform in the light of the open day.

Mr. SAMUEL SMITH, M.P., suggested that, when the matter came up for debate in the House of Commons, it would be well to have men who, from their training and experience, could bring forward hard facts and solid arguments in support of what was wanted. Rev. JOHN BAIRD, representing the Scottish Society, said that vivisection had failed to justify itself in any particular. Rev. T. P. RING contended that, like the liquor traffic, vivisection could not be regulated, and it must go root and branch. Among the other speakers were Lord Cardross and Mrs. Pearsall-Smith. The attendance was large and influential.

PARIS AND CANADA.

IT is difficult to compress into a few sentences all that I should like to tell our friends about my new home in Canada, and the many links that I find between it and our Paris Homes. The first invitation I received at Kingston, Ontario, was to meet one who came to the decision to devote her life to Christ from attending the Bible-readings at our Y.W.C.A., 26, Faubourg St. Honoré, Paris. It was very gladdening, as she pleaded for the work in which she has now been engaged for nine years as zenana missionary in India, to hear her trace the little seed sown in much faith and prayer by one of our most valued workers in Paris over ten years ago.

Our work in Paris is increasing on every hand under the guidance of my faithful workers. We need younger ladies to work under those who have borne the burden and heat of the day now from eight to seventeen years. If I could but tell the joy of such service to our young friends who have time and means at their disposal, surely this need would quickly be filled. Then we need funds. With an increased expenditure, we have received £1000 less than last year. During my stay on this side, I crave the happiness of seeing our work strengthened and our treasury filled by those who remember that God will be no man's debtor; look what he layeth out, "it shall be paid him again."

WORK IN MADEIRA.

MR. WILLIAM GEORGE SMART, of Madeira, has for years been superintending a very interesting work at Funchal. In addition to agencies for the Bible and Tract Societies, he has the oversight of a Sailors' Rest (in connection with Miss Weston's work at Devonport) and a Mission to sailors afloat. Moreover, in a large room attached to his house there is a Portuguese school, for which support is asked from British Christians.

There has been great encouragement of late in the work among sailors. Very few of these are from merchant vessels; but naval sailors of many nations visit the island—English, American, Swedish, German, French, Russian, and Norwegian. English vessels predominate, and Mr. Smart endeavours to befriend the men in every way in his power. The school work has had its ups and downs. Not long ago a number of children were taken away by the Sisters of the Order of St. Vincent of Paul, but all but two have since returned. Through the school it is hoped to spread the light among the Roman Catholic population.

From 40,000 to 50,000 tracts and periodicals are distributed yearly. The young man in charge of the Bible depôt is very earnest, and when the people visit the place to buy books they are kindly received, and efforts are made to instruct them in the truth. The need is very great, and friends are wanted abroad as well as on the spot. The Romanists are busy, and sin is rampant. Many a young man has been disgraced, and some for ever ruined, through accepting the services of the town guides. Mr. Smart does his utmost to checkmate these men by meeting visitors and inviting them to make his house and the Sailors' Rest their places of call for advice and assistance.

The Rest was established in 1882, and since then the state of things has shown much improvement. It is hoped to be able soon to extend the work by purchasing more spacious premises for conversion into a Rest. Local helpers are strongly in favour of this being done. Mr. Smart is at present in London, staying at 107, Great Russell-street, W.C. He expects to return to Madeira at the beginning of August, and will be glad to take with him articles suitable for the annual sale of work on behalf of the food fund connected with this school. Goods may be addressed to him at 79, Queen Victoria-street, E.C.

My Father!

"A little child shall lead them."

I HAVE a little motherless boy—a real treasure. He is the apple of my eye and my heart's joy; but, as I look at him with unspeakable love, I know God loves me more than this, and this enables me to learn sweet lessons.

He always ceases his crying when in my arms, and feels he is safe—so safe. My life and strength, failing as they are, are between him and all around. The Lord hears my cry always, and puts his unfailing arms of almighty power and love round me, and draws me to his heart. This always stops my crying, and makes me feel supremely happy and safe.

My boy has no cares, and why should he? He knows his father cares for him, and so he rests. But I may fail, for I am failing, like all around. My Father never fails, and has given me such a promise as Phil. iv. 19, "His compassions fail not;" so I rest there. It is sweet rest, and at meal-time He spreads my table with all I need.

My little boy sleeps sometimes beyond his usual meal-time, and my watchful nurse tells me he must wake. I do not shake him, or call him sleepy, but just stoop over and kiss him with a heartfelt kiss of love. The wee eyes open, and all is ready and waiting. My Father does that. I am sleepy sometimes, even with an open Bible before me, but He does not shake me with a harsh "Wake up," but arouses me, quietly and lovingly, with "the kisses of his mouth," only to hear sweet words from those lips. A feast, indeed, sweeter than honey and the droppings of the honeycomb.

Sometimes my boy is restless and fretful, so my arms are his cradle, and I sing to him, and lullaby my little treasure. His unrest soon ceases, and he becomes restful and happy. My Heavenly Father is just as watchful; oh! the music of his voice, and the rest in his arms. I only just trust Him, and his voice comes stealing into my discord and unrest. I feel He is with me, and in that knowledge I rest—a true, deep, holy rest.

Hands infinitely more tender than mine are now lying silent in the grave, and a heart that once beat with a mother's love is now still—safe within the keeping of Jesus "till He comes." I look at my frame, and learn too that unless the glory be revealed first, it will be one day cold, and my heart will cease its life's beating. But my Father is the living God, and I know that neither now nor in eternity He will fail. What a rock to build upon—what a Father to trust and love! To shake my peace one must shake the very throne of God, and to deprive me of my supply one must needs deprive me of Him; and so I sing, in the words of dear Wade Robinson:—

My God, I do not fear
To yield myself to Thee,
However strange thy will appear,
It must be good for me.
O Father! wise, and kind, and strong,
Thy will can do no creature wrong.

The little babe at rest,
Becomes my minister;
It lies upon its mother's breast
And leaves itself to her.
Oh! foolish babe, if it should dread
The heart that throbs beneath its head.

THE SAILORS' RESTS IN THE MEDITERRANEAN are making cheering progress. A missionary has been appointed to that opened in March last at Piræus, in connection with the Sailors' Rest Aid Society, of which Mr. Stephen Burrowes, 15, Flavia Goija, Naples, is the secretary. The Port Saïd Rest is in a satisfactory state, and under thorough business management. At Naples, recently, a new boat was dedicated to mission work in connection with the Rest there. Madame Meuricoffre, president of the Committee, gave it the name "Hope," and already it has been used in visiting the shipping in the outlying ports.

THE GOSPEL IN ITALY.

THE Evangelical Church of Italy, formerly called the Free Italian Church, carries on a faithful, honest, persevering work for Christ. The report for 1889 shows that, though there are many difficulties, there are certainly signal encouragements attending the work. The churches number 31, with 55 stations. There are 2305 communicants, and 1374 school children.

From Bari, Pastor Mariani reports that priests have borne witness to the truth of the Gospel. On one occasion, when the pastor had appealed to the people to come to Jesus for salvation, a priest left the crowd, and, embracing the preacher, exclaimed: "Surely the Spirit of God is here. Pray for me." For the most part the priests do their utmost to impede the work, and, sad to relate, through their terrorism many anxious souls are prevented from coming to the light. Evangelist Valentini, of Carrara, writes: 'Our enemies have not failed to disturb the services, by sending idle and lewd fellows to whistle and yell as they pass our door, and several times, in order to frighten the weaker brethren and prevent them from coming to church, stones have been thrown against the door and bombs exploded. Many of the citizens cheer us with their sympathy and urge us to go forward, although some of these are Nicodemuses, who do not put in an appearance at our gatherings."

From Florence, Evangelist Stagnitta reports: 'Signor Colombo, a finance official, who had been in the habit of attending our church, was seized with illness, and asked for the evangelical minister. The family with whom he lodged, however, was Catholic, and the Confraternity of the Misericordia sought to introduce the priest. Yet God so overruled matters that in the end the minister was called to the bed-side of the dying man. The situation was a difficult one. From the nature of the malady material help was needed night and day, and the Misericordia has abundant resources. In this conjuncture the members of the church, assisted by those of the other churches, especially the Waldensian, and by the Y.M.C.A., with one consent offered their services, and for more than a month took the daily and nightly duty in turn, until our brother yielded up his spirit to God. And the Lord so influenced the mind of the landlady, that she was converted and is now a joyful communicant."

Evangelist Spigno, of Genoa, writes: "The time is not mature for a profound and general revival among the Catholics, but it is certainly coming through the power of Christ. With pleasure too I observe that the sceptical spirit, once so dominant, is gradually dying away, so that the Gospel is no longer the object of scorn. In regard to Catholicism, it is morally demolished. The people

FEEL THE NEED OF THE TRUTH.

In recent discussion with various sorts of people, especially of the middle class, who have been slighters and despisers, I could discern at the end a decided seriousness as to the future of their souls, and an anxiety as of contrite sinners who fear to give an account of themselves unto God. I believe that the question between liberals and clericals will shortly be changed into the far more serious one between the needs of the soul and God, for infidelity fails to satisfy the heart."

It is not surprising that at Rome, the Gospel should meet with much opposition. Pastor Conti in his report says: "A professor, D. L., who had come under the influence of the truth, and become a catechumen, was immediately dismissed from a lucrative employment as teacher in the house of Prince O., with the observation, that it was impossible for a Protestant professor to teach the Roman nobility! Madame B., also a catechumen, was followed by an ex-gendarme of the Pope, on leaving our church. When she reached an unfrequented street, he had the audacity to say to her: 'Are you not ashamed, at your age, to go where no honest woman goes?' And when the lady expressed her indignation, this brave soldier of the Pope used a most insulting expression as he went away. A new and hopeful field of labour has been given to us in the prisons, where our liberal Government permits the Word of God to be circulated."

In conclusion, we take a touching incident from the report of Evangelist Blasi, of Sondrio, "On the way to Montagna, in a snowstorm, I met a blacksmith, who showed me the way to the friends of the Gospel, who awaited me. In the thick of our discussion, I could see that the blacksmith was all ears and eyes, and finally he was so moved as to tell me of his need of the Gospel. A month passed before I could return, and then I found he had spoken to all his relatives and set them athirst for the glad tidings. His workshop, in which he made bells for the cattle, with images of St. Anthony and of the Madonna and of the Sacrament, became our evangelistic hall, in which his eight relatives and a large company listened greedily to the word of life. The blacksmith and all his household gave their hearts to God, and since then they have paid the penalty. But they say: 'Better little work provided by Christ, than a great deal found for me by the enemies of the Gospel!' They are all scattered abroad through persecution, but only to be preachers and teachers of the truth, which has so blessed them to all whom they happen to meet."

CLOSED DOORS IN JAPAN.

DEAR SIR,—Please accept my cordial thanks to you and your readers for continued interest in the project for establishing a Home for Eurasian girls in this country. My object in writing now, however, is not to represent the claims of Eurasian children, but to show that while there are "open doors" in Japan, there are also doors which are closed.

Probably no country has made such rapid progress, or has so eagerly embraced the teachings of civilisation as Japan has done since her portals were thrown open to people of other nations. The arts and sciences have been received with cordial welcome, and the imitative ingenuity of the Japanese has enabled them to utilise with great ease the knowledge they have gained. Railways intersect the country, joining town to town; mountains and ravines have been tunnelled and spanned; many new industries have sprung up; the shafts of factories are to be seen in almost every large town; and hospitals have been established almost everywhere. The primitive methods have been superseded by the superiority of modern invention. Schools abound, and are fairly well equipped. So eager were the people for western knowledge that until recent years anybody, educated or uneducated, speaking the English language, was pressed into educational service.

Christianity, like a fertilising stream, has brought in its train blessings of incalculable worth; but through the open portals have also entered scepticism, infidelity, and agnostic, so-called, philosophy. Infidelity is without veil among the numerous student class of the capital, and the writings of sceptical authors are as familiar as household words. The natural antipathy to the Gospel is as strong here as anywhere else.

As I am a self-supporting missionary, I have sometimes taught a few hours a day in two or three schools. Recently an English tutor was required in a Government school, and the matter being mentioned to me I had interviews and correspondence with the authorities about it. Having been requested to write answers to necessary questions concerning qualifications, &c., a second letter was given me requesting a guarantee that I would not teach Christianity while I was engaged as teacher for a period of one year. If this referred to the hours of school teaching, I would have given the required promise very readily; but, to show that this restriction was not simply limited to the four hours per day in school, the letter further required that I should not engage in any preaching service or conduct any religious ceremony whatever. I at once declined the school.

This nation needs salvation from paganism. It needs it quite as much from modern infidelity.—Yours faithfully,

FRANCIS STANILAND.

INQUIRERS' COLUMN.

SIN AND SINS.

WILL you please show how the following statements in the first Epistle of John may be reconciled:—

(1) "If we say we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us" (1 John i. 8).

(2) "Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin; for his seed remaineth in him: and he cannot sin, because he is born of God" (1 John iii. 9).

(3) "We know that whosoever is born of God sinneth not; but he that is begotten of God keepeth himself, and that wicked one toucheth him not" (1 John v. 18). J. W. S.

REPLY.

Though all men have sinned, those who are born of God have renounced sin. Such may, at times, fall into sin, but it is not their practice to "work the works of darkness." The seed of God remaining in them, they follow after holiness. In the first passage the reference is to sinnership, in the others to actual sinning. No one can truthfully deny participation in the former; disciples of Christ, however, are called upon, not only to desist from sinning, but to resist the beginnings of evil in the heart, and avoid the appearances of evil in the life.

ANOTHER REPLY.

(1) Any exposition which limits this to the unconverted is clearly false. The "we" includes the Apostle—we all have sin. It is the taint of our nature which can only be eliminated by death and resurrection. At the coming of the Lord, He will change this body of our humiliation, that it may be fashioned like unto the body of his glory (Phil. iii. 21).

(2) Commit—i.e. practise—same word as in 1 John iii. 7: "He that doeth righteousness is righteous." It is the habit of his life.

(3) To same effect. Whosoever is born of God sinneth not—doth not commit—doth not practise sin. He has sin dwelling in him (Rom. vii. 17, 18).

(1) is parallel to Rom. vii. 21. (2) and (3) are parallel to Rom. viii. 3, 4.

A "CHILDLESS" KING.

MAY I ask for an explanation of Jer. xxii. 30? The twenty-eighth verse mentions the "seed" of Coniah (Jeconiah=Jehoiachin) as though he were not "childless"; and this seems to be borne out by 1 Chron. iii. 17, and Matt. i. 12. Would it be correct to consider the meaning to be "officially childless," an heirless king? Further, in Matt. i. 12, "Salathiel" is stated the son of Jeconias (=Jeconiah), whilst Luke (iii. 27) calls him the son of Neri.—Yours &c., W. G. POPE.

REPLY.

The term "childless" is explained by the statement that "no man of his seed shall prosper, sitting upon the throne of David," &c. The king along with his posterity, was excluded from the throne for ever. It does not say that the king should be absolutely childless, but legally accounted so, by being "written down" without descendant in the register of citizens (see Isa. iv. 3). If Salathiel, or Shealtiel, had married the daughter and heiress of Neri, his name might have appeared as it does in the genealogies.

LAMPLEY STOKE, BATH.—A correspondent, who has recently visited this place, speaks of Gospel tent work that is being carried on there with many signs of encouragement and blessing.

Perverted.—A Story of Rome.

THE special point on which we earnestly desire to give a very necessary warning is one of wide and vital importance at the present day, when the universality of Continental travelling, and the consequent advantage of acquiring Continental languages, cause young people to be sent abroad for education in ever increasing numbers. Hundreds of parents yearly send their sons and daughters to finish their studies in France, for the sake of obtaining fluency in an almost necessary language; but few have any idea of the risks they run, or take the slightest precaution to avoid a very real and serious danger. If any misgiving does cross their minds, or is suggested by others as to the possibility of their children being ensnared by Roman Catholic arts, it is quickly dismissed. "There is no fear for my children—they have been too well brought up—and besides, Madame A., or Mdlle. B., or Mons. C., perfectly understands that they are always to attend a Protestant place of worship, and their religion is not to be interfered with."

Let a plain statement of recent events show how dangerous is this either in the stability of young people at the most impressionable age, or in the honourable dealing of Roman Catholics in matters connected with the advancement of their system.

Two young English ladies, at the beginning of this year, were finishing their education at a well-known French seaport town; one being about to leave at Easter, and the other likely to remain a few months longer. As soon as Lent began, a special mission was started in the principal Roman Catholic church of the town, the services being conducted every evening by able and eloquent Jesuit priests; and this seems to have suggested to the heads of the school a notable device for perverting the pupils who had been entrusted to them in reliance on their honourable abstention from any attempt at proselytism. The English girls, young ladies of perhaps seventeen or eighteen years of age, were offered the alternative of accompanying the other pupils to the mission services, or being sent to bed each night when their companions started. Naturally they preferred the novelty and excitement of a crowded church, with every attraction of music, eloquence, and ritual, to an ignominious dismissal to bed at an hour suitable only for children, and it does not seem to have occurred to them to ask for parental interference. So, through the forty days of Lent, the insidious process went on—impassioned preaching being occasionally varied by skilfully conducted controversial debates between two of the "fathers," in which it is needless to say that the one who affected to take the Protestant side was always worsted. It is not wonderful that girls who had never given the subject any serious thought interviews were sought and arranged, in which the astute fathers readily silenced any remaining doubts or scruples; and it was not till the mischief was all but consummated that the faintest hint of it reached anyone who could or would interpose. The English chaplain was absent at the moment, called away by important business; but his sister called at once upon Mdlle. P. to protest in his name against such steps being taken, without at least the knowledge of the parents concerned. She was met with a determined and by no means courteous refusal either to admit or deny the allegations, or to furnish the addresses of the parents; but by following up an accidental clue, one address was discovered, and the father written to without an hour's delay.

He could scarcely believe the warning, though he expressed much gratitude for the trouble taken; but his immediate appeal to his daughter put the matter beyond doubt. She had already been received into the Church of Rome, and was buoyed up by the false peace and joy with which that enchantress seldom fails to intoxicate her dupes in the first flush of carefully fanned enthusiasm. Whether her fellow pupil had acted more openly, or whether her family only learnt the truth after her return to England, we have no means of knowing.

But this is not all, and it is well to give the full particulars of this one sad story, that our readers may judge for themselves how far the ramifications of evil may extend in countless similar instances which never come to light.

There was a third English pupil at the same school, much younger than these two, and also the child of nominally Protestant parents. But she had been committed to the charge of an elder sister resident in the town, in whose case a French education had resulted in marriage with a Roman Catholic, the brother of a school friend; and this sister was appealed to in vain to prevent the further exposure of her young charge to an influence which had proved so disastrous to others. The only result of a painful interview was the disclosure that she herself had and had actually given directions for her sister to accompany the French pupils to the Roman Catholic church—the excuse being that there was no Protestant teacher to take the English girls, and it was not in accordance with French ideas of propriety that they should go unattended.

The offer of a seat with a lady of character and position was rejected, and the idea that there could be any danger of perversion treated with scorn. It was but too evident that, as is often the case, foreign education and mixed marriage had resulted in utter neglect of religious ordinances, and complete indifference.

Such is the plain truth of a recent glaring instance of parental neglect on the one hand, and unscrupulous breach of confidence on the other. We say of parental neglect, because no step was taken to place the girls under any Protestant oversight, or to empower anyone to interfere in their behalf; and we would earnestly urge upon parents, in every case of placing children abroad, to communicate with the British chaplain or some other resident minister, and authorise him to visit and instruct them, their regular attendance at a Reformed service being also insisted on. Difficulties are sure to be raised, and excuses made about the inconvenient hours of services and classes, but if parents are firm, and it is seen that they really regard their children's faith as a matter of importance, such hindrances vanish with surprising celerity.

It is no time for indifference. At the present moment the priests in some parts of France are straining every nerve to make converts from Protestantism; and every perversion is hailed with triumph and used as an encouragement to fresh endeavours. In the same town, within the last few days, a dying Frenchwoman belonging to the Reformed communion was re-baptized, and received the last sacraments, all in a single interview with a priest, who was introduced by an officious sister of mercy when she was too ill to make any protest. Happily she revived sufficiently to defeat their plot, by declaring in their presence to her own pastor that it was done against her will, and that she had lived and would die a Protestant.

RE-MARRIED TO HER HUSBAND,

Good old John Bunyan was never more mistaken than when he wrote of Giant Pope as impotent and decrepid. Powerless he is, thank God, against men's bodies; but souls are still his prey, and he watches for them, truly like a lion lurking in his den. The young, and ignorant, and unstable, are naturally the readiest victims; and we would fain hope that this warning may avail to save parents from the misery of finding too late that they have placed their children, defenceless, within his grasp.—Service for the King.

ONLY!

ONLY a mortal's powers,
Weak at their fullest strength;
Only a few, swift, flashing hours,
Short at their fullest length.

Only a page for the eye,
Only a word for the ear,
Only a smile, and by and by
Only a quiet tear.

Only one heart to give,
Only one voice to use;
Only one little life to live,
And only one to lose.

Poor is my best, and small:
How could I dare divide?
Surely my Lord shall have it all,
He shall not be denied.

All! for far more I owe
Than all I have to bring;
All! for my Saviour loves me so;
All! for I love my King.

All! for it is his own,
He gave the tiny store;
All! for it must be his alone;
All! for I have no more.

All! for the last and the least
He stoopeth to uplift;
The altar of my great High Priest
Shall sanctify my gift.

A PERPLEXING QUESTION.

SEVERAL correspondents have written to us with regard to the explanation recently given of 1 Cor. ix. 27. There is no reason why the force of the Greek word adokimos, rendered "castaway," and in the R.V. "rejected," should be called in question. Is not this done by one correspondent, who says: "The clause should be rendered should not be approved. This makes it plain that Paul was referring to his life or work, and not to the subject of his salvation."

Rev. A. F. Carey, vicar of Brixton, makes some very judicious remarks. He says: "I would suggest that it is the teaching of the New Testament that salvation is a gift, the only requisite on the repentant sinner's part being faith. That faith 'worketh by love,' and this 'work of faith and labour of love' God does not forget, but rewards variously according to the quality and amount of work done. The servant who has gained ten pounds will be rewarded by being set over ten cities, and so forth. Are not crowns always the reward of work—service after salvation—whether of suffering or of action? And was not Paul working after he had received salvation—working for the highest reward? See Philippians iii., where he associates this with his endeavour to live the highest Christian life. May we not believe that, in 1 Cor. ix., he had an eye to that reward which will be given to those for whom it is prepared of 'my Father in heaven,' namely, to sit on my right hand, or on my left hand, in my kingdom (comp. Rev. iii. 21)? Was he not exhorting the Corinthians to run for this incorruptible crown, and does he not say that he was "keeping under his body, &c., lest he should be adokimos—thought not worthy of the highest reward of the kingdom, getting, so to speak, third-class honours instead of double first?"

MR. J. S. HARRISON (from Australia) has completed a twelve days' mission at the chapel, Little Wild-street, St. Giles. Many old and young professed to find peace by faith in Christ. The services were made specially attractive by the sweet singing of Mrs. Harrison. The evangelists are now holding a mission at Mr. Charrington's Great Assembly Hall, Mile-end.

The Book World.

RITUALISM, ROMANISM, AND THE NEW TESTAENT. By Rev. James Cargin. Londonderry: ible and Colportage Society. A series of ten disourses, not simply exposing the errors specified, ut in vigorous advocacy of the Presbyterian order f Church worship and government. Local cirumstances drew forth the sermons, which have een published in compliance with the request of any who heard them.

MEMORIALS OF ALEXANDER DUFF, D.D. By is son, W. Pirie Duff. 2s. 6d. Nisbet. During is last illness, in 1878, Dr. Duff dictated to his son any facts regarding his life and work. The notebook containing these facts was unfortunately islaid, and not found until quite recently. This olume presents, with but slight editing, these emorials, along with some hitherto unpublished tters. To the admirers of the great missionary nd the friends of foreign mission work, the ages will have a peculiar interest.

CHURCH AND STATE: A Historical Handbook. y A. Taylor Innes, Advocate. 3s. Edinburgh: . & T. Clark. Another volume of the excellent Handbooks for Bible-classes" series. It deals ith the varied relations which have all down the enturies subsisted between the Church and the tate—their points of contact, collision, junction, nd intersection. The subject is a vast one, but, acing it chronologically rather than theoretically, the author has produced a book which is minently readable as well as full of interest. Whether recording persecution of the Church by he civil authorities, or State patronage of religion different forms and degrees, the book is always lear and pointed.

THE GOSPEL AND MODERN SUBSTITUTES. By ev. A. Scott Matheson, Dumbarton. 5s. Olihant, Anderson & Ferrier. The object of this book to bring out the inexhaustible fulness of the Gospel of Christ, as compared with modern creeds hat contest its supremacy, and claim to supersede . Agnosticism, Science, Positivism, Socialism, essimism, and Art are among the subjects discussed, always with singular ability. The author's ethod is not to take up strong negative ground on he one hand, or strong aggressive ground on the ther, but to show how Christianity contains the est of all the systems which are to-day challenging ttention. In our judgment the substitutes of the Gospel deserve a treatment less tender than they eceive in these eloquent pages. Nevertheless, any will read the book with profit and interest.

THE JEWS UNDER ROMAN RULE. By W. D. Morrison. 5s. T. Fisher Unwin. The "Story of he Nations" series would have been very incomlete if this well-defined and important chapter of ational life had not been thrown in. The epoch overs a period of about 300 years (B.C. 164 to .D. 135), and has an intimate bearing upon the inistry of Christ and the founding of the Christian Church. The relations which existed between he Jews and the Romans are well set forth, and here is a lucid survey of Israelitish culture and ociety, not only in the Holy Land, but in the ther provinces of the Empire where communities f Jews had settled. The volume supplies a ind of framework for the ineffable New Testaent story, and deserves commendation. It is omprehensive and succinct, and embellished with any illustrations.

"THE CHRISTIAN" BIBLE READINGS: THE IVE BOOKS OF MOSES. Tinted covers, 1s.; cloth imp, 1s. 6d.; bevelled boards, gilt edges, 2s. 6d. Morgan & Scott. The Bible-readings which appear n our pages are on a plan which many have found ery useful, as letters from readers variously circumstanced at home and abroad have made abundantly evident. Numerous inquiries for these helpul notes and readings in handy book form find a esponse in the publication now before us, which overs the books of Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, and Deuteronomy. Having undergone careful revision and extension so as to serve a ermanent purpose, the chapters will be found instructive by Bible students in general, while to uch as are engaged in teaching, the book will ssuredly have special attractions as a repertory of ractical and pointed comment upon the inspired Word. Open for reference as the Bible is read, his volume will, it is devoutly hoped, perform a lessed ministry. To those who have but few ooks, the index will prove of service as a guide to nowledge in regard to many questions bearing on uman redemption, and its ever interesting story.

ISAAC AND JACOB: THEIR LIVES AND TIMES.—By Canon Rawlinson. 2s. 6d. Nisbet. A valuable addition to the "Men of the Bible" series. The pages bear evidence of wide reading, as well as much independent thought. The volume is very profitable reading, and will prove a substantial help in the study of the book of Genesis.

LEFT ALONE WITH JESUS; and other poems. By Eva Travers Evered Poole. The cordial reception of Mrs. Poole's previous volume of poems, entitled, "Lonely? No! Not lonely!" has encouraged her to publish this second collection. They are marked by the freshness of thought and beauty of expression which characterise all her poems, and more than this, by an evangelical fervour and an apprehension of the truth in Jesus which give to her compositions the value of Scriptural expositions. (1s. 6d. J. Nisbet & Co.)

THE YOUNG MAN'S TEXT BOOK AND BIRTHDAY CALENDAR. With an Introduction by Mr. George Williams. Fathers, mothers, sisters, or brothers, wishing to make a birthday present to young men, should not overlook this book of daily morsels from God's Word. Small in size, and to be had in various bindings (1s., 1s. 6d., and 2s. 6d.), it is a specially appropriate gift with which to emphasise a parting blessing. Copies may be had from Mr. W. FROM GEORGE CAULDWELL, OLD BAILEY.

CALLED TO BE CONQUERORS; or, Stella Adair's Faith, by Maggie Fearn (2s.), is an excellent story, full of teaching for impatient young (or old) people. THORNS AND ROSES, by Elizabeth J. Lysaght (3s. 6d.) tells of the ups and downs of a family, and is interesting from first to last. It is pleasant, wholesome reading. MISCHIEVOUS MONCTON, by Evelyn Everett Green (2s. 6d.), is a splendid book for boys, and the girls will be sure to like it, while the grown-ups will delight in the real children, the excellently portrayed parents, and the practical lessons the book teaches. THE KING'S DIADEM, by Annie Gray (2s.). It will be long before we read a more helpful story than this. Service for God is made an everyday thing and a beautiful thing. MONICA'S STORY, by Edith C. Kenyon (2s.). This writer's books are always good. Everyday girls who want to know how to live for Christ and to serve Him will be encouraged by Monica to take the step which she found brought life, peace, and happiness to her. ADOLPHUS ETHERTON, by P. A. Blyth (1s.). Boys ought to read this story; though it closes sadly, it will have served a good end if it warn young people from the precipice over which Adolphus fell. A DANGEROUS FRIEND, by Emma Leslie (1s.) is just the book needed in these betting days to put into the hands of office and shop boys; yes, and of schoolboys too.

Messrs. J. F. Shaw & Co. have added to their "Home Series" (6d.) THE TOWN STRIKE, OR TOO DEARLY BOUGHT, by Agnes Giberne; and DICKIE'S ATTIC, by Catharine Shaw.

TOTAL ABSTINENCE AND THE BIBLE. By Rev. G. S. Streatfeild. 2d. National Temperance Publication Depôt. An admirably reasoned tract, showing that the principles of vital Christianity distinctly prompt us to abstain from intoxicating drinks, and urge the same course upon others.

THE LORD'S PRAYER. Oh the wealth of the prayer which our blessed Lord taught his disciples! Here it is viewed and suggested as a special prayer for Christian workers, by Rev. R. G. W. Tucker, rector of Ashmanhaugh. The little book deserves a wide circle of readers. (3d. W. Hunt & Co.)

NEW HOLIDAYS IN ESSEX. Edited by Percy Lindley. 6d. London: 125, Fleet-street. A well illustrated book, with map. It gives rail and walking routes, with notes on boating, fishing, and shooting.

THE DEPTHS OF SATAN is the title of Part v. of William Ramsay's very instructive work on Spiritualism, edited, with additions, by H. L. Hastings, for the Anti-Infidel Library. Every page should act as a warning to those who have fallen victims to spiritualistic delusions. (3d. Marshall Brothers.)

A LIFE STORY. By Rev. Frederick Whitfield, M.A., Hastings. 2d. Nisbet. This is no anecdote, as the title might suggest, but a telling discourse on the second birth, and the life of which it marks the beginning. Of necessity, the story of Nicodemus is included. This booklet deserves a wide circulation, for it is calculated to shed light upon darkened souls.

THE LORD'S HARVEST; or, Prayer and its Answer, in connection with Missionary Effort and Success. By Rev. Charles Bullock, B.D. 1d. "Home Words" Office. Sound and earnest words on a subject of perennial interest. Mr. Bullock well corrects the mistaken impression of some that an unwilling God has to be moved in prayer regarding Christian work.

THE OLD TESTAMENT: ITS PLACE AND AUTHORITY IN THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH. By Rev. A. F. Simpson, M.A., Professor of Bible Languages and Exegesis in the Theological Hall of the Scottish Congregational Churches. 3d. Edinburgh: Andrew Elliott. Just what was wanted. A brief statement of the warrant of our faith in the Old Testament. The language is plain, and the reasoning always cogent.

HOW TO CLOSE WITH CHRIST. In the words of the writer, "To close with Christ, is to accept his offer of salvation upon his own terms" (p. 17). Different classes of unsaved Christian professors are addressed, and urgently exhorted to receive Christ Himself, and be obedient to the faith. This penny Gospel booklet is valuable for this day of nominal Christianity, and is worthy of a large circulation. 30s. per 1000. Drummond's Tract Depôt, Stirling.

HOW OUR FREEDOM WAS WON: A Survey of the Epistle to the Galatians, and an Argument for to-day derived therefrom. By Joseph B. Rotherham. 2d. Elliot Stock. The author regards the freedom for which the Apostle contended in this light:—"It was a liberty to do as well as not to do, to keep as well as not to keep, to circumcise as well as not to circumcise, to take a vow as well as not to take it, to observe a day as well as not to observe it." In a word, the freedom was not a new bondage. The subject is ably presented, and very important lessons as to present-day Christian duty are enforced.

MISS MARSH, we are glad to learn, has regained her sight, but she has since been extremely ill, and is still an invalid at Wiesbaden.

MISS OWEN, of the Unsectarian Mission, Seacombe, Cheshire, was married to Mr. C. A. Hall (evangelist), Southport, on April 26. The Mission is still going on, and God's blessing continues to rest upon it.

NEW SURREY CHAPEL.—We are exceedingly glad to learn that the work here is making encouraging progress. Under the railway arch in Charlotte-street open-air services are held, at which several have heard the word, and believed to the saving of their souls. The young men's Bible-class in connection with the Sunday-school is increasing in numbers, and temperance work is being pushed forward in a spirit deserving of all praise. The young people's Mission is an effort upon which the seal of the Divine blessing has evidently been placed. Rev. B. Senior, the superintendent minister, has his hands full of work.

SWEDEN.—Madame E. de Ramsey, of Wilhelmsro, Sweden, is at present in England. We rejoice to learn that her labour for the Lord continues to be much blessed. In a recent letter she said:—"God has continued to use us for the poor and suffering children of Sweden. Our Epileptic Home progresses; thirteen children have been taken in, but one has died of diphtheria, which has of late years been deeply rooting itself in our country. May God arrest the course of this formidable malady. My idea is to have a number of Homes, grouping the cases according to age and degrees of illness. I intend placing the whole of the institutions under the Central Committee already formed in Stockholm. I have formed in several places Protection of Children Committees, to whom anybody may turn who knows of a destitute child, and which will exert itself to see that afflicted children are properly cared for. Thus the Eugenia Home was originated. I hope some other member of the Royal family will come forward for the epileptics as the Princess, whose death we all lament, did for the crippled and diseased, when, after eight years of blessed efforts at Wilhelmsro, I found that a private person could not keep up a Home for all Sweden."

Letters to the Editor.

THE DODS-BRUCE CASES.

SIR,—A Free Churchman, dating from Glasgow, expresses astonishment that I should describe the decision in the Dods-Bruce Case as "satisfactory." I may say, in reply: (1) that to myself the issue seemed decidedly satisfactory on account of the plain and strong affirmation of four important doctrines, and the serious rebuke given to unguarded criticism; and (2) that I had heard many on both sides express thankfulness for a decision which, while fully conserving the truth, would allow all to return to the active and earnest pursuit of their Christian work. Of course, I did not mean, nor say, that the finding was satisfactory to everybody.—Faithfully yours, YOUR CORRESPONDENT.

June 21.

"DRUNK, BUT NOT WITH WINE."

SIR,—I have read with peculiar interest the letter in your issue of the 13th, headed as above, and signed by "R."

Having of recent years laid aside an active political life, consequent upon strong convictions that the Christian who would be loyal to Christ must act literally on the injunction, "The servant of the Lord must not strive," permit me to urge some few reasons why every professed Christian should steadfastly hold aloof from the strifes and entanglements of political partizanship.

Like most Nonconformists, from my very early years, I was taught that it was a Christian duty to struggle for political rights and liberties. As an illustration of this strong sense of religious obligation, let me refer to the fact that, in the early days of the Disestablishment movement, its meetings were essentially of a religious character, generally opened and closed with prayer. Its leaders then had a true sense of the spiritual nature of the Church, and the protest was against the alliance of the secular power with that which should alone recognise the Headship of Christ.

As, however, the years rolled on, the movement became more and more secularised and political, and the felt necessity of appealing to "the masses" I know has brought about just that condition of things your correspondent "R." so rightly protests against. To gain success the Christian must work hand and glove, not only with men who are absolutely Godless, but with avowed secularists and atheists; furthermore, to avoid offence to political allies, he must shut his eyes to many things his Christian conscience must condemn.

Take again the teetotal movement; there the same sort of evolution is going on. In the course of my political experience it came to my knowledge that some were total abstainers from anti-Christian and "Malthusian" views, and yet the "Gospel temperance" man joins with these, and Protestant with Romanist, to gain a political end. I know that in the recent great "Demonstration" were members of political clubs whose financial prosperity is built upon the consumption of beer.

Now the sincere Christian will not only find himself in political alliance with those who are without any Christian principle at all, but his own earnestness will blind him to the fact that his aims and theirs are totally distinct. Dead to all spiritual impulses, they care only for some material gain; and, while he fondly dreams of "elevating" them, he will find ere long, to his dismay, that he has only helped to put into political power a Godless Democracy!

I fear to trespass on your space, but it is a large subject, and of the utmost practical importance to every professed disciple. Let me say, however, as briefly as possible, that in laying down political warfare I have not changed one iota in sympathy for my fellow-men, or in my earnest desires for their "salvation" in every sense; but I see now that the wisest and best of statesmen will be powerless to deal with the tremendous problems which demand solution.

In a deeper sense I read the words, "There is no other name given under heaven amongst men whereby we must be saved," than that of Jesus Christ.

Obedience is our first duty to Him; and most clearly to us is forbidden alike the strife and the entanglement inevitable from political partizanship.

[592]

The Apostle James, distinctly referring to the wrongs of the latter days, which need redress, counsels, "Be patient therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord." Therein is our hope, and the Christian who forsakes it, to place his hope in the fickle multitude, will find all too late that he has sold his birthright for a mess of pottage.—Yours faithfully, EBENEZER DAVIS.

QUESTIONS RE CONVENTIONS.

DEAR SIR,—I have been at more than one of the Conventions on the Higher Life. I have witnessed deep impressions produced, and have had earnest testimony afterwards of the resulting benefit. On one or two points, however, I confess I feel that testimony is wanting. I do not know that I can better indicate them than by putting the following questions. In doing so, I trust none of my Christian brethren will suspect a captious spirit. I honestly desire information.

I should like to know what has been the experience of those who have longest sought the attainment of a Higher Life, in the matter of humility. Have they found that Christian grace in stronger growth? Perhaps I may better bring out what I desire by quoting—I am sorry to say only from a vague recollection—the words of John Newton. I have been searching "Cardiphonia" for them, but cannot find them, else I should give the ipsissima verba. Perhaps you, or some of your readers, could supply them. They are to this effect: "When I first knew the Lord, and had made some little attainment, as I hoped, in the divine life, I thought, if my days should be prolonged, that I should die rich—rich in every Christian grace. But I have found it far otherwise. The longer I live I seem to grow poorer and poorer, and when I enter heaven it will be as the chief of sinners." Now, without expressing any opinion on this experience of Newton's, I should like to know, merely as matter of information, how far it agrees with, or differs from, that of friends who are rejoicing in the experience of the Higher Life.

Another inquiry. Unless I have been careless in my observation, it would seem that the experience for which such thankfulness is due is mostly in the direction of freedom from positive sin, and delight in actual holiness. There are fewer causes for the confession—"we have done those things which we ought not to have done." Again, I ask for information: What is the experience regarding the other confession, "We have left undone the things we ought to have done"? I may be wrong, but I do not think I have seen statements leading one to conclude that the causes for this confession are also fewer. In other words, does the victory over sin include the better fulfilment of duties to our fellowmen formerly neglected? Are sins of omission as much fewer than before as are sins of commission?

One more inquiry I introduce by a remark I heard from M. Monod at the Brighton Conference, in 1875. Referring to the expression "the Higher Life," he said—again I quote from memory—"I would rather hear others speak of 'their higher life,' meaning by that our higher life, than that we should speak of it ourselves. When we are walking on the Parade here [Brighton], it never occurs to us to say, 'We are high here; much higher than those people below on the sands.' But it is quite natural that they should say, looking up to us, 'How high these people are walking above us?' Brethren, is that the testimony of the world and of our fellow Christians regarding us?" Again, I am sorry I have not the ipsisima verba, which were very striking.

I would ask in no captious spirit, but again for information: What is the outside testimony regarding the advance in holiness of those who have had the experience of the Higher Life? There was an able paper lately in a widely circulated periodical, on the confounding a consciousness of sanctification with sanctification itself. Of course the testimony to the former can be internal only; to the latter there ought to be external, in so far at least as sanctification is affecting the outward life.

I sometimes wonder: What would such men as M'Cheyne, or Martyn, or Baxter, say to the present development? Not one of them but would have spurned the idea of being held up as models, and neither would the present writer hold them up as such in every respect. But they were holy men of God; and one would like to know what they would think of the present movement.—Yours sincerely, SENEX.

ROMANISM.

DEAR SIR,—We are sorry to discontinue THE CHRISTIAN, but we see that it opposes Parliamentary measures for the more complete emancipation of the Roman Catholics. You appeal to history; it is a sad fact that the annals of the past reveal pages in the history of the Protestant Church also "written in blood"—of the banishment of Nonconformists, of burnings at the stake, and of the prisons of the land filled to overflowing, and the lingering death in the loathsome dungeon.

Also we see in the pages of THE CHRISTIAN a continued opposition to measures of justice for Ireland, lest Roman Catholics, if they were in power, might carry on the persecutions of former times.

Let us be just and fear not, and remember that in the early settlement of the States, Puritans, who had fled from persecution in England, became persecutors even unto death of the Quakers in New England, whilst the Roman Catholic majority in Maryland passed the following liberal and enlightened Act concerning religion in the General Assembly:—"The better to preserve mutual love and unity amongst the inhabitants, no person whatsoever within this province, professing to believe in Jesus Christ, shall be anyways troubled or molested for his religion, nor in the free exercise thereof, nor anyways compelled to the belief or exercise of any other religion against his consent."

We can see no good that will arise from the articles referred to in THE CHRISTIAN, which must stir up bitter feelings in members of the Roman Catholic Church, and have a very injurious influence upon your general readers.

Yours sincerely,
(MRS.) M. G. T. CARR.

THE KESWICK CONVENTION.

DEAR SIR,—Will you now kindly permit me to inform a large number of correspondents and your readers that a most suitable plot of ground has been secured at Keswick, close to the Convention tents, for the erection of the "Chautauqua Camp." Early application for tents from young men in England, Scotland, or Ireland, is absolutely essential.—Yours faithfully,

*HELPED AND FORGIVEN.

BY MRS. EVERED POOLE.

"HELPED and forgiven!" Motto God-given,
Bringing us brightness throughout the new year,
What though the past be with darkness o'ercast,
If in the future no storm cloud appear?

"Helped and forgiven!" Earth-storms have striven
Vainly to loosen our hold on his love;
Clasp we yet tighter, hope that grows brighter,
Knowing that nothing our souls can remove.

"Helped and forgiven!" Closer are riven
Love chains that link us more sweetly to Christ.
Faith sees Him nearer; love holds Him dearer;
Hope hastens forward to meet Him in tryst.

"Helped and forgiven!" To thee be it given
Light for the future and words of good cheer.
That God may guide thee, all good provide thee,
That is my prayer for thee through the new year.

SUNDAY, JUNE 29.—Psalm LI.

THERE is no doubt as to the occasion or authorship of this Psalm. It abounds with references to 2 Sam. xi. and xii. It is remarkable that such a confession should have been handed to the chief musician, but surely the publicity thus given to it has been a means of grace to all earnest worshippers in every age of the world. As public as the sin was the repentance; and many a sin-stained penitent has trodden these well-worn steps, which bear the marks of pilgrims of all nations and lands.

What a story it is! "This saint of nearly fifty years of age, bound to God by ties which he rapturously felt and acknowledged, whose words have been the very breath of devotion for every devout heart, forgets his longings after righteousness, flings away the joys of Divine communion, darkens his soul, ends his prosperity, brings down upon his head for all his remaining years a cataract of calamities, and makes his name and his religion a target for the barbed sarcasms of each succeeding generation of scoffers. As man, as king, as soldier, he is found wanting. Why should we dwell on the wretched story, except that it teaches, as no other page in the history of God's Church does, that the alchemy of Divine love can extract sweet perfumes of penitence and praise out of the filth of sin?"

1. Our only plea for forgiveness is in God's lovingkindness, and in the multitude of his tender mercies. It is only as we believe in these that we dare look at our sins. Nor can we ever forget that though the blood of Jesus did not purchase the love and mercy of God, yet it is only through his oblation and sacrifice that that love is able to have free scope in pursuing its tender office of redemption.

2. The plural transgressions is here replaced by the singular sin, because all the successive crimes which had accumulated about his soul were branches from a common trunk. Mark these successive names: transgression, the violation of law; iniquity, crookedness from the straight line of rectitude; sin, missing the mark.

3. However much God loves the penitent, and desires to forgive him, He dares not do it until distinct confession has been made. Till then sin is like the fabled spirit of a murdered and unburied corpse—it is ever before the eye of the soul.

4. Every sin against man is more so against God.

5. This was not said to extenuate, but to show how inveterate was the evil, needing infinite help and love.

7. How many are the expressions employed. Blot out, as from a record. Wash, as foul stains which must be rubbed and beaten out. Cleanse, as a leper, for whom the sprig of hyssop was always used (Lev. xiv. 4-9).

8. How gloriously bold to ask for restoration to joy (12). Let us claim it ever.

10-12. This is what we need to guard against future outbreaks—a constant spirit, God's Holy Spirit, and a willing spirit.

13. There is no such preacher as the newly forgiven one. The forgiven Peter was the appointed preacher at Pentecost.

15. When God opens the lips, the devil and fear cannot shut them.

17. Ceremonialism cannot free us from taint (Heb. ix. 9-16).

18-19. When we are right with God, our sympathies and prayers overflow the narrow confines of selfish interest, and pour themselves out for the entire Church.

MONDAY, JUNE 30.—Psalm LII.

The superscription fixes the occasion on which this Psalm was composed (1 Sam. xxii.). It was at first occasioned by Doeg's treachery, but it also has respect to Saul himself, to whom alone many of the allusions of the Psalm are applicable. And in after days this Psalm of the exile was given to the chief musician for public use, because it contains, under the husk of a passing circumstance, the kernel of eternal truth.

1-4. The traitor's sin.—How safe are those who are entrenched in the favour of God. All else may pass, but that remains indestructibly the same. What terrible power there is in the tongue! (Jas. iv.) A sharp razor, working deceitfully, will probably injure the hand that holds it.

5, 6, 7. The traitor's fate.—"Shall take thee away," is literally "shall pluck thee out as a glowing ember from the hearth." There is also next the idea of uprooting as a bramble weed. This is the inevitable doom of sin. And one cannot but rejoice that the world has been so ordered as that wickedness meets its reward even here. The seventh verse contains the reflections of the righteous.

8. Contrast to the traitor's end.—It is thought by some that Nob, where the tragedy took place, was situated on the Mount of Olives. If so, this allusion would be very appropriate. "As the olives grew all around the humble forest sanctuary, and were in some sort hallowed by the shrine which they encompassed, so the soul grows and is safe in loving fellowship with God." What a contrast between trusting in the abundance of riches and in the mercy of God. The former take to themselves wings, the latter is for ever (1). Oh to be among God's evergreens, drawing up our supplies by roots struck deep down into Him, and trusting Him whate'er betide.

9. The Psalmist's soul sings itself clear, and he determines to entrust his cause to God, and await patiently his vindication.

TUESDAY, JULY 1.—Psalm LIII.

A revision of xiv. Twice is atheism denounced in the Psalter. Line must be on line, precept on precept. Mahalath is sickness; does not this Psalm lay bare the hereditary taint of the heart of man to forsake God? In xiv. Elohim is thrice used, Jehovah four times: here, Elohim is used throughout; v. 1, abominable iniquity for works; v. 3, gone back for gone aside; v. 5, God hath scattered, &c., for God is in the generation of the righteous. As if every effort were made to find more forcible expressions to describe the sin and the doom of those who deny God.

1. The seat of atheism.—It is not in the head, but in the heart. And men keep on boasting it, in the hope of making themselves believe it, and to keep their courage up.

2. The attitude of atheism.—Its eyes are downward; if they were lifted for a moment, they would see God looking down.

3. The universality of practical atheism.—Let each beware (Heb. iii. 13).

2 and 3. The evil effects of atheism.—On the understanding and affection, so that corruption is bred through the entire nature (Rom. iii. 10-17).

4. The cruelty of atheism.—He who has no care for God is not likely to have much care for man. The prayerless man is an atheist in heart: "He calls not upon God."

5. The causeless fears of atheism.—How often have the enemies of God been seized with inexplicable panic (Prov. xxviii. 1; 2 Kings vii. 6).

6. The Divine answer to the atheist.—Even now the existence of God's ancient people is a marvellous reply to the taunts of his foes, but how dumb and silenced they will be when they see them restored as a nation, and when the saints shall possess the earth! This is a prayer which befits every instance of depressed spiritual life.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 2.—Psalm LIV.

We are led by the superscription to 1 Sam. xxiii. 19. It is short, as if compressed by the intensity of David's need. 1-3 contain a prayer for deliverance, 4-7 contain expressions of confidence and praise. In the first he invokes the name of God, in the second extols it. His trust throughout is in El, the Strong.

The Ziphites are described as strangers (3), though men of Judah like himself, because they were possessed of a spirit so contrary and alien to his own. It is rather beautiful to see how David refuses to say all the hard things which he might have said about Saul, and deals with those who enticed him into evil courses, as though he would cloke the sins of the Lord's anointed king.

1. A lonely, persecuted man, who has no other help, appeals from man to God, conscious of the rectitude of his cause.

3. Not to have God before our eyes is to have them full of self-estimate, or of measurements of the standards of other men, uncorrected by thoughts of the claims of his Holiness, Power, and Purity.

4. Lo! What faith is here! Hardly had the prayer ascended than the soul is aware of the gracious answer. Note this present tense, "God is mine helper." The eye sees nothing, but faith knows that the mountain is full of horses and chariots of fire. "Saul sought him every day, but but God delivered him not into his hand." "The Lord is on my side" (Rom. viii. 31).

6. "With willinghood will I sacrifice"; or, "with free-will gift" (Exod. xxv. 2; xxxv. 29). When God has saved us, let us yield Him ourselves, as Mary her alabaster-box.

7. When we pray in faith, we have the petition which we asked (1 John iv. 15). And when our enemies are punished we have no feeling of vindictive satisfaction, but are thankful that God has vindicated his Name and Truth.

THURSDAY, JULY 3.—Psalm LV.

The groundwork of this Psalm was suggested by Absalom's rebellion and Ahithophel's treachery (2 Sam. xv. 12). But the Spirit leads out the Psalmist beyond the immediate occasion to depict the sufferings of our Lord at the hand of Judas. And the whole Church has fellowship with those sufferings in the days of treacherous foes and false friends.

It may be divided thus: 1, Introduction; 2-8, A description of his desperate need; 9-11, The sin of the city; 12-15, 19-21, A particularisation of the plottings and deceit of a former friend; 16-18, Expressions of trust in God; 22, 23, Exhortations to others founded on personal experience.

4, 5. How aptly do these words describe those deeply convicted of sin.

6. The dove is swift in its flight, and it ever hides before a storm. What a picture of timid innocence! How often do we suppose that we should find rest in changed circumstances? But the restless heart would be restless everywhere. The words of Jesus are the true answer to this cry for rest (Matt. xi. 28, and Heb. iv. 3).

12. Our Lord, who bore his other sorrows in silence, exclaimed against the treachery of Judas, as if this were the drop which made his cup overflow.

15. Quick, i.e., alive, like Korah (Numb. xvi.). Very different was the spirit of the old dispensation to Christ's (Matt. v. 43; xxvi. 50; Luke xxiii. 34).

17. Referring to the habit of the pious Jew (Dan. vi. 10). If we need to eat for physical strength thrice each day, do we not need to pray as often? But though we have our fixed times, no time is unreasonable. God's courts of appeal never rise, or close their doors.

22. Thy burden, as the margin suggests, is that which God has given thee to carry. "He cast it on thee, now cast it back on Him." We cannot do his work in the world, so long as we stoop under burdens which impede our energies; therefore hand over all, and let no burden be brought into the inner city to disturb its Sabbath-keeping (Neh. xiii. 19).

FRIDAY, JULY 4.—Psalm LVI.

This Psalm was composed under the same circumstances as xxxiv. Pursued by Saul, and almost in despair, David crossed the frontier, and took refuge in the city of Goliath. He was soon recognised, and resorted to the subterfuge of feigning himself mad (1 Sam. xxi.). All the time he was acting thus, his soul seems to have been directing its eyes towards God. His faith was not strong enough to keep him from an unworthy disguise, but it was there. What a strange medley are we all at the best. Feigning madness in terror, and compiling psalms in heroic trust.

The Psalm falls into three strophes; 1-4; 5-11; and 12, 13. The earlier part of each of the two former describes his danger, and the latter part in each case closes with a similar refrain.

The title is very touching, as the margin puts it, and perhaps there is a reference to Ps. lv. 6.

3. We are reminded of 1 Sam. xxi. 12. It is better to say with Isaiah, "I will trust, and not be afraid" (xii. 2). See also 4 and 11.

4. Here for a moment he seems to have climbed out of the shadowed valley of fear to a mountain summit, sunlit. But in the next verse he is hurled back again. Oh to live outside one's experiences in the unchanging Person and work of Christ. All praise and trust must be in Him.

8. No tear of the child of God falls unnoticed and forgotten. Remember how the sinner's tears were precious to the Master, whose feet they laved. As rainbows are made of drops of water, so does God keep our tears to transmute into songs. You will meet your tears again (Isa. lxi. 7; Rev. iv. 3).

12. It is a solemn thing to make a vow, and the consecrated soul must needs walk warily, trusting in the Holy Spirit, to enable it to realise it in daily living.

13. Here is a plea for those who have been saved from the penalty of sin, that their feet may be kept from falling. Oh to walk before God so as to please Him! (Gen. xvii. 1-18; Ps. xxxvi. 9).

SATURDAY, JULY 5.—Psalm LVII.

This is one of the choicest of the Psalms. It is dated from Adullam or Engedi. The resemblances to vii. probably point to the latter. The Psalm falls into two parts, each of which closes with a similar refrain.

1. As the hills were his refuge from Saul, so was God the cave of refuge for his soul—being a safe hiding-place for us all. Is there not here also a reminiscence of words once spoken to the heart of his ancestress, the Moabite maiden? (Ruth ii. 12, and Deut. xxxii. 11). God's care is like an eagle's wing for strength, and like a hen's for gentleness (Matt. xxiii. 37).

2. Why should we not let God do all things for us and through us? (Heb. xiii. 21).

3. A dark parenthesis between two brackets of gold.

4. Delitzsch says that here, the fugitive among those rocky fastnesses prepares himself for his night's rest, and he hears the growl of the beasts of prey from which his refuge delivers him; so does God save him from his foes.

5. Let us sometimes rise above our personal griefs in passionate desire for God's glory.

7. The steadfast and prepared heart is always a condition of holy song. May God keep us fixed.

8, 9. If the earlier verses marked his thoughts at eventide, here is his morning's resolution. Glory stands for soul. He who lies down to sleep among lions shall yet arise to praise, and to set others praising.

10. Mercy and Truth had come, as he expected (3). And, as he closes, he magnifies Him who from above heaven had lifted him to heaven.

Sunday Afternoon, July 6.

LAWFUL WORK ON THE SABBATH.

LUKE xiii. 10—17.

GOLDEN TEXT: MATT. xii. 12.

THE time and place where this miracle occurred are uncertain. It was probably in some part of Galilee, and during our Lord's final journey to Jerusalem. We are again reminded of our Lord's way of spending the Sabbath (10). He was in his Father's house, and engaged in his Father's work. There is no better method of spending the Lord's Day now. A miracle followed, and authenticated his teaching. His works proved Him to be a teacher come from God (John iii. 2).

The afflicted woman (11).—Of the woman nothing is known but what is related here. "Daughter of Abraham" (16)—a descendant of Abraham after the flesh—a Jew; and probably a devout, believing woman, so one of the seed of Abraham in a spiritual sense (Rom. iv. 12-13; Gal. iii. 9). In the best sense of the word every scholar may be a child of Abraham. Her piety appears from her presence in the Synagogue. It was certainly not the sympathy of the Ruler of the Synagogue (14) that drew her there. Some scholars refuse to come to school because they don't like the teacher. This woman valued the reading of the Scripture, and came for that. Her affliction was of very long duration (11), Jesus knew how long (16). How fully He knows us all, even though we have no thought of Him. She seems to have been bent double, unable to lift up herself (11). Jesus speaks of it as the work of Satan (16), not that it was a case of demoniacal possession. All sickness is the result of sin, and may therefore be called the work of Satan; but there are cases where his agency appears more prominent (see Job ii. 6, 7; 2 Cor. xii. 7; Acts x. 38).

All this illustrates the bondage of the soul to sin. Soul bondage is more guilty, for men willingly submit to it; it renders the soul as helpless, destroying uprightness of character, and it is bondage from which no one can deliver himself. Yet even that condition does not keep us from the house of God, where the Great Deliverer may meet with us.

The miracle (12-13).—Jesus saw her... Was never unwilling to look on suffering. Our helplessness to relieve makes us drink; but there was none too severe for Him to help. His look always meant sympathy (Exod. iii. 7). He did not wait to be entreated. Perhaps her bent condition of body prevented her knowing that He was present. His commanding voice (12) was followed by his strengthening touch (13), and the healing was immediate. Satan had met his Conqueror. The strong man armed was dispossessed by One stronger than he (xi. 21-22).

This is just a picture of the work He still does. He was manifested that "He might destroy the works of the devil" (1 John iii. 8). He can remove the burdens that bow down the soul (Matt. xi. 28), which even young people often feel; and can break the fetters of sin and evil habit which are too strong for us. For such work He was anointed (iv. 18).

The contention (14-17).—The ruler's indignation was as cowardly as it was hypocritical. It was prompted, not by his sense of the sanctity of the Sabbath, but by his envy and malice towards Jesus. Sin is never so hateful to the Lord as when it masks itself under an assumption of sanctity. But he had not the candour nor the courage to make his complaint to Jesus; he addressed himself "to the people" (14). Though his indignation was so hypocritical, useful lessons underlie it. He witnesses to the power of Jesus. There is no attempt to deny the miracle. Such a testimony from an enemy is valuable. He proves that even admitted miracles will not convince some men. What he wanted was not greater light, but the disposition to use the light he had. Nothing will convince the heart if the testimony of God's word is rejected (xvi. 31).

The people did not—perhaps dared not—answer for themselves. But Jesus, whose deed of mercy and power had provoked the ruler's indignant protest, undertook to reply. The term "hypocrite" (15) faithfully describes the ruler's character; while the illustration of the ox showed that even the ruler would tolerate a more serious breach of the Sabbath tradition for the sake of an ox that was his own, than he would allow for the sake of a greater benefit to afflicted people. Selfishness, not sanctity, prompted his complaint. Note the contrasts Jesus suggests—a daughter of Abraham against an ox or ass; a terrible bondage of Satan, lasting for eighteen years against the beast's position in the stall; and the greater deliverance effected by a far less breach of Sabbath rest than would be required in loosing the beast from the stall.

The twofold effect of his reply was shame to his adversaries, and exultation among the people (17.)

LESSONS.

In the synagogue the ruler was as much bound by Satan in spirit as the woman was in body. Both needed the Saviour's power. One knew her need, and was willing to accept deliverance. In the class—the congregation—Jesus is still always present to deliver those who need and will accept deliverance.

Contrary effects of Jesus' presence and power. In the woman (13), and the people (17) praise; in the ruler (14) anger and indignation, ending in shame (17). One of these effects is produced in all; which, depends on their attitude towards Him.

No one can effect his own deliverance from sin. Jesus speaks it: we receive it through faith in his word.

Y.W.C.A. CONVALESCENT SICK-AID AND HOLIDAY DEPARTMENT.—During last year 636 young women were assisted in obtaining from two to six weeks' change. Many of them were members of the poorer branches of the Association, and had never before tasted more of the country than a Bank holiday outing affords. Friends are not only asked to support the department by subscribing to its funds, but also to co-operate by inviting parties of from ten to a hundred girls to spend Saturday afternoon or Bank holiday in some park or garden within easy reach of our great manufacturing cities. Communications should be sent to the hon. secretary, Miss F. M. Fraser, 30, Onslow-gardens, London, S.W.

MR. HELI CHATELAIN, who was for some time in connection with Bishop Taylor's African Mission, writes from St. Vincent, Cape Verde Islands, June 6, 1890:—I am sailing to-day straight for Philadelphia. I am bringing back with me material for several volumes on philology, ethnology, and geography. When I look back to the state of the minds in Angola four or three years ago, I am amazed at the change that has taken place. The hard soil is now softened and prepared for a glorious growth and development of the Gospel plant. When I left Loanda, the mission-house had altogether insufficient accommodation for the growing attendance of natives. The Government of Angola has bought, at a considerable reduction, one hundred copies of my grammar, which is appreciated by all. So I have not worked in vain, thank God.

HOME OF INDUSTRY.

THE usual gathering of Christian workers took place on Wednesday, June 18. After the social tea, Mr. Robert Paton took the chair. Mrs. ROBERTSON spoke of the work done through the Association for the Free Distribution of the Scriptures. There are 1000 millions of our race, she said, who have never had a copy of the Scriptures. Christ said, "I have given them thy word." Surely it is the duty of the Church to imitate the Lord in this matter. The population is increasing from 10 to 15 millions annually. The number of Bibles and Testaments issued annually by all the Bible Societies in the world does not reach 10 millions. The world can never be supplied with the Scriptures at this rate, but there are Christians enough in the world, and wealth enough in the Church to give God's Word to all men.

Mr. E. H. GLENNY, who has just returned from visiting the stations of the North Africa Mission, gave a cheering account of the work and of blessing experienced amid some discouragements. Miss MACPHERSON read a letter from Mrs. Baedeker, who wrote about her husband's visit to Russia, sounding a fresh note of praise, and asking prayer for blessing amongst the prisoners whom he is visiting. Miss Macpherson also alluded to a letter from Canada saying that two of the lads, who went out a few years ago, had just been accepted for mission work in China. Mr. VANTASSEL spoke briefly of God's work among the Arabs in North Arabia, where he has been living and working for three years.

A PLEA FOR FREE DISTRIBUTION.

Rev. J. WILKINSON, having spoken of Mrs. Robertson's important work in the circulation of the Scriptures, went on to plead for free distribution. We cannot expect people to pay for that in which they have no interest. If a man opened a shop in Bethnal Green to sell Korans, what sort of a trade would he do? He would soon have to shut up shop, for lack of custom. If we insist on selling the Scriptures, why not charge a fee for hearing the Gospel preached in mission halls? The principle is the same. Let the Scriptures be charged for in this country where people can afford to purchase them, but, where people cannot pay, give copies freely. Let the Jew buy the Old Testament if he can afford it, but give him a New Testament by all means. If he is willing let him buy, but let him in any case have the book. When it has got hold of him, he will spend his money and give it to others. A Rabbi in Russia recently said the New Testament that has been distributed was worse than missionaries. He called it smokeless powder. If you don't keep it out of the hands of the Jew, it will never leave him until it has brought him to the feet of the crucified Saviour. All God's blessings are given; nothing is charged for. God gives his Son; He gives the Holy Spirit; He gives eternal life. We must pass on his gift of the Word at the same price.

Just before the meeting a cablegram was received, saying the sixtieth party had reached Stratford, Ontario, all well.

WILTON HOUSE OF REST, ST. LEONARDS, affords accommodation for about thirty persons at one time. Close to the West Marina station of the South Coast and South-Eastern Railways, the house is within easy reach of London. The windows command magnificent views of the sea, and everything conspires to promote the rest and comfort of those who enjoy the advantages of the House. Workers in connection with all evangelical denominations are received at very moderate charges. The institution will not be self-supporting, however, until the property is free from a mortgage of about £2000, which still encumbers it.

THE EXPOSITOR'S BIBLE.*

IN one volume it is not possible to deal exhaustively with a book like the Gospel of Matthew. But Dr. Monro Gibson has succeeded in covering the ground, and has produced a most valuable addition to this important series. We can pay him no better compliment than by saying that the Gospel of Matthew itself becomes more interesting and intelligible when read with the aid of his exposition. He seems to have laid hold upon the connected order of this Gospel of the kingdom, and enables the reader to see more vividly the coming of the King, and the whole course of his life and teaching among the people until He was rejected in Galilee; the founding of the Church, and the preparations for its future work in the world; the apparent triumph of his foes, and his very real triumph over them, so that at the close, the King whom the Jewish nation rejected and cast out appears possessed of all power, and committing to his few followers the work of proclaiming all over the world the "Kingdom that cannot be moved." A fragmentary reading of this Gospel misses its true scope and purport. Dr. Gibson's book shows the importance of understanding the connection of the whole; and his book, like that it seeks to expound, can only be properly appreciated as it also is read through.

Happily, the book is so written that it is easier to continue the reading than to lay it down. It has all the worth, but none of the pedantry and conceit of advanced scholarship. It breathes a spirit devout and trustful, and full of adoring reverence for the King of whom it treats. It abounds with suggestive allusions to topics of present-day interest, and is written in a clear and forcible style. Not only to preachers and teachers, but to all devout Christian readers, the book will be a means of inspiration and blessing.

Where there is so much that is excellent, it is difficult to make selections. But we may refer especially to the Sermon on the Mount, which Dr. Gibson describes as "The Gospel of the Kingdom," and his exposition of which is the most thoughtful and practical we have read. It shows a beautiful connection of thought in the whole discourse; and gives increasing force to each part by showing its dependence on what precedes and follows. We cull a few suggestive passages from this chapter of the Doctor's book:—

"Salt suggests the conservative, light the liberal, side of the politics of the kingdom; but the two are not in opposition, they are in fullest harmony, the one being the complement of the other.... The metaphor (salt) suggests the sad fact that whatever tendency to upward development there may be in the world of nature, there is a contrary tendency in the world of men, so far as character is concerned. The world has often made great advances in civilisation; but these, unless counteracted by forces from above, have always been accompanied by a degeneracy in morals, which in course of time has brought about the ruin of mighty States" (p. 63).

"Morality divorced from religion is a flower without a root, which may bloom for a while, but in the end must whither away; religion without morality is—nothing at all; worse than nothing, for it is a sham" (p. 79).

"The straitness referred to is not outward, any more than the righteousness is; so that there is no encouragement given to self-imposed restrictions and limitations, as in the monastic vows of 'poverty, chastity, and obedience.' The way is strait enough in inself, without any efforts of ours to make it straiter" (p. 98).

In the course of his exposition, Dr. Gibson finds opportunity for rebuking the proud spirit of this age for its supercilious contempt of miracles (p. 108); he exposes the folly of Ritualism (p. 125); defends and defines the present obligation of the Sabbath (p. 162); reproves the folly of Mariolatry, which puts "the mother in place of the Son" (p. 170); shows how unworthy is the sectarian spirit (p. 171); and denounces the Papacy as a distinct violation, not only of the spirit, but even of the letter of the Saviour's words, "Call no man your father upon the earth" (p. 332). Upon the eternal punishment of the wicked he speaks reverently and wisely. "There is," he says, "no possible way of reducing the force of the word 'eternal' which will bring the awfulness of the doom within the bounds of the finite imagination; ...there is not the slightest suggestion of hope in the words; no straining of the eyes can discern even the straitest gate out of that eternal punishment into eternal life" (p. 374).

There is no uncertain sound on the subject of the atonement when Dr. Gibson deals with the agony in the garden (p. 401), and with the three hours darkness on the Cross (p. 425). It was the prospect of being "made sin," of taking "on Him the intolerable load of the world's sin" that made Him shrink in the garden. And it was "the feeling of separation from God, the sense of forsakenness...because of the burden laid upon Him" that explained his awful cry upon the Cross.

We no not, of course, endorse every sentiment the book contains. There is a statement concerning infants on p. 272, which appears to us to be very misleading. He seems to suggest that all infants are not alike dead in trespasses and sins; that some, because of their Christian parentage, are "lambs of his fold from their earliest infancy," and that conversion in their case is unnecessary. This teaching we regard as mistaken. David, though an example of early piety, and able to speak of himself as a son of God's handmaid, yet acknowledges that he was "born in sin." We have tried not to misunderstand the Doctor's words, but he appears to us to speak upon this subject not according "to the law and the testimony."

Nevertheless we heartily and confidently commend the book. It is orthodox, able, devout, suggestive, and sufficiently popular in style to be appreciated by a very wide circle of readers.

* THE GOSPEL OF MATTHEW. By John Monro Gibson, M.A., D.D. 7s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Archdeac Richardson purposes resigning the incumbency of Camden Chapel, Camberwell, at the end of July. He will continue his duties as Archdeacon of Southwark.

The Bishop of Peterborough preached a missionary sermon in St. Paul's Cathedral, on Wednesday morning, last week. Dr. Magee said the Church at home gained, besides other things, from the work of the missionary abroad, the means of distinguishing between what is fundamental and what may be termed accidental in its faith; and learnt the lesson of Christian unity, the divisions and the schisms of Christendom—Christianity split at home into 280 fragments—being its disgrace and weakness. The missionaries told how missionaries of different communities stretched out their hands one to another. And the thought occurred whether we might not in some measure do the same at home, not by the utterance of mere platform platitudes about sinking minor differences, which cannot be sunk while men feel them earnestly, but by striving to eliminate all that prevents the diverse component metals of the great Church being fused and melted together into one.

METHODIST.

Some time ago attention was called to a general desire on the part of educated and wealthy Wesleyans in London to form a sort of Toynbee settlement on the south bank of the Thames. Already some £5000 has been subscribed, while an additional £3000 is hoped to be obtained before the Wesleyan Conference opens. The entire cost of the scheme, including the site, will not fall short of £12,000. A rising minister, now at Cambridge, Rev. J. Scott Lidgett, will undertake the management in September next, and a guarantee fund has been formed to meet the expenses of the next three years.

BAPTIST.

Rev. E. G. Gange, of Bristol, has been conducting a special mission in Cornwall, the executive of the Baptist Home Mission having asked him to undertake to visit every chapel in the chief towns of that county.

Memorial stones were laid last week of a new Baptist tabernacle at Peckham-rye. The church at Peckham-rye has been in existence about three years, and under the ministry of Rev. Frank M. Smith (for many years at Hornsey-rise), who was one of Mr. Spurgeon's earliest students, has reached a membership of over 300.

Lombard-street Chapel, Birmingham, after being closed for fourteen months, has been reopened as a central mission to the masses on "Forward Movement" lines, under the superintendence of Rev. R. Weaver. The chapel has been cleaned and painted. The work has been done by the people themselves. Mr. Weaver for a fortnight worked like a mechanic at whitewashing, painting, &c.; his wife and helpers did the scrubbing and cleaning, the whole of the work being done for about £13.

At one of the recent meetings of the Kent and Sussex Baptist Association, the Dean of Canterbury was present, and, replying to the welcome given to him and the Nonconformist ministers, said they were all working for the same Master. Nothing ought to separate their hearts, or interfere with their acknowledgment of those who work in the same field. He was thankful for the body of Baptists. These are days in which there is no more infidelity than in the past, but it is putting its foot more to the front, so there is reason for Christians closing their ranks and uniting in the same work.

SALVATION ARMY.

A site has been secured at Redhill, Surrey, and barracks to seat 600 people are to be erected.

Salvationists from all over the world will be present at the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Army at the Crystal Palace on July 15.

Two Danish officers have been imprisoned, one for selling The War Cry in the streets, and the other for playing music in the barracks without the consent of the burgomaster. These are the first cases of the kind in Denmark, where hitherto the police protection has been very effusive.

CONGREGATIONAL.

A Congregational chapel has been opened at Lavister, near Chester, a village which hitherto has been without a place of worship of any kind.

The board of directors of the London Missionary Society have elected Mr. W. A. Gard as chairman, and Rev. Justin Evans as deputy chairman for the year.

Rev. W. Arthur has resigned the charge of the mission-room at Gerrard's Bridge, and has sailed for Algoa Bay, South Africa, to work amongst the Boers near the Orange Free State, under the auspices of the London Missionary Society.

Rev. John Bain, of Chatsworth-road Tabernacle, Clapton Park, N.E., has been very ill for some weeks with rheumatic fever. During an enforced absence in Scotland, his pulpit will be filled every Sunday evening, till August 1, by Dr. Harry Grattan Guinness. There is a debt on the Tabernacle of over £2000. It is a great pity that such a good work should labour under financial embarrassment.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

At a welcome meeting in Gloucester, Frederick Sessions gave many interesting particulars of India, with the legal, social, and moral obstacles hindering reform in that vast Dependency. Advantage was taken of the meeting to petition against compensation to brewers and publicans.

The Monthly Record, of the 14th inst., gives cheering particulars of the spread or improvement of adult schools. Multitudes have been reclaimed and blessed by a movement at once democratic, solid, and religious, and whereas it was confined to Friends for many years, now other churches have taken it up to their own benefit and the good of working men and women.

Western Yearly Meeting in holding ministerial conferences embracing a number of Quarterly Meetings is only reverting to the practice of early days. The Meetings of "Public Friends" 200 years ago were at once seasons of spiritual blessing and evangelistic arrangements, and could be profitably imitated or re-established to-day. With the spread and growth of the Society now in progress, new methods are required to meet current needs and altered circumstances

NOTE FROM IRELAND.

The Irish Church Missions to Roman Catholics have received a legacy of £50,000 under the will of the late Mrs. Susan Hopper, of Clifton, Bristol.

NOTE FROM SCOTLAND.

The results of the latest written examination in Scripture knowledge, held under the auspices of the Glasgow Sabbath School Union were very satisfactory. The total number of scholars examined was 4350, of whom 47 gained the full number of marks, whilst 3240 secured 50 per cent. and upwards.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

At Birkenhead, Mrs. Saumarez-Smith, wife of Dr. Saumarez-Smith, the new Bishop of Sydney.—Rev. John Henry Bernau, late vicar of Belvedere, Kent, and formerly of the C.M.S. in British Guiana.—Rev. Ephraim Smith, U.P. minister of Newton-Stewart, N.B.—Rev. J. E. Sawday, for thirteen years pastor of the Congregational churches at Prees and Whixall, Salop.—Rev. J. M'Aulay, Highland missionary of the Free Church, Kilmarnock.—Mr. Joseph Allen, circuit steward, Lurgan.

MR. W. WALTON SPENCER, having suffered very much in health, has been ordered home to England for a few months' rest. He hopes to leave the Cape for that purpose early in July.

BOURNEMOUTH.—A fortnight's open-air services have recently been conducted at this place by Rev. F. Sumner, of Bristol, and Colonel S. Dewé White, of this town. In spite of stormy weather they have been very well attended by most attentive audiences, mostly adults, and have proved to be times of refreshing and blessing from the presence of the Lord.

"JERUEL," QUARRY-ROAD, HASTINGS, is a Home for invalids, aged and delicate cases requiring rest. A Y.W.C.A. Home and free registry for servants is associated with the work. The superintendents, Misses Marchant and Harding, have had much to discourage them of late, through the removal of friends, and other causes, but the Institution has been a boon and a blessing to many. Benevolent people desirous of securing comfortable quarters for needy invalids will help the work by bespeaking accommodation as early as possible in advance.

ISLINGTON Y.M.C.A.

THE retirement of Mr. J. J. Atkinson from the secretaryship, after so many years' earnest work, was a great loss to this Association. His long illness, and subsequent resignation, left the work in a sadly impaired condition, and the committee had many difficulties to contend with in carrying it on. After Mr. Atkinson left, Mr. H. T. Lodge was appointed secretary, but a severe illness compelled him to resign after five months. A few weeks ago, the services of Mr. J. Nash-Rees, late of the Bridgwater Y.M.C.A., were secured, and it is hoped that under his direction, the work will now go forward and prosper more and more.

The annual meeting of the Association was held on Thursday week, under the presidency of Colonel Morton, of Mildmay. The report for the year spoke of the trying time which the Association has been passing through, and showed that the work, though not carried on so vigorously as formerly, has not been without good results. Many of the members who have remained have entered into the work with hearty spirit, and the various Bible-classes and Gospel meetings have been kept up with a fair attendance. The mixed evangelistic meeting on Sunday evenings has been given up, and more special attention devoted to bringing in the young men who are to be found in the neighbourhood in such teeming numbers.

The addresses were full of good cheer and encouragement for the future. Rev. JOSHUA HAIGH, a warm-hearted Methodist, dwelt with force upon the urgency of such efforts on behalf of our young people. Considering the potent influence which they will be exercising in twenty years' time, it is of the most vital importance that they should be firmly grounded in the moral and spiritual principles which it is the Association's aim to teach. Exhorting the members, he reminded them of the essential need of having a clear evidence of the work of grace in their own hearts; this would be their most powerful weapon in defending the truth, and in fighting for God.

Dr. THAIN DAVIDSON followed with words of earnest counsel. After referring to some of the hindrances of the age, such as infidelity, gambling, indifferentism, &c., he said that notwithstanding all that seemed dark and ominous, he was glad to know there is an earnest spirit of inquiry abroad concerning the things of God. The Y.M.C.A. had encouragement to push on with their work, and they must and will push on. No age needed Christian men so much as the present, and their hope for the future of the country must be in those whom the Association reaches—an ever-increasing band of young men whose hearts the Lord has touched and who are not ashamed to own their Lord.

Colonel MORTON having spoken a few hearty words, the meeting closed with a helpful devotional address by Rev. E. A. Stuart.

DR. STALKER, who has been suffering from an affection of the throat, recently underwent a successful operation in London. He will spend a month at Crieff before resuming work in Glasgow.

BIBLE MARKING has been to many a very blessed exercise. To not a few persons the use of inks of various hues has been helpful in this employment, the colours being selected so as to suggest the character and sense of the verse or passage engrossed or underlined—e.g., crimson for Christ, the cross, and redemption; and black for Satan, sin, and condemnation, &c. Mr. J. J. Field, 25, Helmet-row, Old-street, London, E.C., has prepared some inks specially suited for this excellent purpose. They are made up in boxes containing eight distinct colours for one shilling, and may be ordered through country stationers. The inks are limpid and good, and an explanatory circular and suitable pens are included. We trust there will be a large demand for these "Bible Marking Inks," and that by the use of them many will be stimulated to increased zeal in searching and studying the sacred Scriptures.

MISSIONS TO SEAMEN SOCIETY.

Patron—Admiral H.R.H. THE DUKE OF EDINBURGH, K.G.

THIS Society labours among the great seafaring population of our country, numbering upwards of 625,000 men, who man some 36,000 Merchant, Passenger, Emigrant, Light, and other Ships, and 29,000 Fishing Vessels; not one of which carries a Chaplain. It also labours among the 60,000 Seamen of the Royal Navy.

AFLOAT—Its work is carried on by holding Services or Bible Readings on board the ships when in ports or roadsteads, distributing Tracts, selling Bibles and Prayer Books, and giving Boxes or Books of sound reading to be taken to sea.

In 1888, about 6,000 Bibles were sold; 750,000 Disused Bibles, Tracts, &c., distributed, and 10,000 Boxes or Bags of Books given to ships.

ASHORE—Its work is threefold:—

I. Spiritual: In 51 Churches or Mission Rooms at various ports, at home and abroad, where seamen are ministered to on Sundays and week-days, by the Society's Chaplains and Scripture Readers.

II. Philanthropic: The men being rescued from publichouses and crimps, and induced to come to the Society's Institutes, where they are provided with good reading, newspapers, &c., with means of writing to their families, and harmless games.

III. Temperance: In 1888, about 8,000 Seamen signed the Temperance Pledge; and during the last 10 years 77,000 have signed it.

Information as to the details of the work is given in the Society's Magazine Word on the Waters.

Increased FUNDS are urgently appealed for, to enable this good work to be maintained and extended. Subscriptions and contributions should be sent to the Secretary, Commander W. DAWSON, R.N., at the Society's Offices, 11, Buckingham Street, Strand, London.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

The patient's name is GEORGE BOZARD, a gardener. Eighteen months from March (the time I wrote) this case was brought under my notice by Rev. JULIUS H. FEEK, minister of Broad-street Church, PERSHORE, who says: "I recommended a similar case before, and am glad to say the young man is still well, and attending to his work."

Three months before commencing with my treatment G. B. had had an attack of congestion, which had been followed by a permanent affection of the left lung, sharp pains, spasmodic cough, purulent expectoration tinged with blood, breathing very short at times, palpitations, commencing to lose flesh.

In two months he was "looking much better, and feeling much better," and Mr. F. writes very hopefully.

The correspondence went on till the end of last autumn. He had left off the medicine in the early part of the year (too early), and began to fail until commencing again in May.

I received a letter from Rev. J. H. FEEK on the 19th January this year, in which he says: "George Bozard is able to attend to his work. I once had no hope of his recovery, nor his doctor either, but feel that under God your treatment has saved his life."

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

BROWN & POLSON'S CORN FLOUR

Is a Household Requisite of Constant Utility.

That BROWN & POLSON'S CORN FLOUR possesses very valuable qualities as a food for all classes, at all periods of life except earliest infancy, has been attested by eminent dietetic authorities, as well as by universal public experience during over thirty years.

Interested attempts to set aside these facts in favour of other foods can only appeal to ignorance and prejudice, and it remains true that no other kind of food can serve the special purposes of Corn Flour.

BUILDING FUND APPEAL.

An earnest appeal is made for Funds to enable the Committee to rebuild the front portion of the Hospital. This, the only remaining part of the Barracks of the Light Horse Volunteers which occupied the site of the present Hospital in the early part of the century, is now much dilapidated, and has become quite inadequate and unfit for the present needs of the Charity. It is therefore imperative that the work of rebuilding should be undertaken without delay, in order to meet the ever-growing demands upon the Hospital. It is estimated that the cost of rebuilding the front portion and furnishing it will be about £20,000. Admission to the Hospital is entirely Free, no letters of recommendation being required. Contributions for the Building Fund and for the general expenses will be gratefully received by Messrs. BROWN, JANSON & CO., 32, Abchurch-lane; or at the Hospital by CONRAD W. THIES, Secretary.

The "COMPACTUM" UMBRELLA.

UNIVERSALLY ACKNOWLEDGED TO BE THE GREATEST TRIUMPH OF INVENTIVE GENIUS IN UMBRELLA MANUFACTURE.

Hugh-street, Eccleston-square, S.W.
April 12, 1889.

"About eight years ago, when you first opened your shop at 13, Poultry, for the sale of 'COMPACTUM' Umbrellas, I bought one, and although I have had it in constant use ever since, the frame has only just given way, and that through old age; in fact, it is quite rusty, and cannot be re-covered.

"I have much pleasure in stating that the advantages you hold out of the "COMPACTUM" Patent are quite correct in every point. I shall recommend them everywhere.

"I have just bought another, and am pleased to hand you the old one to make what use of you like, together with this letter.—"Yours faithfully,
(Signed), "FRANK T. POULTER.
Mr. H. A. Davis."

112, Commercial-street, E.
November 27, 1888.

"Please re-cover the 'COMPACTUM' I left you, with the same material as it was originally covered with. I take this opportunity of expressing my satisfaction with your Umbrellas. After using one all day and every day for two years, it would not have required re-covering now, but for coming in contact with a refractory nail.

"The 'Compactum' is therefore the cheapest as well as the most sightly of Umbrellas.

"You are at liberty to make what use you like of this letter.

Yours truly,
(Signed), "A. A. PHILLIPS.
"Mr. H. A. Davis."

The Patent "COMPACTUM" is the MOST COMPACT and at the same time the STRONGEST UMBRELLA.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Rev. William Crosbie, late of Brighton, now of Park Hill Congregational Church, Nottingham.

Our report of the addresses at the Mildmay Conference has encroached so largely on our space this week, that we are obliged to withhold a number of letters and other communications received.

An esteemed correspondent in Ireland writes to us on the work of evangelisation in that country. He says:—

> I hardly think that for some time yet the Romanists will allow Protestant ministers to preach in the public streets if they can help it. I have known laymen to preach in public, and in some cases to get a quiet hearing. There is, however, one way in which Romanists may be reached—quietly and individually. I speak from experience when I say that, with very few exceptions, a private word is civilly taken. Let us seek grace to embrace every opportunity of speaking to Roman Catholics privately.

These are words of truth and soberness. Romanists doubtless resent that which seems to them to be organised interference; but conversation prompted by kindly solicitude is appreciated by them no less than by other people. The love of Christ should constrain us to point the warm-hearted Irish Roman Catholics to Him who is worthy of all their confidence and devotion.

Mr. H. M. Stanley's lecture at Exeter Hall last week, on the Emin Pasha Rescue Expedition, was attended by a large and brilliant company of deeply interested hearers. The renowned explorer gave a very graphic account of his varied experiences, and received cordial thanks for the services he has rendered to civilisation, and to missionary work. Mr. Stanley's new book, "In Darkest Africa," now issued to the public, is one of the most fascinating works of its kind ever published, and it is certain to have many thousands of readers.

It is a distinct gain to the cause of arbitration as a means of settling international disputes that the War Minister of one of the great military States should have even hinted at the possibility of disarmament as an alternative to the frequent increase of standing armies, and the constant manufacture of deadly destructives. The Austrian Minister of War recently astonished the delegation by a demand for one hundred and twenty millions of florins to raise the peace-footing of the Army. After saying that the nations were now ruining one another by military expenditure, he expressed his conviction that "things as they are cannot last long; they must lead either to a catastrophe, or to the definite settlement of peace under much healthier conditions." Austria is not the only nation which groans under the burden of these huge armaments; and it is earnestly to be hoped, in the interests of righteousness and peace, that other influential statesmen will take up the note which has thus been sounded. Diplomacy could win no nobler victory than the substitution of quietness and mutual trust for restlessness and suspicion among the nations.

Mr. Owens Mell, of the Y.M.C.A. Seaside Home at Margate, has arranged for special Gospel services for the people in the Hall-by-the-Sea, during the Lord's Days in July and August. This excellent example might well be imitated during these summer and autumn months at other places round the coast, where there are many visitors with plenty of time on their hands. We hope that Christian workers who may be sojourning at Margate during these months will give a helping hand to Mr. Mell and his friends in this earnest effort.

A few days ago The Hospital, in dealing with the condition of working women, said:—

> Leaving out of consideration the home workers, whose pay is indescribably miserable, we may say that many thousands of women are working long hours for a daily wage ranging from two shillings and threepence to a shilling, and even less. Add to this the fact that there are always slack seasons in the trade, and that the average work in the tailoring trade is three days for medium shops, and two and a half days or under for the great majority of unskilled workers, it becomes evident that we are face to face with an amount of misery which cannot well be over-estimated.

This condition of things no doubt results in a large increase in the ghastly army of those who eke out a wretched existence by the wages of vice. It is to be regretted that more prominence is not given to that fact, when the subject of starvation wages is under discussion before Parliamentary committees and elsewhere.

It may be considered a doubtful benefit to have cheap English translations of the writings of Schopenhauer, who has been very aptly designated "the philosopher of misery"; and we are quite unable to suppose a case in which any good result could follow from the careful study of that writer's pessimistic disquisitions. It has of late, however, become the fashion to read him and to quote him; but it is simply a fashion. By-and-by, as has invariably been the case with the writings of all those who have found in life only a chapter of accidents to be regulated by extreme selfishness and disregard for the happiness of others, Schopenhauer's works will follow those of his predecessors into the waste paper basket. With the Bible within our reach, we have no need to go to German philosophers for knowledge in regard to the conduct or wisdom of life.

The Gospel has frequently been objected to by doubters and sceptics on the ground of the difficulty which it presents when looked at by those who do not approach it from the standpoint of faith and grace, and it becomes interesting to observe what these objectors have to offer in lieu of its simplicity. Recently one of these doubters has been trying to expound the creed of his master, and from it we gather that "the grotesque fungoid growth of assumption and error," named theology, has to be superseded shortly by a system under which belief must be declared in "the Instability of the Homogeneous," and the doctrines of "Equilibration of Evolution," and "Correspondence with Environment" accepted.

If these things are of any value whatever, why do not those who propound them go into the East-end of London, and the slums of our large cities, and proclaim them. The test is a crucial one, we admit, but the Gospel has passed it; if the new method succeeds in the same direction, we shall then be prepared to examine it.

The Drink Bill for 1889 has gone up by seven millions. How great an addition this represents to the sum of human sin and sorrow it would, indeed, be difficult to calculate. Some day and somewhere the balance will have to be struck, and those who are responsible in the direction of assisting the nation downwards will have to answer for their acts. We cannot possibly have an increase in the Drink Bill without a corresponding addition to the number of paupers, and it is, therefore, interesting to observe that Dr. Wallace has stated that whilst in 1872 the percentage, in London, of deaths in workhouses, lunatic asylums, and hospitals to the entire population was only 17, in 1888 it had risen to 22½. This is only a side issue, but it is a striking and painful one.

The British East African Company claims to have, during the two years of its existence, been the instrument of releasing five thousand slaves, in addition to having entered into binding compacts with tribes in regard to an area of 50,000 squares miles that none of the natives are to be held in slavery. This is something to rejoice over, especially as the Arabs recognise these agreements.

There is not a little danger in these days' lest "that most excellent gift of charity" should be watered down and misinterpreted so as to become little better than a politic connivance at what is wrong. In a recent sermon the Bishop of Manchester, pleading that his hearers should cultivate this gift, exhorted them to "try to find truth in the superstition of their devout Catholic neighbours, and largeness and spirituality in the bitterness of the strait-laced Puritan." In the Romish system, alas! the truth is buried so deep beneath accumulations of error that it is all but impossible to exhume it.

As regards Puritanism, it is unjust, though only too common, to use it as a term of opprobrium for the conduct of those who decline to conform to the world's standard. That the Puritans were strict, that they may have misinterpreted some things which they found in the Bible, that they carried some of their scruples to excess, sometimes strained at trifles, and were lacking in sympathy, may be conceded. But their vital godliness, zeal, and integrity in all the relations of life; their devotedness to God and his interests, their "walking by faith and not by sight," the purity and discipline of their home life, are worthy of imitation rather than contempt in these days of greater laxity and less thoroughness in such matters.

This subject suggests another observation. Much is heard nowadays about charity and toleration even towards those who hold vital error. Those who oppose it in any of its subtle forms are branded as "heresy hunters" and "bigoted"; and it is often asserted that controversy is wrong and uncharitable, and not according to the mind of our Lord and his apostles. But is this so? The Epistles are largely controversial. Paul frequently vindicates truth and opposes error with holy indignation; nor do the authors of heresies escape personal censure. Even the Apostle of love himself does not avoid controversy. It is not abstention from such warfare that is required, but the tempering and regulation of it in accordance with Christian principles. The truth may be spoken "in love." What often appears to be liberality may only be indifference. Moreover, decision for truth and separation from error are not inconsistent with the attributes of charity so beautifully enumerated in 1 Cor. xiii.

The papers of the two denominations tell us that there is a growing feeling for unity of action among Baptists and Independents. A communication from the Council of the Baptist Union is expected to reach the Congregational Church Aid Council on the subject, and more particularly in regard to evangelistic work and the visitation of churches. It would seem at least practicable that the Associations of these two bodies in each English county should, as far as possible, cease to move separately. Their joint action in spreading Gospel truth through rural parishes would be a decided gain to the cause of Christian unity. They will find, however, that it will be only on decidedly evangelical lines that there can be this exemplary and useful co-operation.

The American Presbyterian Church complains of an inadequate supply of candidates for the ministry; Dr. C. L. Thompson, a late moderator, thus writes:—

> The one serious shadow on the rapid progress of the Presbyterian Church (in the U.S.) is the lack of men. We need more students in our seminaries, and more ministers for our churches and mission stations. Our system of making ministers must be made more pliable. Without lowering our educational standard, we must in some way avail ourselves of the consecrated gifts of those who, without full collegiate training, are willing to give themselves to the service of Christ. The standard of ministerial education needs to be lifted higher. The gates to the harvest field need to be swung wider. The Church is working on this problem.

The phrase, "Our system of making ministers," is not to our mind. A man-made ministry is an abortive ministry. Nevertheless, if the conclusion becomes general that by the Church's availing itself of the consecrated gifts of men devoted to the service of Christ "the standard of ministerial education" will be raised; and if young men follow Professor Reynolds' counsel, and seek so meet the present scepticism as to the supernatural by their own God-given power, the churches will be lifted out of the straitened places of which they now complain.

In an able address delivered by Dr. H. R. Reynolds, of Cheshunt College, to candidates for the ministry in Yorkshire, he observed that all the tirades against supernatural religion disappear before the facts of personal conversion. If Christians would meet the literary developments of these days, they must themselves be consecrated by a fresh enduement of the Holy Spirit, and a mighty renewal of their own spiritual life. There must be the inward co-testimony of their own conscience and of the Holy Spirit that they were sons of God. An aim to save souls, to speak of unseen things, to plead with consciences, and to set forth the mystery of God in Christ, so that men might believe unto eternal life, would alone avail to counteract present scoffings and scepticisms. This was wholesome and very timely advice.

Mildmay Park Conference.

The threefold subject this year was admirably chosen. Years ago the set of advanced evangelical thought was too exclusively objective. Teaching as to the standing of the believer in Christ was not sufficiently balanced by a corresponding standard of holy living. Then came the desire to make Christian practice accord with the position of sitting in the heavenlies in Christ. But for some years the subjective has somewhat overshadowed the objective, and in seeking holiness attention has often been directed more to inward experience than to Christ Himself.

Therefore it was well that the object of contemplation last week was Jesus Christ, whom God has made a Witness to the people, a Leader and Commander to the people; and to have thus brought before us his threefold office as Prophet, Priest, and King; as the Faithful Witness, the First-begotten from the dead, and the Prince of the kings of the earth. It is true that the speakers did not all keep closely to the subject, but the addresses as a whole were edifying, and there was exhortation as well as exposition. One speaker well showed that our threefold response is to know, and go, and do—to know what Jesus testifies; to go where He leads; to do what He commands. Or as another stated it—to hear, to follow, to obey.

The attractive occasion was the second morning, when Mr. Spurgeon and Dr. Andrew Bonar were the speakers. The failing health of the former, and the venerable age of the latter, drew forth special interest, and ensured them a large and deeply sympathetic audience.

It will not be thought invidious if it be said that these two addresses were distinguished from the rest by this—that while the others were able and instructive Bible studies, these were expressions of deep soul exercises and experiences of the speakers themselves; and they evoked that personal contact of spirit which leaves an impression no mere teaching can produce. This may not be manifest in the report; for a speech cannot be reported. The words may be given verbatim, but speech has tones, and action, and personal influence, which cannot be expressed in print. Nevertheless, much lies in the hearer and the reader; and some who only read the report will derive more from it than some who heard the addresses, and will also read them.

The afternoon meetings, whether in the large hall, the smaller rooms, or the tents, were numerously attended, and interesting accounts were given of work for God in many lands and on varied lines. These subsidiary gatherings constitute an important feature of the Conference, and were specially pertinent to the main subject considered; in fact, they gave concrete expression to the glorious theme, showing that some who have heard, have set themselves diligently to follow, and are endeavouring lovingly to obey, the great Witness, Leader, and Commander. These meetings were as a rule stimulating, and were uniformly characterised by a spirit of solicitude for the glory of God in the salvation of men.

The opportunities for social intercourse and mutual cheer afforded by the informal gatherings on the lawn are always a pleasant and happy feature of these annual assemblies.

WITNESS, LEADER, COMMANDER.

Come near, Thou Faithful Witness,
We wait to hear thy voice
Declare to us the Father,
Until our hearts rejoice:
Reveal to us the glory
Of his eternal grace,
Then tell the sweet Home-story
Of his bright dwelling-place.

Come near, Thou gentle Leader,
And softly guide us on,
Beside the pure still waters,
Or where fierce fields are won.
Up! up the lofty mountain,
Or where the vales are blest:
Until to life's first Fountain,
We follow Thee and rest.

Come near, Thou Prince Commander,
Command our hearts and hands:
Command our feet, our talents:
We bow to thy commands.
O let us never falter,
Nor question why or how;
Nor wish one word to alter,
But humbly hear and bow.

Come, Witnesser of Heaven;
Come, Leader of thine own;
Come, gracious wise Commander;
We wait for Thee alone.
Our ears, prepare for hearing;
To follow, train our feet;
Command us, and unfearing
We will thy future meet.

Mildmay Conference, June 25—27.

KINGSWOOD, WARWICKSHIRE.—The annual Convention was recently held in the Kingswood Conference Hall. Friends came in goodly numbers, not only from the surrounding villages, but from Birmingham, Leamington, Coventry, and Stratford-on-Avon. The meetings were of a deeply interesting character, and the addresses were most helpful. Clergymen from the surrounding villages, the country families, the farmers, and the labouring classes, with Christians from the surrounding towns, met prayerfully to consider the subject of Christian living.

FOREIGN EVANGELIZATION SOCIETY.—The seventeenth annual report of this Society gives deeply interesting accounts of work done by the many societies that received aid from its funds during the twelve months ending March 31 last. The field covered includes the following countries: France, Corsica, Germany, Bohemia, Belgium, Italy, Spain, Portugal and Sicily. The fragments of testimony here given afford some idea of the many earnest endeavours that are being put forth to evangelise the people of Europe. Yet, looking at the state of things from another point of view, the labourers are seen to be very few, when the greatness of the "harvest" is realised. In some countries, several agencies are assisted, in others, only one or two. The hon. secretary of the society is Rev. Horace Noel, Woking, Surrey.

Tracts.—Mr. H. Le Gros, Prospect House, Ashwell, Herts, asks us to inform our readers that he will send 1 lb. in weight of tracts free to any reader, especially those at the seaside, on receipt of three stamps to cover postage.

REV. JOHN MACGOWAN,

L.M.S. Missionary at Amoy, South China.

IT was a missionary anniversary, and, attracted by the announcement of some wonderful stories, the boys came in full force. While the minister read a thrilling incident from the life of Dr. Moffat, there sat entranced a sturdy, rosy-cheeked boy, with bright twinkling eyes, from whose consciousness the church vanished, and the people around seemed to change into a savage chief with a group of bloodthirsty warriors, while in front of them stood a stronger, grander warrior, alone and without arms, but speaking in such bold and convincing tones that all quailed before him and gradually succumbed, while in far-off encampments men and women breathed freely, for no longer would they be plundered and slain.

When the romantic story ended, the pastor said: "I wonder which of you boys here to-day would like to be a missionary. Still under the enchantment, and with the feeling that he was surrounded by the dusky crowd, the rosy-cheeked boy stood, and, raising high his hand, said, in tones that could be heard throughout the church, "I'll be a missionary."

God accepted that offer. Years rolled by, and many opposing circumstances arose, only to be one by one set aside by the "hand that ruleth." The same Acceptor also ordained that the vivid imagination, the chivalrous spirit, the indomitable will, the graceful tact, the sagacity and shrewdness, as well as the lively spirit and charming bonhommie, which He knew to be in that boy, should be devoted to a country where they would have ample scope and all be needed: so he was sent to China. Those who now look at the active figure, and come under the spell of this brightest of missionaries fully recognise the wisdom Divine.

Born at Belfast in 1835, Mr. Macgowan came to London as a young man, and joined the Scotch Church in Regent-square. After studying at the English Presbyterian College in London, he was, in 1859, accepted by the London Missionary Society, and appointed to Shanghai. Before sailing, he married Miss E. S. Butt, of Morpeth.

In 1863 he joined the Amoy Mission, the climate there being thought more suitable for Mrs. Macgowan. It is in this city of Amoy and the surrounding country that the marvellous development of Christianity has taken place which has placed it in point of the number of its converts at the head of all Chinese stations. It would be ungenerous, however, to lay too great stress upon this, for Mr. Macgowan, like most missionaries, knows the fallacy of reckoning heads as the absolute test of success. They can at best only be regarded as visible fruits; there are many "hidden ones" yet to be revealed who, though their names come not on a mission register, yet have their "names enrolled in heaven." Thus, while recently visiting so many parts of England he might well have dwelt much on statistics, he rather chose to narrate scenes in mission work, or histories of converts. This was done in such a realistic manner as to seem like portions of the "Acts of the Apostles" with incidents of Chinese life put in, and gave to hearers a much clearer view of the methods, peculiarities, trials, and successes of mission work. One thing was noticeable, the whole burden of the story was the Master's work; and, in the intense desire to tell it, the personal trials, privations, and sufferings undergone were forgotten. Yet anyone reflecting upon the bright and joyous pictures, or the darker sides, often forming so strange a contrast, must feel that much of trial, faith, and patience, were needed and practised ere that story could be told.

In explanation of the often apparent slowness of the rate of progress which we find hard to understand here in England (accustomed for centuries to spiritual teaching, until it has become a Divine heirloom to the nation), Mr. Macgowan offers the following illustration of his work in villages around Koan-Khau where the people had for years been visited by all kinds of mission agencies:—

"Though eager with curiosity, they were not so responsive as we, with our strong faith, expected they would be. As we began to speak every voice was hushed and every face turned to us, but there was a lack of intelligent understanding of what we said that oppressed us. The simplest truths were explained as though we were talking to children, but they could not grasp them. The vis inertiæ of heathenism is a force that paralyses the spiritual faculties and renders men incapable of at first comprehending spiritual truths. It is a factor, however, with which we have to deal every time we come in contact with a heathen audience. As we proceeded with the exposition of the very elements of religion, we saw a gradual change come over the faces before us. A look of intelligence flashed over them. We took our illustrations from nature around us—these they could understand. Through them their thoughts were taken up to the great Father, the Creator of them all, and now they became absorbed. We spoke again of a Saviour that had come to redeem men from sin and to comfort them in the sorrows and miseries of life. A still brighter flash lights up their faces. We felt a current of sympathy flow between them and us. We forgot the day was hot. Our fan was poised motionless in our hand, as we caught the signs of the increasing interest. We were all unconscious that the perspiration was streaming down us. We had touched them with the Divine message, and had the ecstasy of feeling that the hearts around were as human as our own, and could be reached by the same Gospel that had filled ours with hope and gladness." It seems strange that, with every page of the Gospels stamped with the difficulty which the monotheistic Jews had to understand the spiritual part of the Master's teaching, Christians should expect from Chinese heathen such a ready comprehension of the same truths.

We are glad that the London Missionary Society has published Mr. MacGowan's unique and picturesque addresses. In them may be seen proud scholars humbled by the truth, wretched gamblers arrested in their course, and hopeless opium smokers filled with higher thoughts and inspirations than they conceived possible before.

In consequence of Mrs. Macgowan's ill-health, they left for England in September, 1864; but she died at sea on October 29. Mr. Macgowan soon returned to his beloved work; and in March, 1868, he married the daughter of Rev. L. B. Peet, of the American Board for Missions, stationed at Foochow.

The whole of Mr. Macgowan's career has been that of a missionary whose one thought is to preach far and near in the busy streets, in the villages up among the hills, boating along the seashore, visiting the rough and stalwart fisher-folk; adding to this ceaseless itineration the care of the fifty-six churches scattered over his wide district. While maintaining discipline, he has used every means to promote the growth of self-reliance among these churches. Twenty-one maintain their own pastors and find all needful expenses, while many others supply a large proportion of the money needful for their support. He is well aware that the greater part of the work of evangelising and Christianising China must be done by natives, and wisely seeks to use the abilities of all converts for this purpose. He says: "A very marked feature in the Amoy Mission is the fact that persons specially qualified by faith and character to be leaders of men were raised up by God at various periods of its history. God left nothing to accident or to the mere desultory preaching of a few foreign missionaries. Men of profound faith were called to stand by their side from amongst the people of the land, and to them belongs the honour of whatever success has been achieved in that region." These words are, beyond their obvious meaning, a revelation of the character which gives so high a place to the work of native helpers. Such a man can bear great success.

MISSIONARY CANDIDATES.

THE MISSIONARY BUREAU has 167 candidates waiting to be sent out as missionaries to heathen lands. Some of these the Committee hope to be able to send out in connection with various missionary societies, but the large majority cannot be disposed of in that way. What is to be done? There is no lack of open doors. From almost every land appeals continue to come for workers. Easily could 100 candidates be at once located in needy parts of the foreign field, had the Bureau at its disposal funds sufficient. How much is needed? About £50 per candidate on an average would be amply sufficient. Must these eager, earnest, hopeful volunteers be turned back, their hopes crushed, their spirits blighted, for the simple lack of supporting funds? Address: THE MISSIONARY BUREAU, 186, Aldersgate-street, London, E.C.

BARMAIDS AND WAITRESSES.—An interesting social gathering of this class of public servants was recently held in the drawing-room of Exeter Hall, with the view of bringing about such unity of action as will secure for them improved conditions of service. A number of sympathising friends were present, and words of encouragement were spoken by Miss Morley, Mr. W. S. Caine, Mrs. Henry Kingsley, and Mr. W. T. Paton. Mr. Caine said that before they could hope for any legislative interference on their behalf they must combine, so as to secure agreement and co-operation.

THE THREE GARDENS.

BY REV. JAMES CULROSS, D.D.

THE GARDEN OF GETHSEMANE.

II.—The Agony.

THE neighbourhood in which this garden was situated is known, though it is doubtful if the very spot can be determined. Leaving Jerusalem by St. Stephen's Gate, on the east of the city, we front the Mount of Olives, which rises just on the other side of the deep and rugged valley beneath, and is now covered with olive trees, gardens, and corn fields. The descent into the valley is somewhat precipitous. A small bridge is thrown across the torrent bed, making it passable at all seasons. A little distance beyond, the road divides into two—a foot-path leading directly up the face of the mount, the main path winding gently southward and eastward, and crossing the shoulder of the hill to Bethany. Where the road divides, just in the angle, is a plot of ground nearly square, enclosed by a stone wall, and containing eight gnarled and very old olive trees. Tradition makes them as old as the Christian era—a view which certainly cannot be sustained, though it is quite possible that they are the survivors of a grove planted in early times where the garden stood, or near by. The wall was erected to protect the trees from the vandalism of superstitious piety.

The present garden is only one of several in the same neighbourhood. Thomson ("The Land and the Book") says: "When I first came to Jerusalem, and for many years afterwards, that plot of ground was open to all whenever they desired to enter and meditate beneath its venerable olive trees. The Latins, however, have succeeded in gaining sole possession of it. They have built a high wall around it, plastered and white-washed; planted it with trees; laid out hedges and flower-beds; and seem disposed to make it like a modern pleasure-garden, instead of the secluded spot one naturally supposes it was when our Lord retired thither with his disciples on that mournful night of his 'agony' ...The Greeks have invented another site, a little to the north, and of course contend that they have the true Gethsemane. My own impression is that both are wrong. The position is too near the city, and so close to what must have always been the great thoroughfare eastwards, that our Lord would scarcely have selected it for retirement on that momentous and anxious night. I am inclined to locate the garden in the vale, several hundred yards to the north-east of the present Gethsemane, in some secluded spot which I hope will remain for ever undisturbed by the idolatrous intrusion of all sects and denominations."

This garden is the scene of that agony which stands out unprecedented, mysterious, solitary in its awfulness, from all the agonies that earth has known. The Evangelists, Matthew, Mark, and Luke, describe with some fulness what took place, each with some vivid touch peculiar to himself; the Evangelist John leaves room for it in his Gospel—indeed expressly indicates its place (xviii. 1, 2), and gives hints of its coming on (xii. 27, xiii. 21, xiv. 30), but is silent about the agony itself. Hostile criticism (both ancient and modern) has failed to dislodge it from the New Testament record, or to explain it away. I do not mean to give an exposition of the evangelic narratives in detail, or to harmonise them; but would rather direct attention to the broad, general outline that they present.

If there is any part of the Gospel story which, more than another, forbids peering curiosity, and demands an awful reverence, it is this. To discuss the mystery of the bloody sweat as might be done at a coroner's inquest is more shocking than it would be to botanise on a mother's grave. Those who would rush in with explanations are warned, as by the voice from the midst of the burning bush: "Put off thy shoes from off thy feet; for the place where thou standest is holy ground."

The recorded facts of the case are these. After the last supper and converse in the upper room, late at night, Jesus leads forth the eleven to the Mount of Olives, to their well-known trysting-place. As He leads them forth, He appears full of celestial peace; then, if ever, we might imagine a halo about his head. Never had his love to "his own" appeared more tender and intense, more full and overflowing. Coming at length to the verge of the garden, a sudden change manifests itself—another (and, oh, how different!) "transfiguration." "Tarry ye here," He says, "while I go and pray yonder," pointing toward the deeper shade. It was evident that some strange and painful emotion was beginning to possess Him. Leaving eight of the disciples in a group—looking into each other's eyes (we may well believe) with surprise and apprehension—He took with Him Peter, James, and John, and withdrew into the fainter twilight of the grove, where the moonbeams could scarcely penetrate.

As He led them slowly inward, "He began to be sore amazed and to be very heavy," and, opening his bosom as to loved and trusted friends, He told them, "My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death." "What words are these!" Luther exclaims, "I hold them for the greatest words in the whole Bible." He "began" to be sorrowful, as none had ever seen Him before—as if sorrow fell upon the Man of Sorrows for the first time. The "amazement" meets us again in that awful Why? that rose from the cross: "My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken Me?" It was a new thing to Emmanuel. As the exceeding sorrow came over Him, with a shuddering which even the disciples perceived, He stayed the three also, as He had already stayed the eight, bidding them not go away, but "Tarry ye here, and watch with Me"—as when a dying friend says, "Stay beside me; do not go away; pray for me."

Then He went a little further, about a stone's cast, and there He kneeled down, soon throwing Himself forward on his face on the cold ground, damp and chill with the heavy night dews, and prayed, saying, "O my Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from Me; nevertheless, not as I will, but as Thou wilt." Did night ever witness a scene like this? In Mark He prays that the "hour" might pass from Him, as well as that the "cup" should be taken away; and the very syllables that He uttered are recorded: "Abba, Father!" Though He thus appeals "with strong crying and tears," He is not swerving from his Saviour-purpose or in any way flinching or drawing back; on the contrary, He is ready to accept his Father's will, whatever it may be—though, inasmuch as the finest sensibilities of our nature are found in Him unblunted by sin, the suffering He foresees is unutterably dreadful, and He would escape it if another way were open for fulfilling the Father's purpose.

Both Mark and Luke confine themselves to the first prayer, merely indicating that the second and third were "the same"; but Matthew, recording at greater length, tells how, having prayed the first time in the terms related, He came to the disciples and found them asleep—"sleeping for sorrow," Luke explains. He singled out Peter, perhaps as the most forward and in greatest danger, and said: "Simon, sleepest thou?" Thou who hadst promised so much. "Could ye not watch with Me one hour? Watch and pray that ye enter not into temptation: the spirit indeed is willing, but the flesh is weak." Then He went away again the second time, and prayed, saying: "O my Father, if this cup may not pass from Me except I drink it, thy will be done." Again He came to his disciples and found them sunk in sleep; and again He left them, and prayed the third time, saying the same words.

In this account given by Matthew we can see the progression (so to speak) toward that perfect calm with which the Lord faced the band that came to capture Him—the calm, not of the stoic yielding to the inevitable, but of the Son of God. There is the recoil of his whole soul from the awful suffering that lay before Him. The agony into which He is thrown expresses itself in this way—it is Luke, the physician, who notes it—"His sweat was as it were great drops of blood falling down to the ground." But there is also, and all through, perfect filial acquiescence in the Father's will. The human shrinking is subordinated to the filial consent, "Not my will, but thine be done." For this end came He into the world; He had never wavered hitherto, He is not wavering now.

A wonderful entry occurs in Luke's narrative, explaining how it was that Jesus was able physically to sustain such a pressure of anguish. "There appeared an angel from heaven strengthening Him." So human does the Gospel make Him, as well as Divine.

POOR AND FRIENDLESS CONVALESCENTS.

—The annual meeting of the After Care Association for Poor and Friendless Female Convalescents on Leaving Asylums for the Insane was held on June 23, at 83, Lancaster-gate, W., the Earl of Meath in the chair. The report read showed a steady progress during the past twelve months. All information to be obtained of the Secretary, Arden Lea, The Drive, Walthamstow.

The Reception of the Spirit.

In our days it is only too true that creed may outrun experience; but in the case of "certain disciples" whom Paul met at Ephesus, the lips had not even learned to utter what the heart had not felt. "I believe in the Holy Ghost" is a declaration that has found a place among the religious assertions of our time. Put the question to any professing Christian acquainted with the elements of our religion: "Do you believe in the Holy Ghost?" and we may be sure of an emphatic affirmation. The doctrine of the Divine Trinity, or rather that conception of it that relates solely to the fact of the mysterious Union of Three persons in one Godhead, commands assent as an article of religious belief.

Controversy begins, when any attempt is made to particularise the work and office of any one of the Divine Persons of the Trinity; but impatience is manifested when the heart is questioned as to deep and personal experience of the working either of the Father as Justifier, or of Jesus as Redeemer, or of the Holy Spirit as Sanctifier. To many a modern disciple the question of Paul would be thought an intrusion, "Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed?" or rather, "Received ye the Holy Ghost when ye believed?"

Believing a thing, and receiving it, are totally and distinctly different ideas. The disciples referred to in Acts xix. 1 had not even heard of the Holy Ghost, and, therefore, could not believe in Him. Granting, however, that they had heard of Him, and believed in Him in the same fashion as many believe in Him to-day, Paul's inquiry would have lost nothing of its pertinence and urgency. It was not simply, "Have ye believed?" but "Have ye received?"

In reference to ourselves, how intensely real Paul's question makes those truths become that we had only looked upon as vague, misty, mysterious shadows. He asks for the exact measure of our knowledge, and will have it in no other way than from our heart experience. When a man asks me if I believe in the Alps, my reply must be in the affirmative, but my notion of the Alps is very indefinite; the name simply stands to me for something that I have read and heard of. If, in answer to the question, "Have you seen the Alps?" I reply, "Yes." My mind instantly reverts to something very positive and very real. I can recall certain experiences. There is a definite impression upon my mind of the sublimity, beauty, and glory of the mountains. I can see again the everlasting hills. I can feel again the awe, the unspeakable emotions excited by the vision of their grandeur.

The question of Paul, then, takes us into a higher sphere of spiritual knowledge: into that of soul-experience. It is not merely that he gives greater distinctness to the Personality of the Holy Ghost, but he brings us into nearer relation to Him. It becomes a matter of positive comprehension and reception. That Paul is not employing a simple figure of speech is clear from the fact that after the Holy Ghost had come on them, they were endowed with super-human power: "They spake with tongues and prophesied." Whatever is to be understood by this, it is clear that they were able, after receiving the Holy Ghost, to do what they were before incapable of doing. They were endued with "power" from on high.

Is it not evident that there are spiritual possibilities, even greater than those that accrue from faith in Jesus as the Redeemer from death unto life? I write this with hesitation, lest any should think I underestimate the importance of faith in the blood-shedding. Did not Christ Himself first draw the attention of the soul to Himself as the Sent of God and the Way to the Father. But did He not also promise the Comforter, the Spirit of truth, to perfect the work He Himself had begun? His last command to his disciples, according to Luke xxiv. 49, was: "Behold, I send the promise of my Father upon you; but tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem, until ye be endued with power from on high." Again in Acts i. 8 it is recorded: "Ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you."

Faith in the finished work of Christ, and faith in the continued work of the Spirit, are not antagonistic and contradictory faiths, but related and dependent. Christ must first be received for justification, and the Holy Ghost must be received for sanctification and spiritual power. The rebel must first be pardoned and restored before he can hope or even desire to be used in the service of his King. Having been pardoned and restored to favour, it is of his Master's grace to commission and empower him for service.

Many believers are content with a passive loyalty, and, either from spiritual indolence or ignorance, neither wield nor seek the power that the Holy Spirit can bestow. I presume to think that Christianity has not felt, has not conceived, a fraction of its power for good and glory. To be more definite, there are comparatively few Christians who have laid hold upon their strength, who have realised the awakening of a hitherto unknown energy, and have felt the blaze of a new enthusiasm within their soul. The baptism of the Holy Ghost makes an epoch in the spiritual life, hardly less momentous than the joy of acceptance in the Beloved; the former is consecration to the glory of God, the latter the blessedness of our own souls.

Note the effect of this baptism of the Spirit in the case of certain disciples at Ephesus—"they spake with tongues, and prophesied." It is unnecessary to inquire if a like marvellous effect would follow the gift of the Spirit in these days. God's purpose is one; his methods are many. Whatever may be the exact meaning of the "gift of tongues" in the case of the early Christians, it may perhaps be impossible to determine; but sure we are of this, that a "gift of tongues" is still among the methods employed by God for the extension of his kingdom. The tongue of fire still burns its way right to the heart of the world's sin, and touches the very core of the world's conscience.

Surely it is one of the most elementary principles of modern Christian work—a principle formulated, not from theory, but the practice of generations, and not only so, but sanctioned by Sacred Writ, that not by the combination of the finest capabilities of the natural mind, not by the most splendid talents, not by the grandest eloquence, can we hope to lead souls into the kingdom of heaven, but by the outgoing of spiritual power alone. It is not the words, the style, the energy of the preacher, or the appropriate choice of his illustrations, or any or all of these, that awakens, and convinces, and prostrates the listening soul, and brings it trembling to the throne of grace. It is power in the preacher, but beyond him; it is the power of God; it is unction from the Holy One. The preacher knows it and feels it; but his realisation of it is no hindrance to the delivery of the word. It induces no self-consciousness, because the power possesses him, not he the power; he speaks as he is moved to speak by the Holy Spirit of God.

How, then, may we receive the Holy Ghost? The answer in brief is: Believe, seek, and prayerfully wait for his appearing. "Ye have not, because ye ask not." If we would devote but a quarter of the time and effort to attain this power that we give to the study of human productions, books, papers, magazines, and commentaries, what mighty results would follow our ministry; how the poor guilty hearts that nurse their sin, and flatter their vanity upon our beautifully framed essays, would break and melt before the power of God's infinite love. "Have we received the Holy Ghost?"

Missionary Conference in China.

The first General Missionary Conference for China was held in Shanghai in May, 1877. It was composed of about 120 members, of whom, as has been shown by the memorial service, twenty have since died. After an interim of thirteen years, the second Conference assembled at the same place on the 7th of this month. On the directory of the Conference, which is not quite complete, are the names of 432 members, male and female, comprising nearly one half the foreign force at present at work in China, representing nearly every part and province, a few coming from Manchuria, Korea, and Japan, and one each from Siam, Singapore, Burmah, and India. There being but one representative of the native ministry is, perhaps, accounted for by the fact that they are not much acquainted with English.

It is truly surprising how so many visitors can be so royally entertained in so small a community as Shanghai; and it can be accounted for only by the fact that it is nearly, or quite, the largest mission station in the world, having no less than eighty missionaries of its own, not to speak of a number of devoted generous laymen and others who have opened wide their doors as well as their hearts on this occasion.

THE PERSONNEL OF THE CONFERENCE

is an interesting study, embracing as it does much of the consecrated manhood and womanhood of the various Protestant Churches in the world, more than a score of societies being represented. Four have been in mission service upwards of forty years, the senior being Dr. Happer, of Canton, who came to China first in 1844. Thirteen men and a number of women have reached their thirtieth year of service, twenty-one their twentieth year, and forty-four their tenth year or more. So that, while the assembly is dotted over with grey heads enough to add gravity to its deliberations, the great majority have not yet reached their teens or even their first decade of service in China. This great preponderance of youthful labourers is due to the large increase in the mission force during the last few years rather than to the falling off in the number of older workers by death or retirement. When China was first occupied as a Protestant mission field, it was thought that five years was about the maximum of service that might be expected, but now it is found to be little less healthy than the home lands.

When it is remembered that these missionaries have come together at great expense of money and time—some requiring months for the journey—it will be seen that they are alive to the importance of the occasion, and to some at least it is not a mere holiday affair, pleasant though it may be for so many widely scattered workers to meet together. This fact accounts for contemplating ten days, of three sessions each, in which to read and discuss fifty papers, on a great variety of topics, in addition to much other labour, such as committee work, question drawer, &c. However, the reading of papers and reports has been greatly facilitated by having them printed beforehand, an example to be commended to other large deliberative bodies.

The first session, after the regular daily half-hour of devotional services, was given to the introductory sermon by Rev. J. Hudson Taylor. It was a brief exposition and application of the miracle of Feeding the Four Thousand, simple, spiritual, practical, hopeful. The Conference was organised by the election of two Presidents, Rev. David Hill, of Hankow, representing the British section, and Dr. Nevius, of Chefoo, the American section, with a number of secretaries and reporters to the daily press. After the address of welcome, a paper was read, showing the changed aspect of China. The day was closed with a paper and discussion on the "Relation of Christian Missions to the Foreign Residents," both of which failed to touch the great point of getting foreigners saved, taking it for granted, apparently, that they were either already saved, or could not be saved.

The second day of the Conference was devoted to the subject of the three points emphasised being translating, romanising, and adding notes and comments. The discussion of the first point led to the adoption of a report recommending a single standard version in two of the principal dialects, where hitherto there had been at least three, one patronised by the American, one by the British, and one by the Scottish Bible Society. This harmonising of the committees on these dialects was considered such a triumph as to call forth the singing of the doxology; as did also the report of the Conference on Union, recommending among other things that each missionary pray for all his fellow-missionaries in their work some time on the Saturday of every week. In order, however, to secure this harmony it was agreed that each Society might still use its own terms for God, Spirit, and baptize, it having been decided beforehand that the "term question" was not to be discussed at the Conference at all.

The discussion of the second point led to the appointment of a standing committee to have the general superintendence of the preparation of the Bible in the various vernaculars in the Roman character, it being so much more easily learned, as well as more compact than the ponderous Chinese alphabet, not only for foreigners, but for the Chinese themselves.

But the most spirited contest was around the "notes and comments" for the Scriptures, the agents of both the British and Foreign and the National Society of Scotland, and afterwards of the American Bible Society in Japan, taking part. At last the report was adopted that the Bible Societies be requested to publish, in addition to the plain Word of God, an edition with summaries, headings, and brief explanations, occupying no more comparative space than that allowed for the marginal notes in the English Revised Version; and that the Tract Societies be requested to publish an annotated Bible for general use—all which it was thought these Societies would do.

Though the topic for the third day was the important one of it failed to elicit the animated discussion of the previous day, owing no doubt to the fact of the more perfect agreement as to the qualifications for, and methods of, work. Too great distinction was made between ministerial and lay agency, as though ordination conferred or demanded special qualification. A committee, appointed for the purpose, prepared an appeal to the Churches in Europe and America for a large increase in lay missionaries in China—including medical—as well as money to carry on benevolent and other work. A committee was appointed to draw up a similar appeal for ordained missionaries. The evening's lecture was on the Relation of Christianity to Universal Progress.

WOMEN'S WORK.

was the subject for the fourth day. It was ably set forth in all its bearings in eight papers from as many lady missionaries, all discussion of which was relegated to the ladies, the gentlemen at their request retiring. The efficiency of this arm of the service is attested by the papers read, and the stress laid upon it is indicated by the great number engaged in it in China as well as other heathen lands. The ladies adopted a very strong and stirring appeal to their sisters in Christian lands to come to their help in larger numbers in this great and needy field. One evening (with the exception of a few minutes for salutations from several religious bodies) was given to Miss Ackermann, of the W.C.T.U., in which to represent her work.

Under the general heading of

were excellent papers commending the former as an evangelising agency, among both men and women, and leading to the appointment of a committee to consider the various methods in use for the education of the blind and of deaf mutes.

The opium question being introduced by a paper on opium refuges, a lengthy essay was also read on the evils of opium, which led to the appointment of a committee to draft resolutions on the subject. These resolutions were six, the last being an expression of sympathy with the efforts of opium societies to suppress the trade, and a recommendation to them "to continue and increase the agitation for the suppression of the growth and sale of opium in India for the supply of the Chinese market."

The topic of the "Native Church and the Relation of Missions to the Chinese Government" elicited the information that in some provinces and missions great success has been attained in raising up self-supporting, self-governing, and self-propagating churches—in some cases paid helpers being dispensed with altogether, except to evangelise in the regions beyond. But pastors are paid when qualified ones are found. Along with receiving of reports, and much other business, the subjects of each occupied a day of the Conference, the first calling forth some rather heated discussion as to the expediency of teaching English. One essayist insisted that imparting such knowledge was lifting the pupils quite out of the social position to which they had been accustomed. One fact, however, was observable, that some schools, such as the Anglo-Chinese College, at Foochow, as well as the one at Peking, both of which are designed more especially for boys nominally Christian, has enjoyed rich spiritual awakenings, so as to prove a fruitful nursery to the Church. No cases of heathen being converted in any of these schools were cited, though hopes were expressed that this might yet be the case.

Yesterday was so occupied with collateral matters that the two topics for the day, "Comity in Mission Work" and "Ancestral Worship," were not reached. While the Conference photograph was being taken, an accident happened which will render the occasion memorable. The four hundred members, arranged in tiers on a high scaffolding, were precipitated in a heap to the ground, and, but for the good hand of our God upon us, many lives would have been lost. As it was, a few were injured; some seriously, but none dangerously.

The topics for to-day are "Results of Mission Work" and "Outlying Fields." By the kindness of the statistician, I am able to give a summary of statistics:—Foreign missionaries—men, 589; wives, 390; single women, 316; total 1295. Native helpers—ordained ministers, 209; unordained, 1260; female helpers, 180. Medical work—hospitals, 61; dispensaries, 43; patients (during 1889), 348,439. Churches—organised churches, 520; wholly self-supporting, 94; half do., 22; quarter do., 27. Bible distribution (1889)—Bibles, 1454; New Testaments, 22,402; portions, 642,131; total 665,987. Communicants, 37,287; pupils in schools, 16,816; contributions by native Christians, 36,884·54 dollars.

THE SUBJECT OF UNION,

in addition to the general resolutions adopted, took a very practical turn in the closer affiliation of the various families of churches, Monday evening being devoted to that purpose. Thus the different missions of the L.M.S., C.M.S., and American Board held re-unions, and the various branches of Baptists, Presbyterians, and Methodists, each had a family gathering; the seventy of the C.I.M., being together in their new home had such gatherings every day. In regard to real union, perhaps, the one hundred members of the eight Presbyterian bodies represented have made the greatest advancement, just as they have done in their alliance in India, thus paving the way, as is hoped, for approaches to union in the home lands.

The seventy-five Methodists present at the Conference, representing the English Wesleyans, Free Methodist Church, Bible Christians (the latter working in connection with the C.I.M.), Methodist Episcopal, and Methodist Episcopal, South, met at the new parsonage of Rev. C. F. Reid, of the last-named Church. After an hour of hand-shaking and social intercourse, the subject of a closer alliance and co-operation was introduced, and happy and pertinent remarks made by representatives of the different bodies, the progress toward union in Canada, Japan, and England being specially referred to. The only action that seemed feasible at the present time was the uniting in the use of the same hymn-book and the same Chinese periodicals and Sunday-school literature for their work in this land. To facilitate this, a committee was appointed consisting of one from each mission, including the New Connexion Methodists, who had no representative at the Conference. After singing the hymn, "Blest be the tie that binds," the delightful evening was closed with prayer by David Hill.

Unanimous greetings were voted from the sisters and brethren in China to be conveyed to the Methodists of Japan by Dr. W. R. Lambuth, to Singapore by W. Brewster, and to those of India by the writer. W. E. ROBBINS.

SOUL-WINNING AND PRAYER UNION.—Text for July 10 (Ps. xxxiv. 4):—"I sought the Lord, and He heard me, and delivered me from all my fears."

UNIVERSITY EXTENSION.—The third summer meeting of University Extension and other students, at Oxford, will be held in August next. It will be divided into two parts—the first of which will last from August 1 to 12, and the second from August 13 to September 2. This second period will be largely devoted to quiet study, the lectures going into special detail with the subjects then introduced. In addition to the arrangements made by the delegates, facilities will be afforded of attendance upon three courses of theological lectures, one of them in connection with Mansfield College. All correspondence, and applications for tickets, should be addressed to Mr. W. A. S. Hewins, "Summer Meeting" Office, 35, Corn Market-street, Oxford.

Letters from France.

VI.—MORE ABOUT DEAUVILLE.

THE CHILDREN'S FRIEND.

I MUST supplement the letters of my friend, Rev. G. Wainwright, by the following from the lady of whose work he has written, and in which we were all so deeply interested. It was written in acknowledgment of a contribution, and, though not intended for publication, I hope I am not transgressing good manners in sharing it with my readers:—

I have been thanking the Lord again and again for your kind gift, and the rejoicing is double, because for days I have been asking that no money might come if I was not to stay. That important point is settled now, and there remains only to pray for faithful clinging to Him, so that your kind gift may bring a harvest a hundredfold.

Love to God's name shall indeed be my motto. Only Tuesday last I learnt afresh the music of that name. It was in an out of the way lane after an exhausting conflict with one who refuses a Bible, lest she should have to change some of her views. Wearied at heart, I accosted the road-mender (another opponent of former days), and asked if he had read the tracts. He had. "And what is your hope for eternity?" Then came a clear, joyous "On Jesus Christ." Oh, how great the revulsion! The work was all joy at once, because defeat one day means the Lord showing his victory many days after. He couples forgiveness with his care for his great name, and this soothes all misgivings as to mistakes.

As to my children, they continue my delight. They spread my hymns all over the place, even at the card playing! As it is all spontaneous, I pray the Lord to use it even then. They send you their best love back. Twenty-five dirty little faces radiant with joy at having been actually remembered by the kind gentleman. Some of them are learning their forty-seventh verse. "Bless the Lord, O my soul."

THE SAILORS' REST.

Mr. Wainwright mentioned in his Letter IV., the very interesting Gospel work carried on in this hall, one of the memorial stones of which I had the pleasure of laying last year, on behalf of Mrs. Deane Brown, who had generously and largely contributed to it. Not only is it a needed and welcome Rest for English sailors, but some of the parents of the children referred to above, and other French people, mostly of the poorer sort, come to every meeting, and while there is a service once a fortnight in the large Protestant Reformed "Temple," this hall is in continual use. The locality is being opened up by the formation of a new dock, and a road is being made which skirts the hall and leaves a corner plot adjoining it. This piece of ground is offered to Mr. Cook for £300. If he should fail to purchase it, a café will in all probability be built there. Mr. John Cory, of Cardiff, who appreciates the value of the Sailors' Rest, has promised £50, and I cannot but express the hope that the remainder may be subscribed without delay, as the purchase must be made immediately. It certainly appears to me a most desirable and necessary acquisition, and offered at a price within its value. R. C. MORGAN.

THE ATTRACTION OF THE CROSS IN AFRICA.—"Two went to the villages to invite the people, who quickly responded, so that we had a packed meeting on the usual Tuesday night. Over a hundred people were present, counting those outside. The attention was wonderful, and it was a sight worth coming to Africa for, to see these black faces all turned towards our brother as he read them the story of the Crucifixion in their own tongue. They were so responsive, too. The next night a crowd again collected, and we had another splendid meeting. One boy said to another, 'They were sweet words we heard to-night.'" The extract above shows the Cross of Christ has not lost its power and never will, in spite of all the enemies of the pure Gospel at home. Its attractive power to both white and black lies in the fact of the patient, suffering, and loving Saviour "bearing our sins in his own body on the tree" as an atonement for sin, and the great substitute for our guilty race.

American Notes.

(FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

THE New England Evangelistic Association has recently held its third anniversary in Boston. Its reports were encouraging. Several evangelists were sent into country towns, and greatly strengthened feeble churches. Numbers of pastorless pulpits were temporarily supplied, while the Association provided permanent pastors for others. One chief aim of this young organisation is not to start independent meetings where there is great spiritual dearth, but the rather to co-operate with feeble churches, and to aid discouraged pastors by holding special services and adopting the plan of systematic visitation. This Evangelistic Association has its headquarters at 7, Tremont-place, Boston; its officers are New England business-men; its examining committee include several of the most evangelical pastors of the City, and it has the endorsement of the leading evangelists who are not officially connected with it. Evangelists Pratt, Hammond, and Needham, were among the speakers at the late annual meeting.

But, while we rejoice over the good being done, our American Christian life is sadly demoralised. Beyond a merely formal church attendance very few of our prominent men of position and wealth are practically identified with Christianity. A Japanese notable recently made the remark that he thought America had less religion than any other Christian country. And thus he explained himself: He had travelled extensively over the country, had mingled with the most delightful society in the world, had been entertained by prominent people and distinguished officials, not one of whom invited him to a Christian church. "You seem to think," said he, "that your religion is not worth exhibiting." All of which is lamentably true. A stranger may be royally entertained by our wealthy citizens, and pass out of the country with the impression that we are only cultured heathen.

A new alliance has been formed, with headquarters in Chicago, called "The Young People's Methodist Alliance."

The object of this Alliance is to interest young people in the systematic study of the Bible, the catechism, the history, the polity, the biographies, and the missions of Methodism; to aid one another in the attainment of heart purity and in constant growth in grace; to co-operate heartily and loyally with pastors and leaders in the work of Christ; to assist in keeping alive the old-time interest in class meetings and revivals.

Whatever may be thought of pledges, this young Alliance does not mince matters. Certainly our church youth need some restrictions. Our laxity is proverbial. Thus reads the pledge:—

I enjoy, or will earnestly seek, the blessing of heart purity as taught in the Scriptures. I promise to abstain from the use of tobacco and of all intoxicants as a beverage, to refrain from card playing and dancing and from attending the theatre, the opera, the circus, and all other questionable places of amusement. I agree to have stated seasons of private prayer, to pray for my pastor and for the members of the Young People's Methodist Alliance, to study the Bible each day, and to give daily thought to the winning of souls, by personal conversation, letter writing, tract distribution, prayer or other means.

The great interest of the recent Presbyterian General Assembly centered on questions pertaining to Revision. Exciting debate and polemical strife were expected, instead of which a gracious spirit of unity and brotherly love came upon the delegates. The blessed Master hushed the agitation. There had been much earnest prayer for unity and peace. The answer was given, and this great body of able men were kept in warm accord. Revision is provided for on conservative lines. A committee was appointed to draft a new creed; phraseology and technicalities may be modified, but the doctrinal substance of the Confession will remain. The Committee's report will be submitted next year. Meantime harmony prevails.

Visiting Russian Prisons.

II.—MOSCOW.

My first impressions of Moscow were unsatisfactory. The roads are narrow, the streets badly paved and irregular; and the sight of so many thousands of prisoners is most saddening. Here is a large party of them on the march, bound for the huge "Forwarding Prison" of Moscow, preparatory to their journey into Siberia. At the rear came the weak and sickly, who were unable to walk, riding on a tarantas, a cart without springs, and a number of women and children who had elected to go with their relations into Siberia, rather than be left behind. The Governor of Moscow, Prince Galitzin, courteously received us, and gave us the local order permitting us to enter the prisons.

From the Bible Depot we took our Testaments, and a good long drive brought us to the great forwarding prison of Moscow. We found it was just the time when the friends of the prisoners were permitted to visit them, and to say "Good-bye"—possibly for ever. The weary faces of the visitors were more expressive than the appearance of the prisoners, for the latter all wore the prison dress, and their social position could only be guessed; but here were persons well-dressed—most intelligent looking—striving to hide their grief. We did not enter the prison then, but returned later, and commenced our

DISTRIBUTION OF THE SCRIPTURES.

I was accompanied on this journey by Mr. George Hilton, of St. Petersburg, who very kindly left his business, and translated for me. Next morning we took a larger quantity, including copies in Esthonian, Finnish, German, and Hebrew. When they were all distributed, I was astonished and alarmed when the Governor said, "I want fifteen hundred more." I found this prison had 3046 inmates. As we left the place we heard the "tramp, tramp, tramp" of yet another body of heavily ironed prisoners, with a similar contingent of sorrow-stricken women and children, and sick folk bringing up the rear. Many of the men were dressed in long grey overcoats, with a yellow diamond on the back, while one side of the head was closely shaved—which signified that they were bound for Siberia.

The next prison we visited was not so large nor so important a place. It was more like a large ordinary factory than a gaol, and not at all too clean. Moscow prisons do not compare favourably with St. Petersburg. In this place we were again privileged to speak words of life to the poor inmates, and to supply them with copies of the Scriptures.

We were sad at heart as we thought of the 1500 prisoners we were unable to supply; my means did not permit me to do as much as this. When I went back to the Bible Depot they could only supply me with fifteen more copies of the Testament I had been giving away, and reluctantly we were obliged to leave these prisoners without giving them what they wished; inwardly I promised to myself that if the way were made plain they should yet have them. Thank God, five thousand copies have gone into Siberia for Dr. Baedeker to use among the exiles, besides a few hundred I sent there; but what are these among so many? Who is doing the Lord's work among foreign prisons, where there are no Bibles? Sixteen years I have been writing, and trying to stir up God's people, but who, save Dr. Baedeker, has gone forth from England into this untrodden harvest field?

A few days later we were back in St. Petersburg, and I was surprised to find a letter from the Governor of the Litofsky Prison asking me to bring him 356 more Testaments. The following morning, accompanied by one of our English brethren, I took the books asked for, and Finns, Poles, Germans, and Jews, besides Russians, were supplied. Work was stopped throughout the prison; about four hundred men gathered in the great yard, where the Gospel was preached, and then the Books were distributed; but, alas! again we ran out, there being about forty short; these were supplied the next day through the kindness of Mr. W. Gibson, to whom I feel deeply indebted.

I asked the Governor how the murderer referred to in my last letter had been behaving since we were here a fortnight ago. I was anxious to know if his penitence was real. The Governor answered in three words, "Without a fault." We went to his cell, and certainly there was a difference in his appearance. He had lost the wild look, and the officials now had no trouble with him. Asked how he was getting on, he replied, "My sins appal me, but I hope I am stepping upward. I am hoping in His mercy; do let me confess my sins to you." We told him we were not priests, and he must go straight to God. "Yes, I know," he answered, "but the Book you gave me says, 'Confess your faults one to another.'" After a long conversation we left him, having again prayed with him. His sentence is one year in Russia, and eight years' hard labour in Siberia.

I should be glad to hear from any readers who are interested in this work. Chas. Cook.

Hyde Park Hall, London, W.

Dr. Baedeker writes to a friend from Tobolsk on his way to Tomsk, and says:—"The work in the prisons is increasingly interesting. The doors are open wide, and no hindrance is thought of. After we have passed Tomsk we shall enter on new ground. Pray for us."

CITY WORKWOMEN.

Prayer has been abundantly answered in connection with our recent missions, and much precious fruit has been gathered through the ministry of Mr. and Mrs. Harrison. Cheering letters have been received from young women, telling me that they are now, through God's grace, walking in the narrow way. After the mission we had two very happy evenings with "The Model of Tabernacle," with simple Gospel addresses from Old Testament pictures, by Mr. G. Hucklesby. All were thankful for the fresh light upon the Word. Our "Welcome Hall" was full each night, and the blessing received will never be forgotten.

We hope our friends will again remember the need at this time for rest and change for many weary toilers in our great city. I should be glad of votes for a little girl, one of five, of a young widow in a workroom; she seeks admission for this one into the Wanstead Infant Orphan Asylum.—Yours faithfully,

C. Fisher.

Care of Hall-keeper, 186, Aldersgate-street.

Another correspondent writes:—"I have accompanied several of the workers in their visits to factories, and have attended their evening meetings for children and adults. I feel an unbounded admiration for the work done. The visitors are heartily and lovingly welcomed, and their addresses are heard with deep attention; while the simple, earnest prayers are treated with quiet, devout reverence. The girls love to sing, choosing their own hymns. The work is quiet and unostentatious. I wish that ladies who have plenty of time, and who can sing and play, would give a day or two weekly to the work. More flowers from country readers of The Christian would be gladly received by Mrs. Fisher."

The Crystal Palace.—The annual Temperance Fête is to be held at the Crystal Palace on Tuesday next, July 8. Mr. William Forbes will be pleased, as in previous years, to meet preachers and singers at three o'clock at the Bible Stand in the Palace.

THE MILDMAY MISSION HOSPITAL.

A goodly company of friends of the Mildmay work assembled on Saturday in Austin-street, Shoreditch, when the memorial stone of the new Mildmay Mission Hospital was laid by the Countess of Tankerville. The proceedings were presided over by Colonel Morton. A short history of the work was given by Dr. W. Gauld. Bethnal Green was the first of the outlying Mildmay Missions established by Mr. Pennefather more than twenty years ago. Dispensary work speedily proved the need of a hospital, which was in course of time provided.

For thirteen years it has been an oasis of Christian effort in a desert of sin and misery in Bethnal Green. To give some idea of the great boon the hospital has been to the poor, Dr. Gauld mentioned that 4000 patients, among them some Jews, have been treated in it. From 350 to 400 patients are received yearly. In addition, during the years that the hospital has stood, out-patients to the number of over 50,000 have been treated. Moreover, hundreds have been born again, and confessed the name of Christ on leaving, while many have had their dying hours brightened, and the valley of the shadow of death illumined by the glorious presence of the Son of God whom they found while in the Hospital.

For some time a suitable building in a quiet locality has been a desideratum. The need will be supplied by the building now being erected, which will contain fifty beds altogether. Dr. Maxwell spoke in terms of high commendation of medical mission work. After laying the foundation stone, the Countess of Tankerville said: "Let us all pray for God's blessing on all the nurses and patients, yea, that everyone who shall come under this roof for healing may receive the salvation of his or her soul. It is the blessed characteristic of Mildmay that the needs of men's souls are always put before the needs of their bodies, and we can therefore ask for God's blessing on this work with all the more confidence."

Mr. J. E. Mathieson, in whose heart of sympathy the poor and needy have so large a place, and on whom devolved much responsibility in connection with the undertaking, followed with a short statement with regard to finances. He stated that £12,000 are already in hand, but £3000 is still wanted to cover the entire cost. At the suggestion of Mr. T. A. Denny, it was resolved to call the institution "The Tankerville Hospital."

THE OPIUM TRAFFIC.—Chinese Christians of various denominations resident in Hong Kong have sent a petition to Mr. H. H. Fowler, M.P., for presentation to Parliament. The memorial declares that, imported into Hong Kong from India, the drug is flowing into every part of China, and inflicting more harm than tongue can tell. Its prayer is that, for the love of God and human pity, Parliament may pass a stern law "prohibiting forever the importation of opium into Hong Kong and from thence to China, and enjoining all the cultivators of this drug in the British Indian Possessions within a fixed time to turn to the cultivation of something else, and all merchants dealing in it to find some other business."

ALBION HILL HOME, BRIGHTON.—Writing with respect to this excellent Rescue Institution, Rev. R. C. Macdonald, chaplain and secretary (Home Villa, Queen's Park, Brighton), says:—"Mrs. Vicar's death has much affected the well-being of the Home. We have been obliged to ask our bankers for an overdraft of £200, to enable us to meet present wants and probable liabilities. I am trying to secure ten special donations of £10 each and twenty of £5 each, so that at the end of the three months granted to us we may not have to ask for an overdraft again. I have received from the Lord's pursebearers five donations of £5 each towards this object. We are also looking out for a new lady help, and need much prayer, that we may be guided to a woman after God's own heart."

For the Young.

"TIPCAT;" OR, A FRIEND IN NEED.

ANY reader of the London daily papers of June 2 might have seen the report of a curious case, from which I think the boys and girls may learn a lesson or two. It was this. Richard W—— (we will put it so, because it would not be quite kind to give his name in full), only 10 years of age, and whose head hardly reached the top of the dock rail, was brought before the magistrate for "having unlawfully played a game called tipcat in the public street."

Now, as we want to learn our lessons as we go along, we may note here that Richard was a breaker of the law. His offence may not have been a very serious one, but still he had broken the law, which says boys must not play tipcat in the public streets, because it is inconvenient and dangerous to the passers-by. And, dear boys and girls, you and I have broken the law of God. And that is sin. Every time you have disobeyed father or mother, you have sinned, because God's Word says you are to honour and obey your parents. And every time you have told an untruth, or given way to anger, you have sinned and done evil in the sight of God.

But Richard tried very hard to save himself from the punishment due to his offence. The report in the paper tells us that he put his hand into his pocket when the policeman caught him, and pulled out a penny and said: "Here you are, Mr. Policeman; get a half pint with this. Don't summon me." You see he thought he could make up for his offence and get free of the law by paying his penny; but it wouldn't do. And perhaps you have thought that you can make it all right with God for your sins by trying hard to be good, or by turning over a new leaf, or saying your prayers more regularly, or something of that sort. Mind, it is quite right to pray and to try to be good, but don't think these things can put away your sins, any more than Richard's penny could save him from being found guilty and being fined. The law must be upheld, and either he must pay himself, or someone must pay for him. But he could not pay, and when the magistrate fined him 2s. 6d., he could only say: "I have not got the money."

But, although he had not the half-crown, he had a friend, and "a friend in need" he proved himself to be. Another boy, a companion of Richard's, who had given evidence on his behalf, went home to his own money-box, got out the half-crown and came back and paid the fine for him. As the gaoler unlocked the door of the cell and poor Richard came out, his friend called out, "Come on, Dick, I've paid the money." And so Richard was free, because his friend had paid his fine for him.

And this should remind us of the greatest truth of all, namely that the Lord Jesus has "died for our sins according to the Scriptures." God, who knows your hearts and all your thoughts, has found you guilty, and has declared "there is no difference, for all have sinned." And the sentence is death; to be shut out from God's holy presence for ever and ever. But, dear children, what Richard's friend did for him, the Lord Jesus has done for you. He has died for you, and now lovingly asks you to trust Him as your own Saviour, and love and serve Him. This boy only gave his money to rescue his friend, but the Saviour has given his life to deliver us from the wrath to come. Don't you think Dick must have been a very ungrateful boy, if he did not thank his friend and love him better than ever he did before? Will you not then thank the Lord Jesus for dying for you, and trust Him and serve Him for the future?

In conclusion, the points in Richard's case are these. He was found guilty, and the sentence must be carried out. He could not pay the fine, but another paid it for him, and he was set free. And the lessons we learn are these. You have sinned against God, and been found guilty. The sentence is death. But the Lord Jesus has borne it for you, and now beseeches you to be reconciled to God, and to accept eternal life as a free gift. "For the wages of sin is death, but the free gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord" (Rom. vi. 23).

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sun., July 6, Gen xxxiii. 1—16; Mon., July 7, Gen. xxxv. 1—15; Tues., July 8, Gen. xxxvii. 1—18; Wed., July 9, Gen. xxxvii. 19—36; Thurs., July 10, Gen. xxxix. 1—9 and 19—23; Fri., July 11, Gen. xl. 1—11; Sat., July 12, Gen. xl. 12—23.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.—An eight days' mission to children and young people, conducted by Mr. Henry Hutchinson, of the Children's Special Service Mission, has just been concluded at Immanuel Church, West Brixton. From first to last it has been a great success, not only by being well attended, but by the great spiritual results. All who assisted in the mission were struck at the very manifest outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon both young and old, and many confessed to having passed from death to life. As the conductor of the weekly Sunday afternoon children's service, I feel greatly cheered, and thank God for our friend's visit.

Letters to the Editor.

"DRUNK, BUT NOT WITH WINE."

DEAR SIR,—The letter of Mr. Davis on the duty of Christians in relation to political life and action is so sincere in its conviction, and so seductive in its reasoning, that it is, from my point of view, exceedingly dangerous, and needs reply.

One way of recognising its pernicious influence is to realise what the result would be if every Christian followed its advice and abstained from using his voice and vote in politics, and his influence in every philanthropic movement from which those who are not true Christians are not rigidly excluded. The world would soon rot! "Ye are the salt of the earth"; but how can we promote that which our judgment and conscience commend if we refuse to throw the weight of our influence on the side of truth and justice! If we do not check evil and promote righteousness, we are like salt which has lost its savour, and is only fit for the dunghill.

I entirely admit the dangers which lie before us in political life, and there is none more dangerous than that of putting party before principle, and condoning evil or questionable proceedings for the sake of their supposed advantage. But these are tests of our spiritual condition, and are to be overcome, not evaded. Mr. Davis and all of us are enjoying many a privilege won for us by the initiative or earnest struggles of our Christian forefathers. We inherit the civil and religious liberty they strove for. God blessed their efforts, and ours will be blessed also as far as they are in accordance with his will.

I agree with him in the ultimate failure of democracy, and that Theocracy is the only perfect system, and is about to be established. But that does not exonerate us from doing what we can to ameliorate the condition of our fellow creatures, and from using this our talent to forward what is good and to prevent that which helps the devil, like the liquor traffic. To refuse to use this talent because some non-Christians co-operate is to bury it; but, of course, it is not the only talent most of us have, and not to be used in such a way as to hinder us from using others. Nor do I affirm that each must do exactly the same kind of work. There are diversities of operations, but the same Spirit. The Spirit through the members now "letteth" or hindereth the full development of Antichrist and his plans. These members will, no doubt, be removed in the Lord's time, but till then we must "fight the fight, maintain the strife," and not desert.—Yours truly,

A CHRISTMAN POLITICIAN.

DEAR SIR,—Under the above heading you were good enough to insert two letters, one in your issue of June 13, signed "R.," the other in your issue of the 27th, signed "Ebenezer Davis." As one of the class honoured by the notice of your correspondents, I demur altogether to their erroneous conclusions, which the youngest of us engaged in Gospel temperance work can clearly see are not the result of actual experience.

What if we are sometimes, at general and county council elections, obliged to be associated, for the time being, with "Godless men." I can, and do, maintain from actual experience that the grace of God is quite sufficient to preserve us from being led away; a mere professor might, but one who is God-possessed is impervious to all the fiery darts of Satan, no matter in what form they may come. I, with others, helped recently to return to Parliament a gentleman pledged to support local option. That, I maintain, was as much a work for God, as sitting in a luxurious drawing-room singing "Rescue the perishing."

Further, how are good men, like the late lamented Samuel Morley, John Bright, Henry Richard, and many others, to be got into our legislature, without the aid of Christians? Would the betting man and theatre-goer vote for such? Assuredly not; the sneers of both your correspondents at dear and honoured servants of Christ, who are wearing themselves out in their heroic struggles against this State-protected curse, I stop not to notice. It is at once obvious to any who have studied the subject, that if the churches, headed by ministers, were united in their efforts to stamp out this terrible curse, it could soon be done. Thank God, we have the Divine assurance that greater is He that is in us, than he that is in the world. Sustained by such a glorious promise, and also having a Divine earnest within us of its truth and power, we can well afford to fight manfully onward amid the dust and din, whilst such as your esteemed correspondents, "R." and "Ebenezer Davis," stay at home and mind the stuff.

Yours faithfully, ARTHUR SOLOMON.

THE DODS AND BRUCE CASES.

SIR,—I feel compelled to ask you as a matter of fairness to insert a few lines with reference to a letter in your issue of June 20, headed "The Dods and Bruce Cases," and signed "A Free Churchman."

Had the writer confined himself to a dissent from the opinion of your Edinburgh correspondent, that the decisions of the Free Assembly in the cases of Professors Dods and Bruce were satisfactory, his communication might well have passed unnoticed. But he professes to enable your readers to "understand the questions at issue"; and so it is desirable that any who might be disposed to accept his account of "the position of matters," should be warned against doing so. If they take in all that he says, they will not understand but misunderstand.

To enter into details would require far more space than you can give me. It is easy to "state very shortly" extreme and misleading and untenable positions with regard to the Professor's views, such as a "Free Churchman" takes up. But the matter cannot be put on its true footing within the limits of a brief letter.

Allow me simply to make two remarks by way of showing how untrustworthy is your correspondent's representation.

(1.) He plainly implies that Drs. Dods and Bruce "teach doctrines which are in the very teeth of what is taught in the Confession of Faith." That statement is "in the very teeth of" the solemn and reiterated assurances of the Professors that they receive ex animo the doctrine of the Confession. Moreover, the motion finding that the writings of Dr. Dods furnished ground for a libel was supported by a mere fraction of the Assembly; and no motion for a libel on Dr. Bruce was so much as brought forward. If one thing is really "in the very teeth of" another, surely such men as the professors would see and admit it; and such men as formed the overwhelming majority of the Assembly in the one case, and its totality in the other, would see and declare it.

(2.) Your correspondent broadly insinuates that the two parties on this question in the Free Church may be identified respectively with the Moderates and Evangelicals of former days. This is a very unworthy and offensive and most groundless inuendo. Let any one who knows anything of the ministry and the eldership of the Free Church, examine the voting lists, and he will find that the party who supported the view that no further action need be taken, is, to say the least, quite on a par with the other party in its attachment to evangelical truth and its zeal in evangelistic effort. A host of names could easily be given to verify such a statement.

Few, probably, will be moved by a "Free Churchman's" lamentations over the deterioration of "gold," and even of "fine gold," or by his confident assertions that the cause of the agitators is the cause of God. Such words prove nothing. We have the highest authority for believing that the worst things may be done in the imagined interests of piety, and with the Divine Name on the lips: "They shall put you out of the synagogues; yea, the time cometh that whosoever killeth you will think that he doeth God service."—I am, &c.,

CRIMINALS & RELIGIOUS PROFESSION.

"Mr. Ellis asserts that 'in all countries religion, or superstition, is closely related with crime,' and he adds that 'it seems extremely rare to find intelligently irreligious men in prison.'"

SIR,—The truth of the above assertion of Mr. Ellis, quoted by you in your issue of June 20, depends entirely upon what he means by the expression "intelligently irreligious." I suppose a man really without any religion would be properly called an Agnostic, although he might, intelligently enough, deem himself an Atheist or an Infidel. Now the number of prisoners bold enough to call themselves by either of these names is very small. In an experience amongst convicts, of more than ten years, I can only recollect one who was tabled in the column for religion, "Atheist." I am quite aware that the experience of others on this point may contradict mine, but I should be very sorry to agree to Mr. Ellis's statement on this ground, although this particular prisoner was certainly "intelligently irreligious."

It seems to me that there is another way of looking at the assertion. There are some prisoners who are really quite as Atheistic as the man alluded to above, but they are either ashamed or afraid to own it when they enter prison, and consequently they go to swell the ranks of convicted Churchmen, Roman Catholics, or Dissenters. These are the men, I think, that Mr. Ellis has in his mind when he says, "religion or superstition is closely related with crime." But taking religion, as I do, to mean that which binds a man to God, and religious intelligence as the choice of the mind or man after an examination of religious truth, I can only say that I have come across plenty of prisoners who have thought seriously upon religious subjects, and then deliberately thrown religion overboard. These are what I call "intelligently irreligious men," and their number is far greater than Mr. Ellis would have us suppose, and very nearly as large in proportion as the so-called religious prisoners.

A really religious man before conviction as a criminal, is as rare as the avowed Atheist. I can only recall one of these; he always stated that he had been converted, had fallen away, and that his imprisonment was the means in God's good providence of restoring him to the fold. There is a large number of men in prison, I am sorry to own, who "profess that they know God, but by their works they deny Him"; men "holding a form of godliness, but having denied the power thereof"; men "turning the grace of our God into lasciviousness"; but I am quite certain that the number of clever, intelligent, prisoners who never pray, never read God's Word, and scoff at those who do, is almost, if not quite equal to them.

Taking a score of prisoners who have quite lately come under my observation, I will divide them into three classes, such as I have reason to believe they were before their conviction—Class 1. Loud professors (I hope no one doubts what I mean by these), five; Class 2. Intelligently irreligious men, i.e., men who from choice do not wish to, and do not try, to lead a religious life—of these there were seven; Class 3 contains the remaining eight, who, whatever they may have been taught, have never taken the trouble to think the matter over, and some of them (poor fellows) too weak-minded to do so.

Taking another score of men at haphazard, from an old interview book, I find the numbers seven, eight, and five respectively. Perhaps Mr. Ellis would add Classes 1 and 3 together, but even then the rarity is not so great as he states. Intellect and education are not of themselves sufficient to keep a man from crime. Intellect alone will lead to morality, as long as it is politic to be moral, and this is just where the religious hypocrite finds himself. There are very few in these days who have not come under some kind of religious instruction, but this does not necessarily lead to good living; and unless man has a change of heart he is very much like a ship at sea without either compass or rudder.

The "new birth" is the source of real religion. The man who is "born again" examines himself by the law of God, and finds motives as well as actions taken into account, and he uses all the means of grace within his reach to keep the "inner life" more alive. If young men "took heed to their ways according to God's Word" (and this is what a really religious man will do, and just what the oft-called religious man does not do), their "ways" would be so "clean" that no policeman or warder could touch them. My conclusion is that it is by no means rare to find "intelligently irreligious men in prison," and that they are as numerous as the commonly-called religious men.

CONVERSION WITHOUT CONSECRATION.

SIR,—You opened a question in THE CHRISTIAN of which no notice has yet been taken, and on which I should like, if permitted, to say a few words:—"How is it that many movements professing to have, and perhaps at first really having, holiness for their object, have, contrariwise, seen some of their votaries led into sin"?

I belong to a generation of the past, whose influence appears to be fast passing away—to the generation of Newton and Scott, of the Venus and Simeons; and, in contrasting the present phase of religion with theirs, I am often inclined to say "the old was better." It appears to me that there was more depth in their religion, more devotion, more earnestness of spirituality, more root work, more "hatred and revenge" against heart sins. Much that is called conversion now, they would not have thought conversion at all. "Conversion without consecration!" they would have said. "Why, the very essence of conversion is the turning from sin to God. 'Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?' is the very first breathing of the new birth. Conversion without deliverance from sin is very poor conversion indeed!"

Now, we hear it said, numbers come to Christ for salvation, who never come to Him to save them from the power of their sins. "Ah!" they would have said, "surely such cannot be coming to Christ at all; He is a Saviour from sin, not merely from its punishment; we stand in doubt of them!"

We are told now that multitudes really converted know nothing of resting in Christ for sanctification. Where else are they to get it? From their own sinful hearts? From their own feeble resolutions? Ah, they know little of conversion if they do not know "without Me ye can do nothing!"

I would suggest whether the special work of the Holy Spirit is not too much slipped over in the days of "Jesus only"?

Surely unguarded expressions are used respecting "the two natures." "There can be no change in the natural man; the carnal mind is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be. Conversion does not change the nature, it puts within us a new nature, which is to conquer the old." So the man, passionate, proud, evil, is not to expect to become humble, meek, and holy. He must expect no improvement. Does not this open the door to a great deal of carelessness as to heart sins? And it is not what the Bible says: "If any man be in Christ he is a new creation—old things are past away; behold, all things are become new." Can "born again" only mean that a new spirit is inspired to wrestle with the old, which remains unchanged?

On the other hand lies the doctrine of perfectionism. Men stand up and declare they have not sinned for so many months or years. Not sinned! Have they never felt a wrong feeling? Not sinned! Have they loved God faultlessly, trusted Him fully, submitted to Him unreservedly? Not sinned! Have they always felt exactly as they should to all around them? Would the verdict of their own homes be that they had always been as the saints of the Lord? Oh, how low must be their standard of holiness if they can see in themselves so little of sin! And what is a low standard likely to lead to? What wonder is it if they fall? May it not be the only way in which they will learn to know the evil and reality of sin and the purity of God?

Much, too, is said in the present day about assurance, which my forefathers would have thought very unscriptural. Is it supposed that no possible mistake can be made by the professed believer; that to doubt that the coming which unites to Christ has really taken place, is itself unbelief; that there need not be, and ought not to be, any fear of self-deception, no, not even if the conduct and way of life still remain unchristian? Is this Scriptural? When Paul told the Galatians that he stood in doubt of them, would they have been wrong to stand in doubt of themselves? When the message came to the Church of Sardis: "Thou hast a name that thou livest, but art dead," ought their reply to have been: "We are not dead, but living branches of the true vine?"

Time would fail me to mention other matters on which the Christians of my youth differed from the Christians of the present day. It appears to me there is more care for privilege, less for duty; more surface work, less deep jealousy over the inner man; more warmth of feeling and expression, less steadfastness of principle; more hurry, less secret silence of the mind; more talk, less communion with God; more self-consciousness, less profound humiliation and self-forgetfulness before God.

In the writings and hymns of the present day there is more beauty, but do we often find the height of aspiration in such words as those of one of the old hymns?—

On Thee, O God of purity,
I wait for cleansing grace;
None without holiness shall see
The glories of thy face.

In souls unholy and unclean
Thou never canst delight;
Nor shall they, if unsaved from sin,
Appear before thy sight.

But as for me, with humble fear
I would approach thy gate,
Though most unworthy to draw near,
Or in thy courts to wait.

Lead me in all thy righteous ways,
Nor suffer me to slide;
Point out thy path before my face;
My God, be Thou my guide!

Oh, may I ne'er to evil yield,
Defended from above,
And kept, and covered with the shield
Of thine Almighty love.

Surely were there more earnest self-abandonment, more of the cry "Hold Thou me up, and I shall be safe," such complaints as yours, such sad questionings, would be unnecessary. A. H.

ROMANISM.

DEAR SIR,—I notice in THE CHRISTIAN that a lady at Carlisle has ceased to take in your paper, because, when necessary, you denounce the errors of Papacy. Precisely because you do this, I shall, after this week, order from my local newsagent six additional copies beyond the one I have been in the habit of taking.

"Hold fast the faith, quit you like men, be strong."—Yours faithfully,

E. DUNN, Lieut.-Colonel.

SPIRITUAL HYPNOTISM.

SIR,—May I be permitted through your columns to suggest the resemblance between Roman Catholicism and so-called hypnotism, with the difference that the former deals with the soul and conscience, the latter with the mind and will.

By hypnotism it appears that a responsible being voluntarily allows his will to be absorbed into that of another, to the confusion of his mental faculties, and to the loss of all restraint over his actions. After a time what was at first voluntary becomes, it would seem, involuntary and degrading to a naturally reasonable being.

Roman Catholicism causes human beings to hand over their consciences to the care, guidance, and responsibility of a fellow sinner, thereby divesting themselves of their individuality, and subjecting themselves spiritually and mentally to the control of others, over whom, in return, they can exercise none of like kind. Through that control their actions can be, and no doubt frequently are, led into a demoralising course.

Many would start back aghast, as they contemplated the possible consequences of being under the mental sway of another, leaving them without power to regulate their own movements or restrain their emotions. Yet these same persons would not shrink from adopting views that would place their souls and minds under the rule and power of priestly confessors, whatever may be the future terrible consequences of thus yielding up their free will to the power of a fellow sinner.

Your obedient servant, T. H. E.

MILDMAY PARK CONFERENCE,

JUNE 25, 26, and 27, 1890.

SUBJECT—

THE LORD JESUS CHRIST:

(1) The Witness. (2) The Leader. (3) The Commander.

WEDNESDAY MORNING, JUNE 25.

Jesus Christ as a Witness.

IN the loveliest of summer weather, the thirty-fourth Mildmay Conference met this morning within the time-honoured precincts of the Conference Hall. The attendance, it need not be said, was very large; though not so crowded as we have seen it in some former years. We understand that the Conference at Guildford the preceding week had engaged the attention of some of those in the habit of attending the annual gatherings at Mildmay.

Sir S. A. BLACKWOOD was in his accustomed place, though official business called him away before the close of the session. When the hour had struck, he asked for a brief season of silent prayer; and then the assembly sang the well-known stanzas by Mr. Pennefather, with which the praise of the Conferences always begins:—

Jesus! stand among us
In thy risen power,
Let this time of worship
Be a hallowed hour.

Breathe the Holy Spirit
Into every heart;
Bid the fears and sorrows
From each soul depart.

Thus with quickened footsteps,
We'll pursue our way;
Watching for the dawning
Of th' eternal day!

Rev. W. H. BARLOW, vicar of Islington, led the petitions of the gathering in language at once earnest and comprehensive. Another hymn, and then came the Chairman's Opening Address.

AFTER the reading by the audience of "Luther's Psalm," the 46th, Sir S. A. Blackwood said: I think we can hardly do better at the opening of our Conference than turn our attention for a little to this wonderful passage of God's holy Word. I am struck by its contrasts. What do we see? On the one hand, storm and tempest. We seem to hear the rumbling of the earthquake, and the rolling of the thunder. The waves are roaring and the tempests are howling. The shout of battle is heard, and the flames are seen. All is disturbance, tumult, commotion, uproar. Then, in the midst of it all, there comes the gentle ripple of the river of the water of life, with its smooth stream between the green pastures, inviting to sweet stillness and rest. The stream, clear as crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God and of the Lamb. The tempest is hushed; the earthquake subsides, and all is still. For the voice of Jehovah is heard. He utters his voice: "Be still, and know that I am God."

No wonder that this psalm gave Luther such confidence in his supreme struggle against the world, the flesh, and the devil. And no wonder that in all ages it has been one of the parts of God's Word to which his servants, in times of trouble and commotion and conflict and tumult, have turned for comfort, for counsel, and for encouragement. And it seems to me that it is a specially needful and appropriate one at such times as these. Many of God's people, I am sure, are feeling the rush of life, the disturbances in society, the convulsion of men's minds, the roaring of the sea and the waves; "perplexity—men's minds failing them for fear; looking at the things that are coming upon the earth;" for the powers of heaven are being shaken, and the foundations of the earth seem out of course; the feverish excitement in the world, whether it be the world of politics, or of commerce, or of mere social existence; the rising of class against class; men's hands stretched out against each other. Even in the activities of Christian life there seems to be something of the contagion of the restlessness that is all around. People sigh for the quiet days of the past, as they seem to think at least. Many are deeply conscious of this. We are busy people, many of us. Large numbers here know what it is to be immersed in necessary duties, in scenes of commerce, of politics, and other lines of life and work. In Christian service, too, there are the demands that come—the going hither and thither; the busying oneself more and more in active service for Christ—all these raise much mental disturbance. There seems such a commotion in the very atmosphere around us, and we long for quiet—for the absolutely necessary quiet, if we are to serve God acceptably.

The outward commotion may not cease. Nay, it may increase. People are apprehending it. The world seems going so fast, are rising so rapidly. The strifes without, the dissensions within the Church. The forsaking of old standards, and the turning aside or being blown aside by winds of doctrine. No one who takes note of these things can fail to feel an increasing longing for quiet. Therefore, as we see these things, we feel inclined to question whether the ground is after all firm under our feet; and we are tempted to doubt whether those in whom we have put our trust are still worthy of it. As one said to another: "Where is So-and-so to-day?" "I have not seen him for six months, and I cannot tell you." The reply was: "I have not seen him for six days, and I do not know what he holds now." Men are changing very rapidly. These are times of anxiety, and therefore times when the children of God do well to meet together in conferences, to have times of quiet. We thank God for the multiplication of such occasions; unless they are carried to excess by those who frequent them—let us be careful of that. But how sweet it is to turn to such a passage as this, and see that, while our God recognises all these outward commotions and tumults, He has a word for us: "Be still, and know that I am God." While, on the one hand, we see the earth being removed, as described in the second verse, in the fifth we read of the city of God that "she shall not be moved." Whilst we see earthly things carried into the midst of the sea, we see also the Rock of Ages: "God is in the midst of her; she shall not be moved. God shall help her, and that right early." Whilst the waters roar and are troubled, the gentle river of the water of life flows on undisturbed. The Lord Himself is a broad river, in whom his people may ever abide; by the side of whose banks they may lie down and take their rest, as though all were absolutely calm around them.

It is well, therefore, at the opening of the Conference, when there may be much, as we have often said, in the surroundings, the succession of meetings, the successive utterances of friends, to disturb, we do well to be reminded that above all things it is essential that we should be still, and know that He is God. That is the knowledge we want, and that God can give us, though all things around us are disturbed; "though the earth be dissolved and clean broken down and carried away, Thou remainest."

SOME ENSAMPLES.

We meet with some instances of stillness in the Word of God. In Exod. xiv. we read that Moses said unto the people, "Stand still, and see the salvation of the Lord, which He will show to you to-day." God could not, so to speak, work and save while the people were rushing about in tumult. "Stand still; be quiet," says Moses. You can imagine the tumult of the millions in their excitement and alarm. So he says: "Keep quiet; the Lord is going to do it all. Stand still, and look; that is all you have got to do at the present moment. You have not got to show the Lord how to work against Pharaoh; the Lord will do it for you."

There is another instance specially appropriate, as it seems to us, to-day (1 Sam. ix. last verse): "Samuel said to Saul, Bid the servant pass on before us, but stand thou still awhile that I may show thee the word of God." "Do not be thinking so much about service for the moment. Work is all right, but there is something better even than service just now. Let us be still." What for? "That I may show thee the word of God." So to-day, when our brethren will speak to us of the Lord Jesus Christ as the Witness—the True and Faithful Witness—it comes to me, as I fancy it comes to you, as a message from on high: "Stand thou still, that I may show thee the word of God." When a witness speaks, there must be silence in the court; and when He speaks, witnessing in ways, perhaps, of which we know nothing yet, witnessing of things within, and things without, oh for an inward quietness, that we may hear the word: "My people shall dwell in quiet resting-places, and in peaceable habitations, and in sure dwelling-places." Therefore, I venture to commend to you as I take to myself this blessed command: "Be still." "Study to be quiet." Then we can go forth to our duties, carrying with us the secret of quiet—the realised presence of God—into the busiest scenes.

There are in this loud, stunning tide
Of human care and crime,
With whom the melodies abide
Of the everlasting chime;
Who carry music in their heart,
'Mid dusky lane and wrangling mart;
Who ply their daily task with busier feet,
Because their secret souls a holy strain repeat.

The Chairman closed by reading a letter to Mrs. Pennefather from a Mildmay worker at the hospital at Amritzar, India, expressing great thankfulness for the access of spiritual blessing received from reading the printed list of subjects for the Conference; dealing as they do so much with the Master Himself.

Captain CHAPMAN having offered prayer, the Chairman gave expression to the general disappointment that Dr. Adolph Saphir was unable to give the first address, as announced. He is in poor health, and has been advised to abstain from public work for some months. Sir S. A. Blackwood said that his absence was much regretted, and prayer would be made for his speedy restoration to health.

Christ's Witness to the Jew.

BY REV. JOHN WILKINSON.

I SHALL not take up time by apologising for the position I am called to occupy; especially because our beloved brother, Dr. Saphir, is not only a Jew, but his address to-day was to take something like this form—directing attention to the Lord Jesus Christ as a witness to the Jew; to be followed by those who will speak of Him as a witness to the Church and to the world. So that I propose to confine my remarks in the passages I quote chiefly to the first aspect of this question: Jesus as a witness to the Jewish nation.

A passage which is in my mind has been giving me unspeakable comfort during the last few weeks, and I pass it on to you. "If any man serve Me, him will my Father honour." We wish to serve the Lord Jesus Christ here, because we covet the honour which God guarantees to give to those who serve his beloved Son. The passage which has been quoted by our Chairman is a sort of key passage to what we have to say. We are to stand or sit still while we hear the voice or the word of the Lord. I propose to speak briefly on this subject, under two aspects: first, the character and credibility of the witness; and, secondly, Christ's testimony. If we are to commit our salvation and our blessing in time and in eternity to one person, it is very important that we should know as much as possible of his character; and we are called upon to commit our interests for time and eternity to this One we are speaking about to-day: a Person who appeared in our world eighteen hundred years ago; who walked about and talked with people as a man, and was a man; and yet the most extraordinary Man that ever walked this earth, or spake to human beings. As we are called to commit our eternal interests to that Person, we want to know all that can be known about Him, that we may feel we are perfectly safe to all eternity in trusting our interests to Him.

THE CHARACTER OF THE WITNESS.

What and who is a witness? A witness is one who knows what he tells, and tells what he knows. So it is said, "We speak that we do know, and testify that we have seen." That is the very simple definition of a witness. He is not a sermoniser, a lecturer, or a preacher, but one who simply testifies to what he knows. All the knowledge that we get of this Person is founded upon the Word of God, so that we have intimations in the Bible, very frequently, as to what sort of a Person this is of whom we are speaking to-day.

We find in Jeremiah, farback in prophecy, the question asked, in a passage which speaks of the priestly and kingly work of this Person: Who is this that has pledged his heart's blood to render approach to God possible? It is in chapter xxx. 21. We have not time to expound it, but I call attention to the three words, "Who is this?" as an inquiry far back in Old Testament prophecy. Then, when this Person appeared in our world, we have that inquiry made, as He enters Jerusalem. As the whole city is moved on his entry into the metropolis of Palestine, the question is repeated, "Who is this?" When He pronounces the forgiveness of sin upon one who needed it, the inquiry is again made in Matthew and in Luke, "Who is this that forgiveth sins also?" The inquiry has been going on all along the ages, and is still very frequently made; it is becoming the great question of the age:

WHO IS JESUS CHRIST?

Men will be found discussing Jesus Christ right away to the time that He comes back again in the glory. He will have to answer the question Himself, before we shall fully understand who He is. It is the hearing heart that gets to know more of Jesus now, as much as can possibly be gained; but the inquiry will be pursued right up to the Second Advent, as asked in Isa. lxiii., "Who is this that cometh from Edom, with dyed garments from Bozrah?" And He answers the question Himself, "I that speak in righteousness, mighty to save. Wherefore art Thou red in thine apparel, and thy garments like him that treadeth in the winefat? I have trodden the winepress alone; and of the people there was none with me: for I will tread them in mine anger, and trample them in my fury; and their blood shall be sprinkled upon my garments, and I will stain all my raiment. For the day of vengeance is in mine heart, and the year of my redeemed is come"—the national and spiritual redemption of the nation to which He belonged.

Our blessed risen Lord said that not only did the Old Testament Scriptures testify of Him, but that the Jews received those Scriptures as Divine. Moreover, those Scriptures coming through members of their own nation, the Jews were the less excusable for rejecting Him of whom the Scriptures testified. We find our blessed Lord saying that Moses, the Prophets, and the Psalms testify of Him, and in one passage, you recollect, He says "all the prophets," so that, putting the two passages together, as they come from the lips of our blessed risen Lord, we have Moses, all the Prophets, and the Psalms, testifying concerning Him.

WHAT IS THEIR TESTIMONY?

Moses testifies of Him as the woman's seed (intimating his miraculous birth), who should bruise Satan's head; then as Shiloh to whom should be the gathering of the peoples; then testifying, on the authority of God, that a Prophet should be raised up, like unto himself. No other person has ever lived on this earth, like Moses, but the Lord Jesus Christ. Our Lord was like Moses in five points, which we have not time to dwell upon, and can only mention: He was a Redeemer, a Lawgiver, a Mediator, a Prophet, a King. No other person that ever lived upon the earth has been like unto Moses in those five points. Some have had one office, some others, but none have had them all. We have Samuel bearing his testimony that the throne and kingdom shall be established for ever. Isaiah speaks of Him as the Branch of Jehovah, and yet as Jehovah's Servant, his name Wonderful, Counsellor, Mighty God, Everlasting Father, Prince of Peace, on whom iniquity is laid, and whose stripes heal. Jeremiah bears testimony to Him as the righteous Branch of David, and also as Jehovah Tsidkenu. Ezekiel testifies to Him as the Good Shepherd seeking the lost and straying sheep of the House of Israel, and gathering the scattered flock of Israel. Daniel speaks of Him as the Messiah cut off though not for Himself, and, at the same time, testifies of Him as coming in the clouds of heaven, to establish a kingdom which shall never be destroyed. Hosea testifies of Him as David their king, and God's Son called out of Egypt. Joel testifies of Him as Jehovah the hope of his people, and the strength of the children of Israel. Amos testifies of Him as the raiser of the tabernacle of David which had fallen down.

Jonah pictured his death and resurrection, and Israel's restoration and mission. This may perhaps need a word of comment. We do not always find Jonah referred to as picturing the restoration and mission of Israel. Israel's mission is to bless the world, as an instrumentality. They ought to have accepted Christ eighteen hundred years ago, and gone straight off to bless the world; but they have been disobedient, like Jonah, and, like him, they have been thrown into a troublesome sea, the sea of the nations, and they have found it a stormy sea for eighteen hundred years. The Gentile nations will, by-and-by, do for the Jews what the fish did to Jonah. Then will the Jewish nation start the mission it ought to have started at the first advent, under the second advent of our blessed Lord; and the Gentiles will heed what converted Jews will have to say to them, as a message from their reigning Messiah. Then we have Micah bearing testimony to his birthplace at Bethlehem, his rule over Israel, his coming from the days of eternity, the glory and peace of his reign. We have Nahum's prophecy of good tidings. Habakkuk says that the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea.

Zephaniah testifies to Him as King of Israel, and as Jehovah in the midst of his people; Haggai as the Desire of all nations; Zechariah as "my Servant the Branch," the Man whose name is the Branch, whose purpose, by his people, is to open a fountain for the cleansing of their sin, and who becomes King over all Israel; Malachi, as the Messenger of the Covenant, suddenly coming to his temple, and whose name, from sunrise to sunset, is to be great among the Gentiles.

THE PSALMS TESTIFY OF HIM.

The testimony of the second Psalm to Him is as God's Son who gives blessing to all who trust in Him; the sixteenth, as God's Holy One who sees no corruption; the twenty-second, as dying by crucifixion, a Roman death; at the same time testifying to the inspiration of the Scriptures; for no one but God knew at that time, when the Psalm was written, that the Jews would be under the power of Rome at the birth and death of our blessed Lord. It also tells of the disposal of his garments; and the two cries—the cry of the sufferer, at the opening of the Psalm: "My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken Me?" and the cry of the conqueror, at the close of the Psalm, the results of that wonderful work in blessing to Israel and throughout the world, "All ye, the seed of Jacob, glorify Him; and fear Him, all ye the seed of Israel," is between the suffering and the glory. Then you have in the same Psalm, "All the ends of the world shall remember and turn unto the Lord: and all the kindreds of the nations shall worship before Thee. For the kingdom is the Lord's: and He is the Governor among the nations." Psalm xlv. bears testimony to Him as the God whose throne is for ever, and as the One whom God anoints with gladness above his fellows. Psalm lxxii. bears testimony to his dominion from sea to sea and from the river unto the ends of the earth. Psalm xl. speaks of Him as the One who delights to do God's will and to fulfil what is written of Him in the volume of the Book. Psalms xvi., xxii., and xl. testify of his suffering; Psalms xlv., lxxii., and cx., of the glory that is to follow. Moses, Prophets, and Psalms bear this wonderful testimony to this wonderful Person. Inspired Jews searched, "what manner of time the Spirit of Christ which was in them did signify"; but the Spirit of Christ is the Holy Spirit of God. God testified of Christ through Jewish prophets, to his Sonship, to his deity, to his incarnation, to his atoning death, to his resurrection, to his ascension, to his exaltation, to his return, and to his glorious reign on this earth. These are general and distinguishing features of the Messiah, and of the Old Testament testimony to the character and credibility of this Witness.

Now let us, for two or three minutes, individualise and identify this Person with Jehovah. It is not out of place, in connection with this subject, to get to know as much as possible about the dignity, the to whom we are called to commit, and to whom most of us have committed, our interests for time and eternity. We will individualise for a few moments passages of Scripture, and identify this Person who is spoken of in all these varied forms of testimony on Divine authority, throughout Moses, the Prophets, and the Psalms, and see if we cannot, on the authority of Scripture, trace Him distinctly as Jehovah.

You will recollect that there are different angels in the Word of God. Some angels we can get to know very familiarly. There is what is called the interpreting angel in the prophecies of Zechariah; but there is another Angel, an uncreated Angel, who takes the honours and name of Jehovah. We will just glance at half a dozen passages for a moment.

We notice the Angel Jehovah in Gen. xvi.—the Angel of the Lord. When his communication was made to Hagar, "she called the name of the Jehovah that spake unto her" (not the name of the angel, she does not mention the word angel at all), "Thou God seest me"; or, as the Jews more correctly render it, "Thou art God visible to me." That is a Jewish translation of that remarkable passage, however it embarrasses them in Scripture interpretation when they seek to get rid of the Messiahship of Jesus. We pass on to Gen. xviii., where three messengers from heaven appear to Abraham. His eye is fixed on One —only One. He does not say "gentlemen," or "my lords," but "my Lord." He speaks only to One, who develops into the Person who promises a child to Sarah, and then develops into the Person with whom Abraham pleads for the cities of the plain. "Shall I hide from Abraham that thing which I do?" Then, at the end of the chapter, you find that Jehovah went up from speaking, or communing, with Abraham, and the other two went on to Sodom. Pass on to Gen. xxii., and you find the scene of Abraham offering Isaac. You find the Angel of the Lord, the Angel of Jehovah, as the Jews termed Him, called to Abraham out of heaven, and said, "By Myself have I sworn that I will bless thee." Gen. xxx., xxxi., xxxii. give us incidents in Jacob's history. We find, on one occasion, it is said that a Man wrestled with him. This is the same Jehovah Angel. He is called Man for the first time in Scripture. "I am the God of Bethel," said this Angel of Jehovah. We pass on all through Joshua, until we come to Judges vi., where we find this same Jehovah Angel, the Jehovah Shalom in Gideon's history.

We pass from that to the last passage on the subject. It is necessary, in these days, to strengthen the faith of even the Lord's children, in the deity of the Lord Jesus Christ, as well as in the atoning character of his precious death. We can identify the Angel a little more closely as He comes to Manoah's wife, who is to have a child, and tells how she is to order the child. She tells her husband about it, and he is so impressed that he begs in prayer that the Messenger may repeat the news in his hearing? The Angel comes back, but does not go to Manoah, but to his wife. She calls her husband, saying that the Messenger is back again, and Manoah is to come and see for himself. The first question Manoah asks this Messenger from heaven is, "Art Thou the Man who spake with the woman?" What is the reply? "I am." Then, says Manoah, "I should like to know your name." Now, the Old Version seems to give us the idea that he was not to pry into God's secret. Nothing of the kind. There was nothing to conceal. We have it in the Revised Version, "Why dost thou ask after my name, seeing it is Pele." It is a Hebrew word that anybody unfamiliar with the guttural sounds of the Hebrew tongue may well pronounce. It is easy to remember. Pele is the name of this one who answers to the name-term of man, but is

THE JEHOVAH ANGEL.

We connect that with Isa. ix., and find the same name there given: "Unto us a child is born"—the human nature and the Divine nature nearly always lie side by side in strictly Messianic passages, "His name shall be called"—name describes nature, character—"Wonderful, Counsellor, the Mighty God, the Everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace." It is very beautiful to notice, beloved friends, in the study of Christ in the Old Testament Scriptures, that they so harmonise, in every point, with the suffering One; and they will by-and-by with the reigning One. It is easy to perceive by careful study of the Old Testament, which should not be neglected, but prayerfully studied from beginning to end, that the Messiah of prophecy is the Jesus of history.

Let us look at four photographs of our blessed Lord in four experiences; and we find them all under the term "Branch," one single word, in the Old Testament. I cannot describe in words the joy that my heart received to overflowing, when I discovered in the study of the Scriptures, a few years ago, this wonderfully interesting point, that the four photographs given, of our blessed Lord, in the Gospels, are given under one word, in Old Testament Scripture, the word "Branch." Matthew represents Jesus as the Son of David, the King of Israel. "I will raise up unto David a righteous Branch, and a King shall reign and prosper," with a genealogy running up to Abraham. The Servant photograph is in the Gospel by Mark. No genealogy is needed for a servant, only a character from his last place. When our blessed Lord went upon his Messianic work, at the Jordan, He got a character from his Father, "This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased." He was not banished to the planet of earth because of misconduct, but He came on the divine, blessed errand from his Father, to recover the human race to God on the basis of the atoning work of his own most precious blood. Now, we have Him, under that aspect, in Zechariah's prophecy, "My Servant, the Branch." Then you have, in Luke's photograph, the Son of Man aspect, chap. vi., "Behold the Man whose name is the Branch." It is very interesting to bear in mind, beloved friends, that five hundred years or more before Pilate had brought out Jesus, and said, "Behold the Man," the Father had said, "Behold the Man whose name is the Branch." Thus in Luke we have a genealogy, as Son of Man, running up to Adam, and corresponding with "the Seed of the woman," as well as the Child of a Jewish virgin. Thus, in St. John's Gospel, we have the deity of our blessed Lord, but with no genealogy there. And we find Isaiah, in chap. iv., speaking of that aspect, and giving a photograph under the term "Branch." "In that day shall the Branch of the Lord be beautiful and glorious, and the fruit of the earth shall be excellent and comely, for them that are escaped of Israel;" referring to the second advent and the blessed humanity which was too low for the Jews at Christ's first advent, and the Deity which was too high for them. But they shall be offended with neither the one nor the other at the second advent.

I need not pursue that subject further, except just to say one thing which is exceedingly interesting. It is well to be as familiar with this Person as possible; and, though this of which I shall speak is a little thing in itself, it is very pretty. You notice, then, that before the incarnation, when God spake, He said, "Abraham, Abraham," "Moses, Moses," "Samuel, Samuel"; and have you not noticed that, when He came down here in the lowly position of the Man of sorrows, He did not alter his style of conversation: "Simon, Simon, Satan hath desired to have you that he may sift you as wheat, but I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not." "Martha, Martha, thou art cumbered with many things, but one thing is needful." When He talks from the glory, it is in the same way: "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou Me." Here, then, we identify the Jehovah, our blessed Lord Jesus Christ.

I must leave the second part of my subject untouched; but I will occupy a minute or two upon

THE TESTIMONY OF THE WITNESS.

"For this cause came I into the world, that I should bear witness unto the truth." The question all through the ages, not only eighteen hundred years ago, but to-day also, is, "What is truth?" God shall answer—"Thy Word is truth." The Word of God is truth. Christ has come, then. To do what? To speak the truth; to be the Truth also. He speaks the truth, and is the Truth. He speaks the Word of God, and is the Word of God. He tells the way to life, and is the Way Himself. He brings life, and is Life. He reveals the Father, the Father's view of sin, and the Father's way of salvation. The Jews had lost the knowledge of God. I must dwell upon that for a moment. They had lost the knowledge of God; as it is stated in the Old Testament, "Truth is fallen in the street, and equity cannot enter." "They know not Me," God says. Jesus says, "They know not Him that sent Me." The rabbi had taken the place of God, and the traditions of men the place of the commandments of God. The Jews had lost the knowledge of God; and Jesus came to reveal the Father. They had lost the knowledge of their own Scripture, and they taught for doctrines the commandments of men. God, in the Old Testament, said, "Their fear toward Me is taught by the precept of men." The Talmud then had taken the place of the Scriptures, and the rabbi had taken the place of God. And Jesus testifies, when the Jews say to Him, "We are Abraham's seed," "I know that ye are Abraham's seed, but not his children"—a distinction which I need not dwell upon—"or you would do the works of Abraham. Ye are of your father the devil, for his works ye do."

Is there no parallel to this in Christendom to-day? The true knowledge of God had been lost among the Jews; and Jesus came to reveal the Father, and to make God known to them. The meaning of Scripture was lost in the traditions of men. Are we not losing the knowledge of God, by the denial of the true Godhead of Christ? Christendom is becoming as corrupt as were the Jews eighteen hundred years ago. As the Jews ripened in ignorance of God, in denial of the deity of Christ, and the inspiration of the Scriptures, and in the traditions of men put in place of the Word of God, are we not ripening in Christendom for the fuller judgments than those which came upon the apostate Jewish nation? The apostasy of the Jews, while keeping up the form of religion, eighteen hundred years ago, rendered necessary the first advent of Christ; and the apostasy of Christendom

WILL RENDER ABSOLUTELY NECESSARY

the second advent. His testimony was against Pharisaism, against all hollowness in religion, against all unreality. His heaviest denunciations were against these things in worship and service. Have we nothing similar to them now? Let us search ourselves and our work, in that respect.

I close with the last testimony of our blessed Lord, and it was to the Jew: "Behold, I come quickly." May our hearts be in such loving sympathy with all that concerns the glory of Emmanuel that we may say, not as a matter of form, but from the depths of lowly and loving hearts: "Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly; set everything right, and reign in Mount Zion and before thine ancients gloriously."

He is coming: and the tidings
  Are rolling wide and far.
As light flows out in gladness
  From yon fair morning star.

He is coming; and the tidings
  Sweep through the willing air,
With hope that ends for ever
  Time's ages of despair.

Old earth from dreams and slumber
  Wakes up, and says, "Amen";
Land and ocean bid Him welcome,
  Flood and forest join the strain.

He is coming; and the mountains
  Of Judea ring again;
Jerusalem awakens,
  And shouts her glad Amen.

He is coming; wastes of Horeb
  Awaken and rejoice:
Hills of Moab, cliffs of Edom,
  Lift the long-silent voice.

. . . .

Sons of Gentile-trodden Judah,
  Awake, behold, He comes!
Landless and kingless exiles,
  Reseek your long-lost homes.

Back to your ancient valleys,
  Which your fathers loved so well;
In their now crumbled cities
  Let their children's children dwell.

. . . .

For He, thy true Messiah,
  Thine own anointed King,
He comes, in love and glory
  Thy endless joy to bring.

Yes, He thy King is coming
  To end thy woes and wrongs,
To give thee joy for mourning,
  To turn thy sighs to songs.

. . . .

The stain and dust of exile
  To wipe from thy weary feet;
With songs of glorious triumph
  Thy glad return to greet.

I thought it would be a fitting close to my brief address, this morning, on the testimony of Jesus to the Jew, to give you those few precious words appropriate to the subject, from the pen of our sainted brother, the late Dr. Horatius Bonar, whose voice we have often heard, with the greatest edification to God's saints, from this platform.

Sir S. A. BLACKWOOD commended a little publication called "The Church of the Firstborn," by the late Rev. W. Pennefather, which mentions, he said, very briefly, the principles on which this Conference took its rise. This little book has been reprinted, and may be had of the publishers in Mildmay Park; price ninepence. Many would like to have such a memento of the Conference, and reminder of its founder, who wrote such utterances of the truth of God as it contains.

Colonel MORTON read out and presented in brief audible petition requests for prayer on behalf of Christian work at Peshawur, in India, just now in difficult circumstances; on behalf of Dr. Pentecost's coming evangelistic mission to India; and for Dr. Baedeker's work of visitation in Siberian prisons.

Christ's Witness to the Church.

REV. J. BARNES LAWRENCE.

I COULD not help thinking it exceedingly suggestive that the tune to one of the first hymns we sang was the National Anthem. I am going to speak, by God's help, about the Lord Christ as Witness for the Church. But I notice that the Scripture lays special emphasis on the fact that He who is the Witness is also the King. If you turn to John xviii. 37, you will find that our Lord insists clearly on that point. "Pilate therefore said unto Him, Art Thou a King then? Jesus answered, Thou sayest I am a King. To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world, that I might bear witness to the truth." The Lord who stands to bear witness is a King. We have a King in the witness-box to-day; let there be silence in the court, as our Chairman has suggested. Let every heart lift itself to Him. In the first chapter of the Apocalypse we read, in the same connection: "He is the faithful Witness, the First-begotten from the dead, and the Prince of the kings of the earth." Yes, Jesus Christ is in the witness-box to-day; and there is this difference between Him and all the other witnesses that have ever given their testimony: that He is the only one among all these millions who speaks "the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth."

I notice that when our Lord bears testimony for the Church, He usually first of all bears witness to Himself. That is noticeable in the four Gospels, and we can understand it. The connection between the Master and the servant, between the Lord and his Church, is so close, so intimate, and so inseparable, that it is, so to speak, impossible for Him to bear testimony to the Church without first bearing witness to Himself. Let me take two or three points in this witness.

In John x. 9, our Lord, speaking to his own sheep and of his own sheep, says: "I am the door." I remember a friend pointing out to me years ago

WHAT A DEEP SIGNIFICANCE

"the door" must have had to the Jew. It told him first of all of salvation. It reminded him of the blood-sprinkled lintel and door-posts when his ancestors came out from the land of Egypt, and when God would take them to the land prepared for them. The door testified to the Jew, not merely of salvation, but of service. You recollect how the servant who resolved to abide with his former master took his place by the door-post, and had his ear bored through with an awl in token of perpetual, blessed service. The door-post would also speak to the Jew of provision, of sustenance. For on it, in his happy Canaan days, were written the commandments of the law. They were told to write them on their door-posts and on their gates.

When our Lord here testifies to his Church, He begins by saying, "I am the door"; and He there testifies to those three things of which the door spoke to the Jew in the old dispensation. "By Me if any man enter in, he shall be saved." There is a personal salvation, and a personal Saviour. "I am the Door." It is possible that someone may be here, within these doors to-day, who has not sheltered himself behind that Door. Remember, whatever blessing or witness Christ may have to you, this is the first—"I am the Door; by Me if any man enter in, he shall be saved."

SERVICE.

Then, in the next place, He speaks of service: "He shall go in and out." When I was young with my Bible, I used to wonder what that meant—if it was possible for any man to go in and out of a state of salvation—one day saved, and another day not saved. Those were times in which I looked to my own feelings as evidence of salvation. Surely he who goes in and out of the door is the servant. It is one thing to go in, but it is a still more blessed thing to go in and out; the door opens for the servant to go on the Master's work. It sometimes costs something to go in at that door; but, be sure of this, it costs more to be able to go both in and out. I was speaking to one only the other day, who told me that he went in at that door, but it cost him a great deal. When he was there, he found the life he led was not a satisfactory life. He felt he must bring it before the Lord, before he could do any service. He saw he must give up his business, if he were indeed to be a servant of the Lord. The Lord said to him, as it were audibly,

"IT IS BEER OR THE BIBLE."

To his friends he seemed to be utterly destroying himself. He gave up a lucrative business; but he said to me, with a bright smile: "I am the Lord's free man to-day." He could go in and out in the Master's service. His service is perfect freedom—not from but in service.

The third point, corresponding to the Old Testament teaching, is, "He shall go in and out, and find pasture," where other people can find none. The whole world becomes different to him whose ear is bored as a servant. To him in the words of the hymn:—

The heaven above is deeper blue;
  The earth beneath is brighter green;
And something lives in every hue
  That Christless eyes have never seen.

But there is one place of pasture, above all others, and that is the Word itself. He who can say, "the Lord is my Shepherd" is the man who can say, "I shall not want. He maketh me to lie down in green pastures, and leadeth me beside the still waters." So the first witness of Christ to the Church is this: all her satisfaction, whether for salvation, for service, or for daily provision, lies in Himself.

THE VINE AND THE BRANCHES.

I turn over a page or two of my Bible to John xv., and I see the Lord saying, "I am the true Vine." There are some who think that as He spoke He caught sight of the golden vine that adorned the gate of the temple; possibly He did. I will only mention two thoughts in connection with this; they are both very familiar, but we should never forget them. "I am the Vine"; and here is his witness to the Church: "Ye are the branches." Remember, first, that the branch is always entirely dependent upon the vine." In verse five of the same chapter, our Lord says: "He that abideth in Me and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit; for without Me ye can do nothing." How much work is being done, yet how little is being accomplished, just for want of this. "Apart from Me...nothing."

ADD A THOUSAND NOTHINGS TOGETHER,

the result is nothing. In ver. 7 we read: "Abide in Me." That is not, as some think, a mere sentimental looking to Christ. It is a very practical matter indeed. The words in the same verse are most important. "If ye abide in Me and my sayings abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will and it shall be done unto you." When I turn to 1 John ii. 24, I find the Lord saying to his Church: "Let that therefore abide in you which ye have heard from the beginning...ye also shall abide in the Son and in the Father."

Then notice in ver. 6 of this same chapter (John xv.) that solemn word: "If a man abide not in Me, he is cast forth as a branch and is withered; men gather them and cast them into the fire, and they are burned." I used to think that there was a possibility of God's children being finally cast away. I did not see—as some here may possibly not have seen—that the emphasis is upon the word "men." The believer who is not abiding in Christ is like the salt that has lost its savour; it is trodden under foot of men. The world that mocks nevertheless looks carefully to see whether we bring forth the fruits of righteousness. If we do not, men gather us, as it were, and cast us into the fire. It is a sad day for the Church when Pharaoh can find fault with Abraham; when the sons-in-law can say to Lot, "Thou mockest"; when the Philistines can say to David, "He is a mere madman."

The second great truth I want to emphasise in connection with Christ as the Vine and the Church as the branches, is this: As the branches are entirely dependent on the Vine, so is the Vine dependent on the branches in this world. You remember how, in Ezek. xv. (which I think should always be taken in connection with John xv.), God asks the prophet: "Son of man, what is the vine tree more than any tree?" The answer is: "It is no better." You cannot make a wooden peg out of it. But the Lord in his humility takes this as a figure of Himself. "I am the Vine." And Christ, so far as this world is concerned, is dependent upon the branches. Men do not gather grapes from the stock;

THEY GO TO THE BRANCHES.

We know the blessed words: "As He is, so are we in this world." But the converse is equally true in this connection: "As we are, so is He in this world." What is the strongest possible argument against Christ? It is not a merely professing Church, such as we have heard of this morning. It is a Christ who bears no fruit in the branches that properly belong to Him. So the second witness of Christ is this: "I am the Vine; ye are the branches."

In ver. 8 of this chapter we shall see the summing up of it all: "Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit." May these words sound in our ears. I remember, years ago, when an undergraduate at Oxford, I used to go to Mr. Christopher's meetings, and there was a text in large blue letters over the platform: "Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit." I did not understand it then so fully as I do now, but the words sank deep into my heart. Christ's second witness concerning the Church, therefore, is really this—that, as the Church finds its satisfaction in the Lord, so the Lord is to find his satisfaction in the Church.

"THE LIGHT OF THE WORLD."

My last word is this. In John viii. 15, we find Jesus saying: "I am the Light of the world." There is a picture, familiar perhaps to everyone here, by that eminent painter, Mr. Holman Hunt, which represents our Lord as standing at a door and knocking. There is a circle of thorns round his head, and He has a lamp in his hand, while underneath are the words: "I am the Light of the World." If that eminent painter had studied the New Testament in the Greek as well as in English, he would not have put that text underneath that picture. The Greek word cannot be translated by "lamp"; it is the light, the luminary, the sun of the whole world. That is his testimony about Himself. A question being constantly asked now is this: "Have you seen 'Lux Mundi'?" I do not want to say a single word, except in love, of the authors of that book. I have seen it, and I have studied a careful analysis of it. I am sure the most conspicuous essayist there is one in heart with ourselves—a child of God.

ALL THE MORE DANGEROUS

are the words he utters. As I look at it, I see a "Light of the World" that does not even come up to Mr. Holman Hunt's "Light of the World." There is no light at all, so far as I can see, in the Christ depicted there. I feel that if the Lord Jesus may be mistaken on one point, He may be on all points. And if I go to Him for warmth, and heat, and light, I may find myself utterly disappointed; He will be a mere Will-of-the-wisp, leading me into quagmires of sin and death. I would suggest to the publishers of that book an alternative title—"Lux Mundi; or, Lux à non lucendo."

What is the Lord's witness to the Church on this point? "Ye are the light of the world" (Matt. v). The emphasis is on "Ye." It is remarkable that the Lord uses the same word for light here that He uses concerning Himself—ye are the luminary, the light of the world. Blessed Master, how can these things be? The answer is not far to seek. You find it in 2 Cor. iii. 18: "We all, with open face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, as by the Spirit of the Lord." So the Lord could say of us, "Ye are the light of the world." I remember walking in a cornfield some years ago, and seeing something shining just like the sun. I was dazzled by it, and went up to see what it could be. It was merely a little bit of broken glass; but it had caught all the noonday flood of the splendour of the sun, and reflected it so clearly that it seemed like the sun itself. Stay in the sunshine, brother, and you will give back the light of the sun. We are told that the moon is a lesser light, set to rule the night; and in that it typifies the Church of Christ. Do we always remember, when we speak of the moonlight, that it has no light of its own; it is merely the sunlight reflected from its surface.

That is what is being done, thank God, in the church in India that we have heard of. In the letter to Mrs. Pennefather read by our Chairman, prayer was asked for workers at Amritzar. May I add a word to what he said? That hospital—I believe it is the same one—applied not long ago to the authorities for help, because it was doing such a beneficent work in the town. What was the answer? "No, you shall have nothing. It is through that hospital of yours that every child in the gutter sings of Jesus to-day." The sister there, who is isolated and alone, is nevertheless living in the sunlight of Jesus Christ, and reflecting it so that the very children in the gutter sing of Him. The world needs light. Goethe, the great German poet and philosopher, died saying, "Light, more light." Oh that every one of us may abide in the light, and be children of the light! So we shall be able to accept as true the testimony of Christ to the Church: "Ye are the light of the world." If Christ is the Door, He tells us that our satisfaction is in Him. As the Vine, He tells us that his satisfaction is in the Church. In this last figure as the Light of the world, He tells us that He expects the world to find its satisfaction in Him, by means of the Church.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

Chairman's Remarks.

HAVING read a portion of Rev. v., Sir S. A. BLACKWOOD said: Into that scene of glorious heavenly worship it is permitted unto us by the blood of the Lamb now to enter; not with the same enjoyment that they have in glory, for we are compassed with infirmity, and in bodies of humiliation; but by the Spirit of the living God we can take up and echo back the song of praise that the redeemed utter there. We can join the angelic choirs and give Him praise whom we have been led to love and worship and to serve. Worthy is the Lamb far beyond what our poor conceptions can imagine. It would take eternity to understand the worth of the crucified and risen One; but we are permitted to consider Him now, and by the gracious teaching of God's Holy Spirit, as we sit at his feet, to hear his word and learn of Him.

Only one expression in this blessed passage would I now direct your attention to, as we commence this meeting—that in the 12th verse—the seven-fold ascription of praise: power, riches, wisdom, strength, honour, glory, and blessing to Him—to the Lamb, for He is worthy to receive it. Yes, He was worthy before the incarnation; before his precious death and burial; before his glorious resurrection and ascension; He was worthy as the everlasting God of all. But He received a fresh worthiness when He ascended up on high, and led captivity captive as the Second Adam, as the head of the body, the Church, and as her representative and surety, as her ever-living witness and intercessor. He claimed on her behalf all these riches and honours, and glories, and blessings, not for Himself, so to speak. The sixty-eighth Psalm tells us that it was for us He ascended up on high and led captivity captive and received gifts for men. Not for Himself, for He had it all, but for the members of his body—for the beloved still here below. Therefore, accepted in his worthiness, and because all belongs to Him, we may come, and in all boldness of faith claim it all; for we are Christ's and Christ is God's.

Let us put in our claim to-night. Do you want riches? He has them for you. Do you want power? Do our brethren who are to address us this evening feel their need? I hope they do. I am sure they do. None feel it perhaps more keenly than they. There is power for you here—power in your risen Head. Jesus is the repository of it for you to-night, and in Him is power for you to minister, and power also for us to receive. Do we want wisdom? It is all treasured up in Him. Is there strength for endurance needful for us in the conflict, in the burden, and in the strife? The Lamb has received it for us.

Do we want eternal honour and glory and blessing, when the fit time comes for us to receive it, and to be able to bear it? We could not bear it now. Nay, I do not suppose we shall be able to bear it then without Him, for is it not written, "He shall bear the glory"? You will need Him as much there to bear the glory, as you need Him here to bear the cross. As we realise increasingly our deep necessity, how blessed it is to know that there, at the right hand of the majesty in the heavens, the centre of that centre of glorious heavenly worship, still stands the Lamb, as it had been slain, worthily receiving gifts for men. And, mark what the Holy Ghost says: "Yea for the rebellious also, that the Lord God might dwell among them." That is a word for every one of us. We have all been rebels indeed. Nay, is there not a rebelliousness in us still, ever prone to rise up? "That the Lord God might dwell among them"—none shut out of that welcome. Each one can put in his or her claim to-night, for He is worthy.

"Worthy the Lamb that died," they cry,
"To be exalted thus."
"Worthy the Lamb!" our hearts reply,
"For He was slain for us."

Christ, the Faithful Witness.

BY REV. CHARLES A. FOX.

I AM utterly unfit to speak to-night; but God is able and I believe will speak for the glory of his own holy name. We meet here on the grand subject of "Christ, the Faithful Witness." I turn your attention at once to Rev. i. 4: "John to the seven churches which are in Asia: grace be unto you, and peace, from Him which is, and which was, and which is to come." I want you to observe that this is the fullest benediction in the Bible. First of all it is the benediction of God, the absolute God. The whole eternity of God speaks out in this verse. There is no change in the original Greek, if you compare it. God's great nature cannot be declined as the grammarian speaks. He is utterly unchangeable. What would Plato, and Socrates, and Seneca have given, and all the other great classic heathen, as we call them, to have heard grace and peace from Him which is, and which was, and which is to come? It is a Divine greeting from the whole eternity of God unto all the fallen humanity of this poor fallen world of ours. It is grace, sovereign favour; grace which brings salvation; grace in which we stand; grace in which God enables us to abound.

Grace and Peace. The peace of reconciliation; peace through the blood of Jesus Christ on the cross of Calvary. The peace of victory.

I have overcome the world, the flesh, and the devil. Peace be unto you. That, I think, is of the present day—all those who write so scientifically, and yet so unbelievingly. Grace and peace from Him who was, and is, and is to come. From all the past of God, full of grace and peace; from all the present of God, full of grace and peace; from all the future of God, full of grace and peace. Surely, brethren, we ought to kneel down as we hear such words as these. We ought to be humbled.

"Grace and peace, from Him who was, and is, and who is to come." The everlasting procession of God passing through eternity. God is ever arriving and departing. And still He arrives, and still He retreats, for He is the God evermore who is to come. He is the ever-coming God, the God of perpetual additions, not only to-day, but through the ages of eternity; though you and I may shortly be in eternity, it will only be to stand and see the procession of God passing by—the Holy One that was, and is, and is to come. Grace and peace were first of all the absolute and essential being of God, the eternity of God in its three-fold capacity and power.

"And from the seven Spirits which are before his throne." This is perchance the most remarkable word in all Holy Scripture—that grace and peace should come from the seven Spirits which are before the throne of God; from the seven lamps of fire that are ever burning before his throne; from the searchings of the fire of God. Grace and peace from the holiness of God—the thrice holiness of God; the unspeakable holiness of God which could blast us in a moment. Ah! this is the Pentecostal blessing; this is the grace and peace which come down with the fire of the Holy Ghost. This is the fire of God upon the altar of poor human souls. This is that which Christ was leading up to, and of which He spoke when he said, "It is expedient for you that I go away," that ye may become the ALTARS OF THE HOLY GHOST'S FIRE.

The faithful Witness! Has He not been a faithful Witness to you and to me? I know He has been to me a wonderfully faithful Witness, coming very close; a swift Witness, to witness against anything that is wrong and contrary to his will, and a tender Witness—oh, how tender! Lord Jesus, wilt Thou reveal Thyself to us this night in this very hall? We are come for the purpose. We do not come to hear human words; we have come to see the living Lord revealed in the saints.

Jesus Christ is the faithful Witness, and He is the "First-begotten from the dead." Death did not interrupt his witness. He rose up from the dead triumphant. The glorious Witness: "I have overcome death and hell and the grave, and there is no king who can stand before Me. I am the faithful Witness—the First-begotten of the dead." And of the kings of the earth He is the reigning Sovereign. You and I think the Queen, or the Emperor of Germany or Russia, reigns; but Jesus is the Prince of the kings of the earth. He reigns to-day. Your being here is a part of the reign and rule of Jeuss Christ.

Now, then, what will you say in response? This is the Church's response to the Divine greeting—"Unto Him who loveth us" (as it is in the best manuscripts) "and hath washed us from our sins in his own blood" (or "loosed us from our sins," it matters not; washed will do, but both together are best), "and hath made us kings and priests unto God." Dear brethren, are we kings? What do we triumph over? Passion, habit, weakness, sickness, failure, defeat? Are you a king? Then, rule as a king. He hath made us kings and priests, or a kingdom of priests. Each one who is a royal king is also a priest, who, by the grace of God, can absolve by declaring the Word of God, by prayer. By the simple revealing of Jesus, we become priests, so that we reveal the blessing of God to our fellow-men.

What will you say to Him? I ask you to-night. Do you say, "To Him be glory and dominion"? Is that your response? That all shall be to his glory, you and I—body, soul, and spirit, and everything you have, for ever and for ever. Amen. This is the message from the faithful Witness dwelling in inaccessible light before the presence of God. Now, have you answered in your own soul: "Unto Him that loveth us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood, and hath made us kings and priests unto God and his Father: unto Him be glory for ever"?

It is my purpose this evening, having said this much on the subject of the faithful Witness, to ask you to look at one or two passages which show what we ought to be as his faithful witnesses upon earth. Turn to 2 Kings iv. I divide the work of the witness for Christ into two parts—there is a private work, and there is a public work. First, the private work. You will observe that in that chapter we have, under the figure of a widow woman, one who comes to the prophet Elisha, and describes herself in these words: "Thy servant, my husband, is dead, and thou knowest that thy servant did fear the Lord, and the creditor is come to take unto him my two sons as bondmen." This is exactly the description of the Church to-day. The Church, conscious of her own extremity, feels that there are death, debt, bondage, and bankruptcy. And Elisha said unto her, "What shall I do for thee? Tell me what thou hast in the house?" "Thine handmaid hath not anything in the house but a pot of oil." "Then he said, Go, borrow thee vessels abroad of thy neighbours, even empty vessels, borrow not a few."

The pot of oil is the unconscious wealth of the Church. The confession of it is wrung from the Church. Tell what thou hast in the house. "Thine handmaid hath nothing in the house." Witness, we have not anything in the house but death, debt, bondage, and bankruptcy; there is one thing, the pot of oil—the oil of the Holy Ghost. Oh the unconscious wealth of the Church of Christ! Do you know that, if you will only turn into your chamber when you get home, or to-morrow morning, you will find that, with death, debt, bondage, and bankruptcy, you have a pot of oil—you have the Holy Ghost, who is able to withstand death, debt, bondage, and bankruptcy. God has already given us the gift—it is in the house with us. Go into your chamber, shut to the door, and pray to the Father.

You see in the next verse what is the great want of the Church. "Then he said unto her, go, borrow thee vessels abroad of all thy neighbours, borrow not a few." This is the want of the Church—more want; more emptiness of soul. It comes to my own soul—you will forgive me speaking plainly—but what we want is to that we are bankrupt; that we have not a farthing; that we are emptied out and drained out, like the Apostles' ten days' draining, until there was not anything left. I want to realise that this is the marvellous gift which the Church has to give—to borrow empty vessels, borrow not a few. It is God's command to-day. We hear it echoing everywhere. We see it north and south, east and west—borrow empty vessels.

There are lost vessels—lost nations that are wanting the Gospel. The Bible is open to all men. The doors are open everywhere. The windows of heaven are open every day. What is it we want? We want to realise that we are to borrow the empty vessels, the empty opportunities. There has never been in the world's history such a time when empty vessels were so ready to receive the Gospel. I have heard to-day that Italy is yearning for the Gospel; and our brother, Theodore Monod, declares that in France there never was such an open door for the Gospel. It is true of China, after its degree, and of India, and of the outlying portions of America, and of Africa—latest Africa. We have one there, a large vessel, of the darkest.

Thanks to our great explorer. In the time of his deepest distress and experience of starvation, in the midst of the dark forest, he says: "At the midnight hour, in the awful forest silence, when there was not a sound to be heard, worn out with disease, prostrated with fatigue, broken-hearted because of my friends and companions, whom I could not find, I knelt down and prayed to the God of Heaven, and I said to Him, 'If thou wilt restore me to my companions, I will own Thee before my fellow-men, and I will declare what Thou hast done.'" Would that every Christian were such a witness. And so, at the Guildhall, he declared it amidst the banqueting and feasting there, and so amidst the soldiers and sailors he declared it—"it is God who hath delivered us."

May I not say that, as he found nine hours afterwards, the wonderful deliverance from that impenetrable forest through which he had been traversing for weeks in the dark and awful twilight—may I not say of you and I, who have emerged also out of the darkest jungle of unbelief, and the twilight of uncertainty, into the glorious light of the Gospel of Jesus Christ that we will be witnesses, too? Shall we be ashamed of Jesus? Shall we not be bold for Him? Shall we not declare and glorify his name? "Go ye, borrow vessels of your neighbours." We live in

MARVELLOUS MISSIONARY TIMES.

We have brethren here who are all for the Jews, and other brethren here who are all for the Gentiles. They are both right. For that is what we want; and the Lord for them all. Borrow the empty vessels of all thy neighbours. England has a peculiar position. She, by her colonies, is a neighbour to every part of the world. There is not a single land to which she is not a neighbour. I want to impress it upon you that we owe it to our neighbourship to go and redeem these people through the precious blood of Jesus Christ, and through the preached word which He has revealed to our own souls.

Let us remember to-night our brethren in Africa—Wilmot Brooke and his little group of beloved comrades; Douglas Hooper and his little group of brave comrades. And shall we not remember the new Bishop of Equatorial Africa, by whose side I prayed the other day, and many others, from the Cape to Algiers? Shall we not remember them, and borrow the empty vessels of all our neighbours? Borrow them not a few.

Now let us notice what follows. This is the secret part of the witnessing for Christ, "and when thou art come in, thou shalt shut the door." Can you do it? I notice that many brave people can do a great many brave things, who cannot shut the door. Shut the door upon thee and upon thy sons. Can you do it? I notice that many Christians cannot do it. This is the mighty secret of the shut door. There is no mightier secret under heaven. "When thou art come in, thou shalt shut the door upon thee and upon thy sons, and shalt pour out into all those vessels, and set aside that which is full." Yes; there are some set aside in the glory, because they are so full; and some set aside upon earth to be poured out and emptied abroad, because they are so full. Thank God for the full vessel. Satisfied with the full favour of the Lord.

"So she went from him, and shut the door upon her and upon her sons, who brought the vessels to her, and she poured out." Did you notice that there were originally four things with her—death, debt, bondage, and bankruptcy; but now there was a fifth thing. What was it? The pot of oil was there before her. What was it? It was the word of the living God. Oh, shut your doors when you have the word of God with you, and the emptiness before you, and the empty vessels of your own need and your neighbour's need, and the far-off heathen's need, and shut your door, and begin to pour out. "And it came to pass that the vessels were full." But how do you come to this wonderful wealth of God's unspeakable love? It is by the shut door.

BY THE CLOSE COMMUNION OF PRAYER,

by the empty vessels coming in contact with the fulness of God; it is by the Word of the living God which has to be ventured upon: the glorious risk of finding God's truth. Have you ever proved it—the glorious risk of finding God's truth? I have. "And it came to pass, when the vessels were full, she said unto her son, Bring me yet a vessel; and he said unto her, There is not a vessel more; and the oil stayed." The insatiableness of faith! She cannot be satisfied; she must go after more. And so it is with every true child of God. Bring me another soul; bring me yet more empty vessels; this is the delight of the child of God. The oil stayed; and the oil will stay, when the opportunity has ceased, when the faculty has died out, when the hungering and thirsting power has failed; when you no longer need, as you used to need, or crave as you used to crave, the oil stays. "Then she came and told the man of God." You must come back to God, and tell Him. You must thank Him for giving you what He has. And the prophet said, "Go and sell the oil, and pay off thy debt, and live thou and thy children on the rest." Now, my dear friends, we must pay what we owe to God and man; we must live humbly on the blessed provision of Christ. It is quite enough. "My grace is sufficient for thee."

Turn to 1 Sam. xvi., with which I will close. This is the public side of true witnessing for Jesus. We have had the poor widow witnessing in a private chamber before her son in the fear and darkness there. Let us look at the public side. It is the anointing of David. I only glance at it for a moment. The Lord gave Samuel a command. He said: "Call Jesse to the sacrifice, and I will shew thee what thou shalt do, for I have provided Me a king: and thou shalt anoint unto Me him whom I name unto thee. And Samuel did that which the Lord spake, and came to Bethlehem. And the elders of the town trembled at his coming." We always tremble when any special good comes. "And said, Comest thou peaceably. And he said, Peaceably: I am come to sacrifice unto the Lord: sanctify yourselves, and come with me to the sacrifice." Oh let us sanctify ourselves to-night. I look upon this Conference at Mildmay as an opportunity for immediate transactions between God and the soul. My brethren, do not look upon it as anything else. It is to come at once into the presence of God, and to deal with Him then and there, and gain the blessing which He is ready to give you. May I mark here how God chooses his witnesses. "And it came to pass, when they were come, that He looked on Eliab, and said, Surely the Lord's anointed is before Him. But the Lord said unto Samuel, Look not on his countenance, nor on the height of his stature." (Have you not done that often and often? Looked on a man's position, wealth, influence, gifts, talents.) "Because I have refused him: for the Lord seeth not as man seeth; for man looketh on the outward appearance, but the Lord looketh on the heart."

So you see Samuel was actually rebuked in the act of consecrating the king for the Lord. Our God rebukes us. Some of us who have spoken here on many occasions can say it with truth, that the Lord has rebuked us. While we have been speaking to you a rebuke has come home to our own hearts, and we have been purified by the fire of the Holy Ghost in thus doing. "Then Jesse called Abinadab, and made him pass before Samuel. And he said, Neither hath the Lord chosen this. Then Jesse made Shammah to pass by. And he said, Neither hath the Lord chosen this. Again, Jesse made seven of his sons to pass before Samuel. And Samuel said unto Jesse, The Lord hath not chosen these."

Perhaps you will think me very old-fashioned. I am old-fashioned. I believe in

THE SOVEREIGN GRACE OF GOD.

I believe it is the sovereign favour of the Lord Jesus Christ that calls out his servants to his service, and that each one of them who is redeemed, and enters into the redemption privilege, is grateful to the sovereign grace of the Lord. "And Samuel said unto Jesse, Are here all thy children? And he said, There remaineth yet the youngest, and, behold, he keepeth the sheep. And Samuel said unto Jesse, Send and fetch him: for we will not sit down till he come hither. And he sent, and brought him in. Now he was ruddy, and withal of a beautiful countenance, and goodly to look to. And the Lord said, Arise, anoint him: for this is he."

No mistake—this is God's choosing. God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the things that are wise, and the weak things to confound the things that are mighty, and base things and despised things and things that are not, to bring to nought the things that are, that no flesh should glory in his presence. The five-ranked army of the Lord are the witnesses of God. Are you amongst the fools in the first rank? Come, my brother, you say you have no power, no gift, and that you are so shrinking and timid. Well, you are a fool; come along, you shall be in the first rank in the army of Jesus. You have no power and genius; then you are among the weak ones. Let us fill up the wonderful five-ranked army of weakness, of which we read in the first Epistle to the Corinthians.

We read, "Then Samuel took the horn of oil." That is the strongest thing God has got in his armoury. You think the sword is the strongest. I do, my friends; I know it myself. I would slash with the sword when I ought to pour out the horn of oil—that is the strongest thing.

"Then Samuel took the horn of oil, and anointed him in the midst of his brethren: and the Spirit of the Lord came upon David from that day forward. So Samuel rose up and went to Ramah." Oh, friends, there is such an anointing of the Holy Ghost. I have seen it. I know it. I believe in it. I cannot question it. No, though all the people in Mildmay Hall were to contradict me, I would still say it is true. The anointing of the Holy Ghost is WORTH EVERYTHING PUT TOGETHER.

"But the Spirit of the Lord departed from Saul." You see how the blessed Master chooses his servants—his witnesses; not at random. They are by sovereign grace chosen; they are by searching chosen, and He puts his seal upon them, and they are anointed of the Holy Ghost. How does he use them? He sends them back to the sheep. That is the most remarkable thing in this chapter—that David went back from being consecrated as a king, to feed the sheep. You do not like going home to the common household duties, your common visits among your friends, and showing Jesus in your conversation. You think it is humiliating. Ah! it is what the consecrated king is called to do.

As soon as he had gone back to the sheep again he is called by the marvellous grace of God, and he is called to the court of the king. The king is under a deep shadow of depression. Nothing will heal him except the playing of music, which seems to alleviate his sorrows. "Provide me now a man that can play well, and bring him to me. Then answered one of the servants, and said, Behold, I have seen a son of Jesse the Beth-lehemite, that is cunning in playing, and a man of war, and prudent in matters, and a comely person, and the Lord is with him." What a testimony to David, "the Lord is with him," with all these other gifts. He was brought to King Saul, and he played on the harp until the evil spirit departed out of Saul. That is what the consecrated king must do. He must be called from feeding the sheep to cast out the evil spirit of unbelief, and the demon spirit of darkness, out of the souls of men, by the sweet music of the name of Jesus.

This having been done—as we read in the closing verse, "And it came to pass, when the evil spirit from God was upon Saul, that David took an harp, and played with his hand; so Saul was refreshed, and was well, and the evil spirit departed from him"—he went back from the court as he went back from the consecration, to feed the sheep; and in the next chapter we have him called from feeding the sheep to the camp. It seems that his father called him (this is how God equips his children). It is a marvellous thing. We read in the fifteenth verse: "But David went and returned from Saul to feed his father's sheep at Bethlehem. And the Philistine drew near morning and evening, and presented himself forty days. And Jesse said unto David his son, take now for thy brethren an ephah of this parched corn, and these ten loaves, and run to the camp to thy brethren; and carry these ten cheeses unto the captain of their thousand, and look how thy brethren fare, and take their pledge." That is what the consecrated king is to do, to carry food to his brethren.

THERE IS NOTHING BENEATH YOU

if you are a gentleman by the grace of God. There is nothing beneath you save sin. It is only some poor, mean, vile apostate soul that thinks anything beneath him in the way of menial work. No man who is truly ordained of God but will carry food to his brethren. And he goes to his brethren in the field and tells them about this bread and cheese, and then sees and hears of this wonderful giant. (See vv. 24-28.) Have you noticed, there is many a man who will fight his little brother, but who will not fight the giant Goliath? There was no battle going on, so he could not see it; every man was afraid of the giant. This elder brother of splendid stature was not afraid to fight with his little brother, and ridicule him; but this was the equipment of the Lord for a splendid victory. And so we find he is brought to King Saul. "And David said" (ver. 37): "Moreover, The Lord that delivered me out of the paw of the lion, and out of the paw of the bear, he will deliver me out of the hand of this Philistine." You must give faithful witness for the Lord in high quarters when you are brought into such places. "And Saul said unto David, Go, and the Lord be with thee. And Saul armed David with his armour, and he put an helmet of brass upon his head; also he armed him with a coat of mail. And David girded his sword upon his armour, and he assayed to go; for he had not proved it. And David said unto Saul, I cannot go with these; for I have not proved them. And David put them off him." You must reject the world's armour.

Now you come to the true equipment of the child of God (ver. 40): "And he took his staff in his hand, and chose five smooth stones out of the brook." You must always have a staff in your hand if you go to fight. Lean on the blessed Lord Jesus. I have proved it. I know Him to be a true Saviour. I know that He will support you, and you can lean on Him in all your weakness and feebleness, and you will find Him just all you need. "And he took his staff in his hand, and chose him five smooth stones out of the brook, and put them in a shepherd's bag which he had, even in a scrip; and his sling was his hand: and he drew near to the Philistine."

When you go to fight the Lord's battles, will you be sure to take out of the brook, where the Holy Spirit of God is flowing, and out of the brook, which is the Word of God. The Lord Jesus, who was the true David, only used three stones when He met the devil in his temptation—that was enough. But David took five smooth stones, worn with the Holy Ghost's use. What are these five stones with which we, as witnesses, are to go forth against the enemy of the Lord? The first is: God is. "He that cometh unto God must believe that He is." I believe in the presence of God here to-night. I believe in his presence everywhere. God is. Secondly: God hath. "He hath delivered my soul from death, mine eyes from tears, and my feet from falling." Can you say it? What is the third stone? God can. Israel spoke against God: "Can God give us bread in the wilderness? He has given water, can He give bread also?" The Lord was angry with his people. God can. Oh, that this were written and engraven with the pen of the Holy Ghost in living fire upon every soul. This is the stone that will bring down any giant, any enemy of the Lord. Will you listen to the Lord, and will you use this marvellous smooth stone out of the brook of grace?

The fourth stone is: God will. We have it in Daniel. Yea, our God will deliver us. He hath delivered us, and He will deliver us. Can you say that? Now, there is one more stone: God doth. "Yea, and He doth deliver." "I, the Lord, do keep it; I will water it every moment, lest any hurt it. Night and day will I keep it." Children of God, ye are in his keeping. Throw the stone, embedded in the sling of faith. Sling it in the power of the Holy Ghost, and the Lord shall bring down the enemy at your feet, to the glory of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost.

Christ's Witness for the World.

BY REV. NEWMAN HALL, LL.B.

I HAVE felt it somewhat difficult to distinguish Christ's witness for the world from his witness to the Jews and the Church, so as to make it distinct, but I have endeavoured, as far as possible, to do so. Now, "the world" in this connection does not mean the material substance of the earth; it means the people, and it is used in the Bible in two ways—with regard to the whole of the people of the globe, and distinctively of the ungodly in contrast to the Church. Let us refer first to Christ's testimony to the great mass of the people on the earth. In Isaiah we read, "I have given Him"—the Son of David—"a witness to the people." There is his testimony to the whole world; and again in Isaiah, "It is a light thing that thou shouldest be my servant to raise up the tribes of Jacob, and to restore the preserved of Israel: I will also give thee for a light to the Gentiles, that thou mayest be my salvation unto the end of the earth." There He was predicted as having a witness to bear to all people. So old Simeon said, "Now lettest Thou thy servant depart in peace, for mine eyes have seen thy salvation . . . a light to lighten the Gentiles," bearing testimony to the world.

Now Christ's great work was for the world, and was essential to his personal ministry. The work of Christ is the work of his personal ministry, and that of the Holy Spirit through the Apostles. His personal ministry was primarily to the Jews. He said he was not sent, at that particular time, but to the lost sheep of the house of Israel. The light promised at the coming of the Holy Ghost fully burst through even in his own personal ministry.

HE COULD NOT REPRESS IT.

It was the light, first of all, to the Jewish people, but the light was so burning and blazing within Him that it burst through the veil in his lifetime to the Gentiles beyond. Out of the abundance of his heart his mouth spake to the world. Notice the interview with Nicodemus. He was a Jew, but Christ testified to the Jew that his witness was to the world? "God so loved the world that He gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish, but have everlasting life." There was the bursting out of his witness to the world. See Him with the woman of Samaria by the well; she was not a Jewess, but one of the heathen, or Gentiles; but He bore witness to her of the living water, which, if she had asked of Him, He would have given her. This was a witness that everyone, the world over, if they asked of Him living water should have it. He bare witness to her, and thence to the whole world, that God is a Spirit who may be sought by everybody, not exclusively "in this mountain" nor "in Jerusalem," but throughout the whole earth. And then He testified, remaining several days amongst the Samaritans. He also healed the centurion's servant. The centurion was not a Jew but a Gentile, one of the outside world, and in reference to the faith of that man, our Lord said, "I have not found so great faith, no, not in Israel." Here was another testimony to a representative of the world at large.

IN THE WHOLE WORLD

To the woman of Syrophœnicia who followed Him with earnest supplication, and in order to reprove his disciples, Jesus spoke of the Gentiles as mere dogs; she spoke of herself as one of the dogs under the table, and said, "Let me have some crumbs." Ah, had not she a big crumb that day? "Be it unto thee even as thou wilt!" What wonderful faith? "Woman, great is thy faith!" There was Christ's testimony through her to the whole world. And then He bore testimony before Pilate. Pilate was not a Jew, but was representative of Rome's empire—the civilised globe. We are told that before Pontius Pilate he witnessed a good confession. What was his confession? "I am a King, and my kingdom is not of this world." What art thou—a King? "For this cause was I born, and came into the world, that I might bear witness to the truth." There was Christ's testimony before Pilate. A testimony to the whole world that He is a King; that his throne is in the human heart; that He did not come to set up any political power, or entangle Himself with any such relationships as that Pilate or Cæsar need be afraid. But He came to assert his right to rule in the hearts of mankind. Here was Christ's testimony to the world. Christ's work also bore testimony of Him. "The Father that dwelleth in me, He doeth the works"; so that the work of Christ is the work of God. The works of Christ were wrought before a general crowd, and many of the Gentiles saw those works, and doubtless received cures from Christ. Here was his witness to the world, in the Father's name curing disease, mighty to save. His words bore witness: "I speak to the world the things that I have heard of my Father." And what great words did He say? Amongst them was the Prodigal Son parable. Who were the Jews?—the elder son. Who was the younger son? We, of course—the Gentiles, the world, and it was a testimony to the whole world that, however far they had wandered, if they only desired to come back to God, however ignorant of theology or dark their views, if they could only say, "I will arise, and go to my Father"; the love of the Father was waiting for them, certain to welcome them, and help them to come to Him. That was Christ's grand testimony in his own life to the world.

KING OVER ALL NATIONS;

His sufferings testified to the world: "That the world may know that I love the Father, and that as He has given me commandment so I do. Let us go hence." Let us go and meet the betrayer—showing that He was a willing sufferer. He was not punished. He was the victim of no wrath or vengeance. It was God in Christ reconciling the world unto Himself, and the willingness and the joy with which Jesus went forth—suffering in carrying out his Father's will—what a testimony it was to the love of the Father! And so the testimony to the disciples when He said, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature"—to men of every nation, every language, and every clime. This is the testimony of Christ in his lifetime borne to the world, and our business as Christians is to repeat his testimony, to go into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature, and to say to our neighbours, "Know the Lord." So far as regards the world, meaning the great mass of mankind.

Now, let us take the other meaning of the term, "the world." It is often difficult to explain what we mean by worldliness. Many young people say, "Why is so-and-so worldly?" I would say that worldliness is ungodliness—"without hope and without God in the world." It is said of the wicked, "God is not in all their thoughts." When God is not supreme in our thoughts, desires, affections, motives, and conduct, then we are ungodly, and that makes us worldly. Worldly people may be of various kinds. Some may be drunken and licentious, some refined and pure, in their style of life; but both may be ungodly, because neither the one nor the other have God in their thoughts; and all who have not and hearts may be characterised as worldly—"Lovers of pleasure rather than lovers of God." It does not mean that all pleasures are worldly, and all who love a little pleasure are wicked; but if pleasure be first, and God second, and if any pleasure be allowed on which the smile of God cannot rest. Wherever there is a person who does not supremely seek to please God, and is seeking pleasure in getting money, in ambition, in dissipation, in idleness, and many other things which in themselves may or may not be wrong, yet seeking pleasure chiefly in earthly things, and having no pleasure in God, I think we may properly and Scripturally say such are "of the world." Now the Apostles did make this distinction. St. John said: "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in Him. For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world." On the contrary, he that is born of God "overcometh the world."

There must be a distinction. St. Paul said: "Be not conformed to this world, but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind." God has said: "Come out from among them, and be ye separate, and I will receive you." St. James says: "Pure religion and undefiled is this—to visit the fatherless and the widow and to keep himself unspotted from the world." Our Lord, when He was in the world, said the world knew Him not. But to those who received Him, He gave the privilege to become the sons of God. What was Christ's witness to the ungodly? "The world hateth Me because I testify of it, that the works thereof are evil." Our Lord, therefore, did testify to the ungodly world, that the works of the ungodly are really evil. People may say, "Well, what evil is there in this or that"; but the evil is in the heart not being supremely consecrated to God, and the witness of our Lord to the world is that the works of the world are evil.

He speaks of "the Spirit of truth, whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth Him not, neither knoweth Him." A worldly person, seeking worldly things rather than God, will not understand or receive the things of the Spirit of God. Christ was asked, "How is it that Thou wilt manifest Thyself unto us, and not unto the world?" "He that loveth Me keepeth my commandments, and my Father will love Him, and we will manifest ourselves unto Him." Here the manifestation of Christ depends upon the loving and obeying of Christ, and it is a manifestation only to his own people, which the wicked world, remaining wicked, cannot share. Our Lord testifies of "the men whom Thou gavest Me out of the world." They have been brought out, and joined to Christ. Then again, "the world hath hated Me, because I am not of the world." Our Lord also predicted that his disciples would be hated in proportion as they resembled Himself; therefore, let us not think it a disgrace if the worldly, the wicked, the selfish, and the sensual hate us. Perhaps there is too little of this hatred in the case of some professing Christians. They are and so escape its scorn.

I think I have referred to these passages of Scripture in their obvious, strict, and literal sense. If that be so, then it is clear that there is a wicked world distinct from the Church. Our Lord Jesus Christ and his Apostles did recognise that distinction, and our Lord did witness against the world. He also witnesses now by his Spirit. The Comforter, when He had come, was to reprove the world. He said of the Holy Spirit, coming in his name, "He shall reprove the world of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment. Of sin, because they believe not in Me; of righteousness, because I go to the Father, and ye see Me no more; of judgment, because the prince of this world is judged." This is a passage of some difficulty, but I will endeavour to explain it.

"He will convict the world in respect of sin" (Revised Version). That is more than reproof. Philosophy, law, conscience, often reprove wickedness; but it is one thing to reprove wrongdoing, and quite another thing to convince the wrongdoer in his own conscience. The Holy Spirit is come that He may convict and convince the wrongdoer. He shall "convict the world of sin." The world has its own ideas of sin. Let me remind you of them. Some worldly philosophers say that wickedness is that which is injurious to society, taking utility as a standard. Others say that that is wrong which is opposed to ordinary standards admitted in public life. Some people think they ought to be rather more ashamed of being vulgar than of being wicked; of trespassing against the laws of society than against the laws of God. The world will condemn outward actions, but takes very little notice of inward thoughts; and, while it denounces the outward commission of evil, it takes very little notice of omissions to do what we ought to do, and these are perhaps more numerous than the commissions of that which we ought not to do. Those are the world's false judgments. The essence of sin is unbelief in God. Ungodliness is the root. "The carnal mind is enmity against God, and is not subject to the law of God, neither, indeed, can be."

WHAT HAVE MORALISTS DONE?

They have clipped off the branches of the poisonous tree, instead of pulling it up by the roots. They have mitigated the poisonous streams that flow from an impure fountain, but they have not thought of purifying the fountain. They have plastered up sores on the surface, instead of changing the constitution and removing the disease. That is the way the world has treated sin. The way God and Christ treat sin is to change the heart, to cleanse the source, and so cleanse the streams.

The sin of the Jews always was disregard of God. They did not trust God. They did not obey God, and their sinfulness showed itself in a variety of ways. God was in Christ. Christ came as the great Revealer of God, and He came to call men to return to God, and trust and serve God through Him, the great Saviour. What happened? "He came to his own, and his own received Him not." What did He say was the condemnation?—that "light (Himself) had come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil." They hated Him whom Christ came to reveal, the good and holy God, and the result was they rejected the Saviour, and killed Him, and on the Day of Pentecost the inspired Apostle delivered this charge against them: "Ye denied the holy and just One, and desired a murderer to be delivered to you." That was the great sin of the world, and when the Holy Ghost was manifested in such abundant power on the Day of Pentecost, 3000 were convicted that they had been the murderers of Christ, and rejected Him. The Holy Spirit came and convicted them of sin, because they believed not in Jesus.

And so, brethren, it is still. There are many people outwardly moral, who pay their debts, are kind to their neighbours, and so on, and who say, "Why am I regarded as a sinner?" Do you reject Christ, or not? Christ is God's Ambassador. Christ has come on a special message from the Father. Christ has come to beseech us to be reconciled to Him, and to enthrone Him in our hearts. Are there any here who personally have never confessed Christ, never yielded their hearts and lives to Him? Then that is the great sin. There are other sins, such as drunkenness, swearing, murdering; but the great sin is alienation from God, and neglect or rejection of Christ. "This is the work of God, that ye should believe on Him whom He hath sent."

Then the Holy Ghost is to convict the world of righteousness. What is the world's righteousness? We have already implied it—utility, respectability, pleasure, success. The world's righteousness is often outward ceremonialism, observances, and benevolent acts. As a fact, righteousness is the reverse of sinfulness. As sinfulness is ungodliness, so righteousness is godliness—God being supreme in the heart.

Now, Christ came to reveal God for our love. He died that we should be united to God, and seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness. Christ's life was this: He lived what He taught; but the world did not recognise Him as righteous. The world condemned Him as a wicked man and an impostor. What did God do? He vindicated Him. God raised Him from the grave. He was raised "according to the Spirit of holiness."

GOD INTERPOSED

to show the world that had condemned Christ as unrighteous that He was his righteous Servant—He took Him to heaven. The Holy Ghost convinces the world of righteousness, by showing that God interposed to justify Christ, to "crown Him with honour and glory." "Because I go to the Father"—He taking Me to sit at his right hand—"ye see Me no more"; therefore there is evidence of my righteousness against those that calumniated Me, an evidence of the truth of my mission, of the truth of my teaching. So the Holy Ghost convinces the world of righteousness by the fact that God has accepted Christ as the righteous Lord; so the Holy Spirit convinces of righteousness still.

But, oh, if Christ is only presented to me as a model of righteousness and goodness, I despair. Suppose the Spirit of God were to teach me of Enoch's righteousness, what good would that be to me? Or suppose He were to teach me the goodness of Abraham. If the Holy Ghost reveals Christ as absolutely righteous, as the great model, I am alarmed and crushed. The ideal of humanity is what man ought to be, but never has been; and, indeed, cannot be. Do not tell me of the perfect righteousness of Jesus, when I am such a wretched, lost sinner, for that righteousness of Christ is above me. We accept it by faith, and we are righteous through Him. He, the Righteous, died—died as the righteous Man—and his righteousness is imputed to us. We rejoice while we admire, and say we have "the righteousness which is of God by faith, not having our own righteousness, which is of the law, but the righteousness which is by Jesus Christ," and by the Holy Spirit dwelling in us. Hence we become new creatures; we are made like unto Him.

We were in darkness, but we are now made light in the Lord Jesus. No; "there is no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit." The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, longsuffering. So we are made righteous. We plead the righteousness of Christ imputed; we possess the righteousness of Christ implanted. We are at one with God, and in harmony with Him, and united by precious faith to Jesus Christ.

The third conviction is of judgment, because the prince of this world has been judged. The prince of this world vaunts himself, and calls himself the god of this world—assumes power, and controls vast multitudes.

The Son of God was manifested, and we are told distinctly it was to destroy the works of the devil. Our Lord judged and condemned Satan. How did Christ judge the devil? His simple birth was a condemnation of the devil, who talks so much of wealth, dignity, grandeur, and royalty. His victory in the wilderness by the sword of the Spirit—battle after battle won—judged the devil. In his healing, He judged the devil. "This woman whom Satan hath bound—shall not she be released?" He attributed her ailment to the devil's power, and counteracted him. His perfect life was a further defeat of the devil. On the cross and the prince of this world, who thought he was overcoming Jesus Christ, was himself wounded with a death-wound by that very death which he brought instrumentally upon Christ. And in his resurrection He judged the prince of this world, for in rising again He destroyed death, and him that had the power of death, that is, the devil. The prince of this world, the devil, was judged by Christ in his ascension, for He was raised to the right hand of God, having put down all authority and power. The Day of Pentecost judged and condemned the devil, when all those thousands at once renounced him. The Apostles went forward everywhere condemning the devil; for, wherever they went, they turned men "from darkness unto light, and from the power of Satan unto God."

HE BRUISED THE SERPENT'S HEAD,

The devil is to be judged entirely. The time is coming when that old serpent will be cast into the bottomless pit, and all sin and sorrow shall be ended, and Christ, the victorious champion, shall reign King of kings and Lord of lords. Depend upon it, the devil is judged. His cause is a failure. It is uttermost defeat. Are there any here who are his followers, on the side of the world, "lovers of pleasure rather than lovers of God"? Think a little what chance you have in the war against truth and justice, against purity and God. Why, your leader is vanquished. The prince of this world is conquered and doomed. Will you follow him to his doom? Oh, may the Holy Ghost, the Comforter, not appeal to you in vain! Cast off the allegiance of a leader who is judged. Do not be doomed with Him. Accept the love of Christ. Yield to Him, and you will find that the Holy Spirit, who first convicts and makes you sad, will comfort you, and make you happy. We are engaged in a warfare which is not ended. The battle is going on in every land, and in every land the prince of this world is being judged. Naked savages and hideous cannibals are surrendering themselves to Jesus in our time. Old superstitions are giving way before the conquering power of the Saviour. Everywhere Mammon, and Mars, and Venus, and Bacchus, are being dethroned in hearts where the Holy Ghost convinces of righteousness and of judgment.

THE FINAL VICTORY IS CERTAIN.

Oh! Let us rejoice in the witness of Jesus Christ to our own souls by the Holy Ghost. We were once of the world; but, by God's grace, we have come out from the world. We once were guilty of the sin of unbelief in Jesus; but now we accept and adore Him. We crown Him. He is ours and we are his. Once we were unrighteous, because we were ungodly; but we are now clothed with the spotless robe, and we have dwelling within us the Holy Ghost. Once we were servants of the prince of this world; but we have renounced him. Christ has effaced his deadly mark, and put his own mark upon us, and Christ says we shall never perish. We have to fight; but greater is He that is for us than all that can be against us. He will tread down Satan under our feet shortly. The prophecy shall be fulfilled, "On thy belly shalt thou go, and dust shalt thou eat"—grovelling in defeat and eating the dust of disappointment.

Courage! fellow believers. The foe that we fight is wounded, condemned, and doomed, but our champion is the ever-living God, and He goes on from conquering to conquer. Courage! He that has begun the work in us shall finish it. Egypt is behind us. Pharaoh has been overwhelmed in the Red Sea of atonement. We may be in the wilderness; but we are feeding upon heavenly manna, and drinking of the water of life. Canaan is not far off; we even now see it by faith. Courage! the promises of God are with us. The everlasting arms are underneath us. The Captain of our salvation is on our right hand, and the Holy Ghost dwells within us. Already we have the earnest of the promised inheritance, and, though the powers of darkness may still assail us, "Thanks be unto God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." Yea, we are "more than conquerors through Christ who hath loved us," for "the prince of this world hath been judged."

THURSDAY MORNING, JUNE 26.

The Lord Jesus Christ as Leader.

Much rain had fallen during the night, and it was still descending thickly when the hour of morning conference arrived. That did not, however, suffice to prevent a crowded gathering in the hall, drawn by the expectation of hearing addresses from Mr. Spurgeon and the venerable Dr. Andrew Bonar, of Glasgow. The stewards had a busy time packing late arrivals into every vacant corner; but no economy of space would admit all who came, and an overflow meeting had to be held in one of the rooms below.

When the assembly were all seated, Sir S. A. Blackwood invited the company to silent prayer, and then was sung the hymn beginning:—

Come, Lord, and let us see
That blessed smile of thine,
Both human in its tenderness
And gloriously divine.

After prayer by Rev. J. H. Shaw, came the Chairman's Opening Remarks.

In the Psalm that many of us have been reading this morning—the forty-eighth—we have one word at which I want you to look for a moment—ver. 8: "As we have heard, so have we seen." Yesterday, it was hearing a Witness; to-day, it is seeing a Leader. There is a great difference between hearing and seeing. Seeing is believing, we are told sometimes. Oh that there were more real seeing of Christ, and less hearing, perhaps, about Him. Not that there could be too much of that, but we are in danger of letting the one be a substitute for, and supplanting the other. We may hear a great deal about Christ in conferences, and in other ways, and yet we may fail to see Him.

I was thinking the other day, when I heard the first lesson read in church, of that excellent advice which Hannah gave when she said, "Talk no more so exceeding proudly; let not arrogancy come out of your mouth." I do not think she could add to that. But she would emphasise it, if she lived now. There is too much mere talk; proud talk; senseless talk; and too little of the seeing; of the experimental, close, conscious appreciation of a present Saviour. What is on my mind this morning is the importance of seeing the Leader as well as of hearing the Witness. It would be the desire of us all, I hope, to-day, that we should come to such close personal contact with the Lord Jesus Christ that we should be able to say: "Now mine eye seeth Thee."

TOO MUCH TALL TALK;

A word or two from God's Word and little of my own. What is the effect of seeing? "It was a true report that I heard in mine own land of thy acts and of thy wisdom. Howbeit I believed not the words, until I came, and mine eyes had seen" (1 Kings x. 6). It is a good thing when that stage is reached. Then there is Jacob. When they told him, "Joseph is yet alive," Jacob's heart fainted, for he believed them not. But when he saw the waggons which Joseph had sent to carry him, his spirit revived. Oh, it is revival, when we see as well as hear. The Lord made his glory to pass before Moses. The effect was that when Moses saw, he was transformed and transfigured. So there is not only failure of our own spirit, which is an excellent preliminary; but there is revival, when we see; and also transfiguration.

How good also to turn to Job (xlii.): "I have heard of Thee by the hearing of the ear; but now mine eye seeth Thee. Wherefore I abhor myself." Self-abasement is the result of seeing. So it was with John (Rev. i.): "I heard behind me a great voice. I turned to see, and when I saw Him I fell at his feet as dead."

in wishing to see. I do not suppose the Lord, when He said: "Blessed are they that have not seen and yet have believed," meant to depreciate that kind of seeing we are thinking about now. He would exalt the spiritual intelligent soul-sight, which is tantamount to believing.

Elisha's servant was not satisfied with hearing (2 Kings vi.). "Fear not," said the prophet; but that did not encourage him. Then Elisha prayed the Lord to open his servant's eyes that he might see. The Lord opened the eyes of the young man, and he saw. The talk of those that had seen Christ seemed to the disciples as idle talk; but, when they saw Him, it was a very different thing indeed with them. We are apt to forget what we hear; we do not so easily forget what we see. You know what it is often to say to a person, "I know your face perfectly, but I really forget your name."

THE EYE RETAINS MORE THAN THE EAR.

We have sung, "Come, Lord, and let us see." Oh for this self-abasement, this revival, this conviction, this satisfaction. When Solomon said, "The eye is not satisfied with seeing," he did not mean the spiritual, but the material eye. That eye is satisfied with seeing: "I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness." Is not that what we want? What can dear Mr. Spurgeon or dear Andrew Bonar say to us that will do us good, unless we see the Lord Jesus Christ? May God give us direct, intelligent, conscious vision of Himself, so that all these and many other blessed results may by his mighty power be produced in all our souls, and we shall be able to say: "As we have heard so have we seen."

Following Christ in the Dark.

By Rev. C. H. SPURGEON.

Perhaps you may not be able to hear me at first. My voice has failed me of late, but it may get better as I go on. We have heard of our Leader in Sir Arthur Blackwood's speech, and I have to speak of following Him in the dark. Can you see Him in the dark, then? Yes, we sometimes see Him better in the dark than in the light. If you will go outside and look up, you will not be able to see a single star; but if you will get into the bucket of a well and go down into the darkness, very soon you will behold the stars. A descent is sometimes the shortest way to an ascent. To suffer is the road to joy; and to get into the dark is a short cut, often, to a child of God into light. All light but that which comes through Christ hinders our sight of Him. Begone sun, begone moon, begone candles. He is the Sun of Righteousness, and where He is there is light enough. I believe that some, trusting in the greatness of their mental light, have become blind. Blessed is he who sees Christ by Christ; who sees the Crucified in the light of his five wounds; who sees the Man of sorrows by

THE BRILLIANCE OF HIS OWN GRIEF.

But darkness to a child of God! He is a child of light; shall he ever walk in darkness? Not in the sense of ignorance, sin, and death; in the sense of gloom and sorrow, he does sometimes know a midnight. But it is with Jesus; and that is my topic. The words of the song run in my ears, "Anywhere with Jesus." Better in the dark with Him than in the light, ay, than in heaven itself, without Him. Not all the harps above could make a heavenly place, if He were not there. Give us Christ, and we will make no bargain about darkness, or about light. "For ever with the Lord" is another word for glory everlasting.

Adam, I suppose, was created in the daylight; and he wandered about in the garden, enjoying himself with his God. When the night came on, it was a new phenomenon to him; he must have wondered at it. But he had no sin, and his childlike trust in God would not permit him to be afraid, so he laid himself, I do not doubt, to rest and to sleep. It was a memorable night for him. In the dark he lost something; but it was not a loss. When he woke up, he found something, the very thing he wanted—

SHE WAS THERE.

It was not good for him to be alone. So you and I have found the dark coming on, and we have been distressed for a moment; but we have thought of God, and have fallen asleep. We lost a good deal in the dark, as we thought; for we were conscious of an inward pain—of the taking away of what we thought to be a vital part of ourselves. But, when we came out into the morning light, there was a joy there which we had not known before; a joy that has been our companion and our comfort to this very day. I have lost nothing by the darkness: for everyone must bear witness for himself. I believe you can say the same. Do not the dews fall at eventide? and is not the morning light a great gain, in its freshness and its beauty, even though we have to spend a night to reach it?

I felt, as I thought over this subject, as if I began to fall in love with the dark. There are two parts to my subject, the one all dark, the other all light. The dark may be very dark, but I feel in love with the darkness, too. Like Rutherford, who said that the cross at last had come to be so dear to him that he was half jealous of it, lest he should begin to love his cross with something like the love which he gave to his Lord. Darkness in itself is horrible; gloom and distress of mind are not to be desired; but the rich fruits which they have brought to us have made us cease to dread them. We now can thank God that the evening and the morning make up the day. The evening is as much a part of the day as the morning, and the nights of our lives are as rich as the days, the sorrows are as useful as the raptures, the depressions as really instructive as the exaltations.

I may say, first, that, in some respects, we are always in the dark, until the day break and the shadows flee away. Our Lord, when here on earth, may be said to have been in the dark in comparison with the glories which He left; in contrast with the glory which He has reassumed. To be here at all was to be in the dark, to Him who was the ever blessed Son of the Father. He was

AWAY FROM THE HOME-COUNTRY;

He was among sinners; his ears were vexed with ungodly speeches; his eyes wept over unhallowed scenes. It must have been a constant trial to his holy, sensitive spirit to have been in the midst of sinners.

So, in a certain sense, we, too, are always in the dark, compared with what is coming. "It doth not yet appear what we shall be." He is coming! He is coming! The axles of his chariot are hot with speed. "Behold, I am coming quickly." When He comes, the change will come, and the greatest joys we have ever known will seem but twilight as compared with the day. If his life was so far in the dark, we must not wonder if ours is the same. We are not dependent, however, upon light, any more than He was. If a Christian man can only be happy when his feelings are right, I should be afraid that he is trusting his feelings. If you are only confident when your frames are delightful, I should be afraid you are resting in your frames and feelings.

FAITH IS A PRINCIPLE.

We believe, whether we see or not; we believe, whether we feel or not. We believe in Christ; the testimony of the Father concerning Him is enough for us. Our own experience is a pleasant confirmation; but, even when it seems to fail us, we believe still. God is not changed, Christ is not altered, the ground on which we stand is not our attainments, our experiences, our communions. We stand upon the finished work of Christ, in which we believe, whether it be dark, or whether it be light.

Young Christians will say, "I believe I am saved, because I am so happy." It would be quite as fair for an old Christian to say, "I believe I am saved, because I am unhappy." Let me explain myself—it depends upon the cause of it. All happiness in the young man is not a proof of piety. He might be happy if he gained wealth; happy in the pleasures of an hour. All unhappiness in the old man is not evidence of godliness by any means; very far from it. But, if I sigh and cry because of the sins of the city, I have an evidence of my being on the side of Christ. If I even sigh and cry over my own imperfection and my want of attainment, that very sighing and crying is a proof of heavenly light, and that the heart is set on perfect holiness. Had we not been quickened, and to a high degree, too, we must have been content with partial holiness; but, now, nothing but perfection will content us. Our unhappiness, when even the least mist comes between us and God, proves how much we love Him, and how our very element is to dwell in perfect union with Him. We are not dependent, therefore, upon happiness or unhappiness, as the ground of our confidence: "The Son of God loved me and gave Himself for me." He died, I know, for every soul that trusts Him. I trust Him; He has redeemed me; I am his: there is my rock and refuge, and there I stand. Dark or light, the ground of a Christian's faith is not moved, in the least degree, by either of them. Could we sit for ever on the top of Tabor, we should be no safer there than if made to sit in the valley of humiliation by years together, and long for brighter days. Christ! Christ! Christ!

IN CHRIST, AND WE ARE SAFE.

Yet, there are glooms which fall to the lot of some of God's best people. I would have you beware, my brethren and sisters who have made a great advance in grace, of judging fellow Christians. I have noticed with sorrow that some whose shoe latchets I am not worthy to unloose are, nevertheless, hard towards those who have not reached their own high attainments. If you have strong faith, you may condemn unbelief; but do not condemn some weak believers who may have beautiful points in which they excel even you. Have you never heard of the strong cattle who push with side, horn, and shoulder, the weak cattle? Beware lest you get proud of your attainments. I believe there is such a thing as being so long in the light that you do not believe others are in the dark, or, if they are, then they ought not to be. You begin to scold them; but you cannot scold darkness into light. A little sympathy might do far more than some of your very faithful upbraidings. That word "faithful" sometimes means "cruel."

There are some people of God who are often in gloom, through sickness. I can bear witness that there are some forms of sickness which bring no darkness with them. You might suffer from them through life, and never be depressed by them. There are certain other forms of it which so acutely touch the mind that the mind impinges on the spirit, and the spirit is sore troubled. "Oh! but they ought not to be troubled." Granted; but they are. And I have noticed this, that your very strong men, ay, your very strong ministers, too, who can say very grand things—they do say them, and I am glad that they do say them—nevertheless, they do not make very good sufferers. When it touches them,

THEN IT IS ANOTHER THING.

They are very grand in saying that we ought not to be depressed. Ask their wives when they have a headache; and if they had other aches that make the night long and weary, they might not be able to show all the faith of which they now speak.

But Jesus knows all about it. "Himself bare our infirmities and carried our sicknesses." There is no form of sickness in which Jesus cannot sympathise, and it is so sweet to have his sympathy. One does not know how sympathy works, but it does work very mightily. A little girl said to her mother: "Mother, poor Mrs. Brown has lost her husband. She likes me to go in and see her. She said she would like me to go in every morning, because I comfort her so. But, mother, I do not comfort her; I do not know anything I could do to comfort her, or I would do it, if I could. But when she sits and cries, I go and put my cheek by hers, and cry too; and she kisses me, and says I comfort her." It is so with us poor human beings, the one to the other; but how much more to feel your Master's tear go down your cheek, when you are weeping through pain, and to know that He, "in every pang that rends the heart," has his full share and measure.

Another thing which causes great gloom to the believer is bereavement. I will not say much about it, lest I pull up the sluices here for many a widow, or wifeless husband, or fatherless child. We, too, have sometimes thought we had left our best part in the grave. However, there they were; they could not stay with us; perhaps because they were so good it was needful that Christ should have them. He prayed for them, "Father, I will that they be with Me where I am," and Christ's prayer conquered ours. It should do so, good Master. We would never pray against Thee; if we do, may thy prayer always win.

But this has brought many very low. Jesus wept—wept at the grave of Lazarus. Here, too, we see the Master. I do believe that if you want to see Jesus weeping, you must weep yourself. We always see Him, to a great extent, like ourselves. If we be wrestlers, like Jacob, He comes to wrestle with us; if we be soldiers like Joshua, He meets us at the wall of Jericho; if we be pilgrims, like Abraham, He comes, and we delight to wash his feet; if we be in the fire with Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego, He is in the furnace, too. As we are, so does He become, that, as He is, so may we become; and our bereavements are a part of the way in which we see and follow our Lord, in the dark.

POVERTY,

too—many of you have never known poverty; I do not wish you should; but poverty is a very heavy cross to some children of God. They think it hinders them, for they would give as well as work. Crushing toil, long hours, small pay, scarcely enough of bread to keep body and soul together—all this has cast a cloud over many a child of God. There may be a poverty in the cottage overgrown with woodbine which poets love. Perhaps, if the poets had the rheumatism through the wind blowing into that cottage, they might not love it quite so much. In London we have a poverty that has no woodbine, no cottage, but is in one room, where all are closely packed together, and scarcely the decencies of life can be preserved. Beloved, do you have to suffer this gloom? "The Son of Man hath not where to lay his head." He is as poor as you. Walk with Him. Be not ashamed of poverty; it was his road; welcome it as your own.

There is another gloom that has come on many here present, I dare say, in a measure, and upon some of us in especial. It is

THE CLOUD OF SLANDER.

If you have preserved a conscience unspotted; if you have sought nothing but the glory of God, and find everything you do misrepresented, your words misconstrued, and yourself abused, this is no bed of roses, this is not a thing to be desired. But how easy it is then to follow Jesus, for such was his life. They have called the Master of the house Beelzebub; they have not left another name for us. It is bad enough for us, if we come lower than He, as we desire to do. We might almost feel like the saint who thought it too great an honour to be crucified for his Lord and like his Lord. "Hang me head downward," said he, "let me have something a little less honourable than He had." Are you not content to be called something worse than Beelzebub? Might you not wish that you might have a lower degree of slander than He endured? The desirable thing is to keep close to Him in it, and sing:—

If on my face, for thy dear name,
Shame and reproach should be,
I'll hail reproach and welcome shame,
If Thou remember me.

Gloom also falls upon the Christian in time of deception. I do not know whether Judas had a family, but I have seen several persons who bear

A FAMILY LIKENESS TO HIM.

"He that eateth bread with Me hath lifted up his heel against Me" is a sentence not out of date. "It was not an enemy (then I could have borne it); it was thou, a man mine equal, my guide, and mine acquaintance. We took sweet counsel together, and walked unto the house of God in company." Ah! yes. Fret not too much about this. Didst thou not know that men are changeable? Canst thou not be content to take the inevitable? Thy Master had his Judas; shalt not thou have thine? "Then all the disciples forsook Him and fled"—so it may be with you. All the more because you desire to be faithful to your Lord, others may be unkind to you.

The worst cloud of all, I think, is deep depression of spirit, accompanied with a sense of

THE LOSS OF GOD'S COUNTENANCE.

Ah! never mind sickness, poverty, slander—these are flea-bites; but when the spirit itself sinks! "The spirit of a man will sustain his infirmity, but a wounded spirit who can bear?" Do you know what this means? I pray you may have very little of it; but, if you do have it, remember Him who said: "My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken Me?" I remember those words coming as a great comfort from a minister. There was a child of God who was very ill and dying. It does not often happen in my observation; I have never seen it, but this did happen: though he was an eminent Christian man, he was in the dark, and could not find his God, and he knew that he was dying. I do not think our heavenly Father often puts his children to bed in the dark, but they sometimes fear that He will. This man of God said to the minister who spoke with him: "Oh, sir! although I have trusted Christ for years, and have served Him, I have lost Him now. What can become of a man who dies feeling that God has deserted him?" The minister said: "What did become of that Man who died saying, 'My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken Me?' Is He not on the highest throne of glory even now?" The man's mind changed in a moment, and he began to say, as the Lord Jesus Christ did, after that dark sentence, "Father, into thy hand I commend my spirit;" and he breathed out his spirit, and died in peace.

Yes; God loves his people; and as much, too, when He leaves them in the dark, as when He sets them in the light. Measure not God's love by his providences, nor even by the manifestations of his love; measure it by itself; ay, measure it by the gift of Christ, for this is the only measure of the immeasurable love of God our Father. A child of God may be in despondency for years. There was one who was in despondency for twenty-seven years; yet he came into the light, and wrote his experiences in a memorable book which has been of great service to others in like condition. I hope none of you will wish to be there. I know some people who almost like the dark; they have got to be so despondent that they are afraid to come out of it. Come out of it, dear friend; do not make yourself a grain lower in spirit than you can help; but if you should be long depressed, and that depression should turn to despondency, and that despondency should seem to travel into despair, still believe in God. "Though He slay me, yet will I trust in Him." If I cannot see his face, yet in the shadow of his wings will I rejoice.

Now I come to

this morning. I think there are three respects in which our Lord was tried with darkness, in which He resembles us, and I wish that we may resemble Him. First, for our education. "Though He were a Son, yet learned He obedience by the things which He suffered." Do we learn much anywhere else, any of us? Our best schoolmaster is adversity, and our best school-books are in the old black letter. We make but small account of any other, I fear. Now, Christ learned obedience. Some people, when they get into the dark, think they must just be patient—that there is nothing to be done. Say ye so? Yet progress should be made in the dark. A friend of mine went to Australia, and, on board, there were a number of gentlemen of different degrees, one of whom was a very great greenhorn. He had never been to sea before; I do not think he had ever been anywhere else. They went down the Channel, and, when it came to be night, he said, "Where do they put up to-night?" "What do you mean?" "Why, you don't mean to say that they will go on sailing in the dark, do you?" "Certainly." "But they might run into something; besides, they cannot see their way." "No, and we shall not see our way any more, I suppose, until we get round the Cape. We are just going on, in the dead of night, as we do in the brightness of the day." So they did. Who but a fool would have thought otherwise?

Growth in grace should go on in the dark as well as in the light. I do not know much about botany, but I am told that some plants grow in the night. I know this about Christ's plants, that they grow very fast after a bit of darkness. I have half wished, for a brother or two that I know, that they might have

JUST A LITTLE DARKNESS.

I hope I was not unkind. I know one who would wish to sympathise if he could; but he has never had an illness, and, when he does sympathise (it is a remarkable thing that he should be able to do it), I think of him with wonder, as I would of an elephant picking up a pea. He cannot do it; it is not given to him; he has not been in the school where so much is to be learned.

Our Lord learned in the school of obedience toward God. If we think deeply, there is a very great lesson for us to learn. The Ruler of heaven and earth learns obedience. He who speaks, and legions of angels fly at his command—is it his to obey? When He was here on earth, in the fashion of a man, He learned obedience. Have you and I ever learned that lesson? It is not every Christian that has learned obedience. I know some Christians who think it would be dreadful to obey their pastor; albeit there are men "set over us in the Lord." They consider that no one has ever been set over them. Thank God, I was not, for it must be a very uncomfortable office. Obedience is one of the lessons which for everybody must be master—and mistress too, I was going to say; for the same spirit is seen in either sex. We all of us desire to rule; we all could do it, and could do things a world better than anybody else does. The man who has failed in business half-a-dozen times is the man who believes himself to be more fitted to be prime minister than anybody else.

We have next to learn sympathy. "We have not a High Priest that cannot be touched with a feeling of our infirmities. He was tempted in all points like as we are, yet without sin." He learned sympathy by suffering. By his passion He learned the practical passion of compassion. Whenever we suffer let us regard it as a part of our education, and so follow Christ closely, to learn of Him, as He learned of the Father. There it is, "Take my yoke upon you, and learn of Me...and ye shall find rest unto your souls." First, we come to Him, and He gives us rest; that is one kind of rest. Then we take his yoke upon us and learn of Him, and we find rest; that is another kind of rest. The one is given and the other is found; and there is no finding the second, except with the yoke upon our shoulders, and learning the will of Christ. For education, the dark helps to wean us from self-dependence.

> If, to-day, He deigns to bless us
> With a sense of pardoned sin;
> He, to-morrow, may distress us,
> Make us feel the plague within—
> All to make us
> Sick of self and fond of Him.

We always talk about Jacob wrestling with the angel. I suppose he did, for there cannot be a wrestle without two being in it. But the main point was that the angel wrestled with Jacob. Oh! what wrestling God has had with us to get self out of us! We are such Jacobs, we are so crafty, we are so wise; but God would beat us down into Israel; and, when He has laid us low, and made us lame, then will He make us whole. The death of self-dependence is the joy and triumph of faith, and this often comes through darkness. God bless the darkness, then, for our education, and may we follow Christ by a complete obedience to God.

Next, our Lord went into the dark for usefulness. We cannot follow Him in that central darkness where all the storm-clouds gather; into that awful winepress where He went alone we would not think of intruding. But there is a cup of which He has said, "Ye shall indeed drink of the cup that I drink of; and with the baptism wherewith I am baptized, ye shall be baptized withal."

WE HAVE NO ATONEMENT TO MAKE;

yet, for the gathering and saving of the elect of God, it is needful that the Church of God, in many of its members, should pass into the darkness. I will tell you a story; it shall be none the worse because it is from myself, for we are to bear testimony. One Sunday morning I preached from the text, "My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken me?" I think I went as near to the heart of it as I ever shall do, because I felt as if I were myself forsaken, and as if my God had left me. Such was my fear; such was the terrible consciousness of my sin. When I had done preaching I could not tell why I should be made to preach it. It was a wonder to me why I should be in such a condition. I was not unwell; I could see no physical cause; I had not wandered from God, and I could see no mental cause. On the Sabbath evening there came into the vestry a man of about sixty, whose eyes were bright with a strange lustre. He took my hand, and stood and held it, and cried. I looked at him, and thought I had got hold of a crazy man. He said to me, "Nobody ever preached my experience before. I have now been for years left, deserted, in a horrible gloom of great darkness; but this morning I learned that I was not the only man in the darkness, and I believe I shall get out!" I said, "Yes, I have got out; but now I know why I was put in." I had several interviews with that man which brought him back from the brink of insanity. I was enabled, by God's grace, to lead him into joy and peace, to go back and resume his business, and to escape the snare.

I believe ministers have to experience many things, not for themselves, but for the salvation of others; and we ought to be perfectly content to have it so, if God thereby will bless us. You cannot help a man if you do not know anything about him.

GOD MAY SEND YOU,

as a soul hunter, into many a ditch and many a dark wood, where his sheep have wandered; and if you did not know the way there, you might not know the way to bring them out of it. So, it is for usefulness that God calls us.

If we are in the dark, and keep the Christ in it, we should get to know a great many things. I will tell young Christians here a bit of what I have learned in the dark. I lost my evidences, and hunted for them—an awful job that, turning over drawers in the household, raking the place up from the coal cellar to the garret. Bunyan describes his pilgrim as looking out for his roll. If there were a man from whom I had a lease, some great lord who was my friend, and I lost that lease, I do not think I should go into court to try and prove my right, or look about for it. I should go to him and say, "Friend, I have lost my lease, will you give me a new one?" "Oh! yes; the loss of that piece of paper is no great concern. I will again write the lease out for you, for the property is certainly yours." If you have a deal of trouble to find your old faith and evidences, do not care about them, but

and get new evidences; begin again. I have learned that short cut, and have had to take it many times. The devil says, "You are no child of God." I generally say to him, "Nor are you." "But you are full of faults." "So are you." Why should he, black as he is, bring accusations against me? "Ah! well," he says, "but your experience is all a delusion, your faith all a lie." I say, "If you want my faith and experience, you may have them, and much good may they do you." I go to Christ, and believe in Him over again. Start afresh. It is always the cheapest way to go for a new lease, and not hunt up the old one. It is the surest way; because, after all, the comfort we get from evidences may be the perfume from stale flowers; but the comfort which is from Christ is a sniff from the Lily of the Valley, right away. When we have learned that, we have learned a great deal. When you have learned how to do this, tell others how to do it, and it will help them very much. When you meet with young people in their first trouble they are greatly discouraged; but you, who have often been in the dark, will not be so. "Father," said a child (there was an eclipse that morning) "God has blown the sun out." Ah! but the father knew better. The child was all alarm, for God had "blown the sun out." Many a child of God says, "God has forsaken me, cast me off." He has never cast one off yet. God will not forsake his people. Christ hath said it, "I give unto my sheep eternal life, and they shall never perish, neither shall any pluck them out of my hand."

I have done when I have added the third thing. Christ passed through the dark,

FOR THE GLORY OF GOD.

The lesson that He set us there was that He still believed. Kindly read Ps. xxii. Read there the faith of Christ on the cross. "Thou art He that took me out of the womb." He goes back to his early infancy when God cared for Him. "Our fathers trusted in Thee; they trusted, and thou didst deliver them." He dwells upon God's goodness to his people in all ages. Read over the twenty-second Psalm; I need not dwell upon it. Christ's faith never failed Him. Dear friends, can your faith stand a trial. "I have great faith," says one. Yes, there was a stag stood by the brink of a brook, and looked at his antlers reflected therein. "What fine horns I have. My friends in the herd no sooner hear the baying of a dog, than they take to their heels. But I will fight any dog; or, for the matter of that, any number of dogs. Let them come up, and they shall taste what hart's-horn can do." A Landseer might well have pictured him. But, presently, he heard the yelp of some young puppy of a hound, whereupon my fine gentleman has taken to his heels again, for and his legs became faster than he had dreamed they could be. So with untried faith; you must not be sure of it; it may carry you right away in the day of trouble.

Our Lord had abundant faith, and I will dwell only upon one instance of it—his faith in prayer to God. There are two parts in that wonderful prayer of his in the garden: "My Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from Me; nevertheless, not as I will, but as Thou wilt." We dwell too often, or too exclusively, upon the full surrender at the last. Notice the prayer itself: "If it be possible, let this cup pass from Me." When we are in the dark, we may go to God and plead with Him to take the dark away. You may ask Him to take the cup from you, and thus go as far as Christ did, which is a very long way. What is impossible with God? You may go as far as ever you like. I would encourage a child of God in the dark to possess his possession; as my friend Mr. Shaw said in prayer just now, to make real use of it, and expect God's help. We do not treat God as being what He really is; and sometimes, when we do, our darkness comes to an end.

A PERSONAL EXPERIENCE.

I remember a week of continued pain and scarcely any sleep. I was sitting up as best I could, one morning, in an agony of pain. I cried to the Lord for deliverance. I believed fully that He could deliver me there and then, and I put it to Him thus: "Thou art my Father, I know; and, if this were my child that suffers so, I would not let him suffer any longer. By thy Fatherhood, I beseech Thee, hear the prayer of thy child. I will say, 'Nevertheless, not as I will, but as Thou wilt.' I did not dwell upon that last part. When I really believed God to be my Father, and threw myself upon Him, I, after a few minutes, leaned back upon my pillow—the pain had gone, and I fell asleep.

God loves us to believe Him and take Him at his word. Because we can always go on to "number two," "Nevertheless, not as I will, but as Thou wilt." But we cannot go on to that, it seems to me, until we have tried the first part. Pray about the matter up to the hilt; lay it before God, up to the hilt. One of the greatest blessings God sends to man, is health; perhaps it is the greatest blessing we have, with the exception of sickness, which has often been an infinitely greater blessing than health. So that we may be praying against ourselves, when we are praying for health, and asking for loss. Still, perhaps the best way that you are permitted to take is to go right up to the very point in prayer, and then come in like your Master, with the sweet, entire,

PERFECT SURRENDER OF WILL.

Oh! brethren, let us learn this last lesson, "Nevertheless, not as I will, but as Thou wilt." I do not see how you can emphatically resign a matter into the hand of God, until, first of all, you have had your turn with Him in prayer; but when, in the full conviction that He can do what He likes and can turn darkness into day, you have spread the whole case before Him, leave it there, something surrendered, with a spiritual as well as a mental surrender. God help us in this.

Oh! that the Lord our God may be with you in the day of your trouble, if it is now! If it be not now, it may be very soon; for it is a queer world. One is never very happy, without a suspicion that something of another kind is coming on. We should expect some danger nigh when we perceive some new delight. But settle it in your minds—come fair, come foul, come rain, thunder, lightning, or sunlight, it shall make no difference to you; you will rest in Him who died for you, and hold to Him.

The CHAIRMAN at this point said the treasurer of the Mildmay Institutions reported a deficit in the banking account of about £950. He was sorry to add that the collections the previous day were very bad as compared with former years. The varied work at Mildmay could not go on without funds, and it was right that friends should know they could have the privilege of helping to support it.

Colonel MORTON presented requests for prayer on behalf of the work of Mr. and Mrs. Lethaby, at Kerak, Moab, where they are in danger from the advent of the Turks; on behalf of Gospel work throughout France; and for the work of the Cape General Mission.

"He Leadeth Me."

BY REV. ANDREW A. BONAR, D.D.

YOU know, Christian friends, every word of the Bible is a "lively oracle"; just like a voice from the Holy of Holies. It is often exceedingly profitable to dwell and linger upon one word. "Leader" is one of those words—the word before us to-day. The connection in which it is given is very interesting. It is the Father who has said: "Behold I have given Him as a Witness to the people, and as a Leader." "I have given Him." He does not name Him; how then are we to find out who is meant? There is a full length portrait of Him in Isa. liii. It is He who was wounded for our transgressions, and bruised for our iniquities; Him, on whom the chastisement of our peace was laid, and with whose stripes we are healed. I have given Him, who poured out his soul unto death, and made Himself an offering for sin—I have given Him, as a Leader. So there is One given to be our Leader whose heart overflows with loving kindness. I have no time to do more than just refer you to this theme, and leave you to dwell upon it.

THE ETYMOLOGY OF THE WORD

is this: it is one who goes in the front; then all of us come up behind Him. It is the same word, though differently rendered in some other passages of the Old Testament, as Prince and Messiah. Our Leader, I say, is one who goes in front, and whom we follow. I do not dwell on this; but did not the Master recognise his own name when He was on earth—the Word made flesh, dwelling among us? How often did He use this expression in calling men to Himself—"Follow Me." Let us just keep that thought before us. There is no more simple way of speaking of salvation than this—"Follow Me"; yet no more comprehensive word could be used.

"Follow me," says Jesus. If we follow Him we soon learn who He is. We hear Him say: "I am the Bread of God, that came down from heaven." Again, we hear Him say: "I and the Father are One." We find out that He is the Son come from the bosom of the Father. We hear Him say: "Thy sins are forgiven" to this sinner and that. "Who is this that forgiveth sins also? Who can forgive sins but God only?" By simply keeping close to Him we find out who He is whom we must follow.

NOTICE WHAT HE DOES.

See his wondrous obedience, and how at every step you find Him glorifying the Father. "I do always the things that please Him." "It is my meat to do the will of my Father, and to finish his work." There never was such obedience rendered as was rendered by the Incarnate Word. Never was such beautiful honour rendered to the law of God. I was going to say that, like John the Baptist, He began his obedience before He came into the world. You know that from Bethlehem till He bowed his head on Calvary it was all obedience, loving God with all his heart and soul, and strength and mind. Did you ever think upon his bowing his head and giving up the ghost? It was declaring his perfect acquiescence in all that the Father had laid upon Him. "He hath done all things well." There is the one side of the robe of righteousness—the obedience of Christ; perfect in its whiteness.

Look at the other. Follow Him closely, and you hear Him speaking of the death He is to die. You come at last to Gethsemane, and there you see his tears; you hear his strong crying. Follow Him to Calvary. There is a Leader! The only begotten Son from the bosom of the Father lays Himself on the cross, and invites the flaming sword—the sword that watched the gate of Eden—to strike Himself. As if He had said: "Awake, O sword, against Me, the Shepherd; against the Man who is the Almighty's fellow." Follow Him closely, and you see it all done. You see the sacrifice, and what do you do? You lay your hand upon the finished sacrifice and cry "Amen!" Oh, this following of our Leader

WILL SOLVE MANY PROBLEMS.

It will solve the problem about your feelings. Our brother [Mr. Spurgeon] has been saying some delightful things about feeling and where to put it. If you keep close to the Leader, that problem will be solved. What does the soldier do when he is following a favourite leader? He keeps following him closely, and does not care much about anything else; he has no time to think about his own feelings. That is a blessed state to live in. Let us try to keep close to our Leader.

But I should like you to follow Him beyond Calvary even. He has ascended. He has gone to the right hand of the Father. We follow Him thither, and we find Him our Leader still. I have not time to enlarge upon this; but notice something of how He leads us there. I would ask you to think of Him leading us through the green pastures. Am I telling anyone's experience when I say that this is the way He very often does? You remember, when He was leading Israel, they came at last to the borders of the land. He had been leading them by the pillar of cloud hitherto; but the cloud disappeared when Joshua got the message: "The Ark is to go before you." The Ark was a type of Christ. There was the mercy-seat, blood-sprinkled; the glory of God shining on it; and the cherubim resting their whole weight upon it. That was to go before; and all that the nation had to do was to keep their eye upon the Ark. It would be away yonder, about a quarter of a mile, but full in sight, and the Israelite had nothing to do but to keep his eye on it and walk on. They did so, and, lo! when they put their feet into the Jordan, to wet their feet. It had fled, and they passed to the other side dry-shod. Christian friends, is He not a glorious Leader? He does all this for us. You know it was said to Joshua that morning, "You have not passed this way heretofore." But He knew the way.

THERE IS NO JORDAN

I know not the way that I take,
But well do I know my Guide.

Then, let us follow Him wherever He leads.

A few days after the camp of Israel had got over, Joshua—and a most lovable man he is—is away alone among the palm trees near Jericho; and plenty of them there are. He has found out a delightfully retired place. I think I see him meditating on what he had read of God's truth—the books of Moses, I suppose, and some other writings, no doubt. While he was brooding over and considering them, wondering what would be the next step in the progress, suddenly there is a rustling noise, and a man with a drawn sword is standing over him. He looks up, and, warrior as he was, he is not the least alarmed. He quietly looks at his visitor, and says:—"Art thou for us, or for our adversaries?" There is a smile on the face of Him who waves that bright sword, and he replies: "As Captain of the Lord's host am I now come." "I am not going to stay in the cloud any more; I led you by the Ark when you passed over Jordan; but now I am going to draw the sword and cut down the nations of Canaan." That was

A NEW WAY OF LEADING

Do we not find something like this in our study of the Word. You remember how you came to the cross, and for a while you were dwelling there, leaning on Christ as all your righteousness; and you had little else. I spoke of Christ's obedience as one side of the robe of righteousness. I should have said that the other side was the suffering unto death, even the death of the cross—the red side of the robe of righteousness. You dwelt long upon, "Jehovah our Righteousness"; and you got enough to keep you meditating for ever, as you thought. That went on for a time; but you were reading the Word one day, and to your amazement you saw a truth that never struck you before. You found the Word said you were united to Christ. Strange to say, while leaning on Christ, you became one with Him—a member of his body. You delighted in this new-found truth of your union with Christ; just as you never lost your thought of the cross as your righteousness. We sometimes hear now-a-days of people getting past the cross. I hope none of us have ever got past the cross. We stay at the cross; while we look on to the crown we never get past the cross.

Then you remember another day you were quietly reading the Bible, meditating on the law of God, when the Holy Spirit touched your heart; and what did you now see? You said: "I never observed this before—not so plainly at least; I never observed how much I have learned about Christ's intercession for me." The truth of that got a firm place in your heart. You always believed it as a doctrine, but it had now got a place in your experience, that He ever liveth to make intercession for you.

"EVERY MOMENT."

I once went to visit a dying Christian man, in a solitary dwelling. He was rather low. He knew well whom he had believed, and I pointed Him to Christ as ever making intersession, and said: "Do you know this verse, 'I the Lord do keep it; I will water it every moment'?" (Isa. xxvii. 3). The sick man looked up: "'Every moment!' where is that?" I told him, and went away. When I saw him next day, he said: "Oh, I thank you with all my heart for that word, 'every moment'! Does Christ intercede for me every moment? I never thought of that before." That thought carried him happily down the valley of the shadow of death.

Let me mention another thing that I daresay you have often found to be the case. You were quietly reading the Word, and you were given very clearly to see that you had received the Holy Ghost. Do you adore and love and delight in Him? Oh to think that the Holy Ghost has made my soul his temple, and that my body is the wall of that temple. Do you believe that your body as well as your soul is the temple of the Holy Ghost? How that helps you. Then there comes another day. Perhaps you pick up a book that I recollect years ago, when I was a student—my brother, Mr. Spurgeon, I daresay knows it well—Godwin's "Christ's Heart in Heaven." There he tells us that the heart of our Leader in heaven is just the same heart as He had down here, and we may deal with Him as his disciples dealt with Him when on the earth. What a lift that gave you—to think of his heart in heaven as the same in sympathy and in nearness.

A FORGOTTEN TRUTH.

Then, do you remember the time when the truth of Christ's coming again burst upon your view? We have been giving too little place to this subject. Why, we find that in the first two Epistles ever written to the early Church, at Thessalonica, Paul presented to them no less than eight times the thought of Christ's coming again. It lifts up; it enlightens; it sanctifies.

We are nearing the end; the last hour is coming. When we get within the veil, how will it be with us then? He will lead us still. You know the last verse of Ps. xlviii.: "This God is our God for ever and ever; He will be our guide even unto death." Properly translated, it is: "He will be our guide (our Leader) even over death." We are never bidden to think of dying, or to face death. Christ has faced death for us; and, looking to Him, gazing on Him, all is well. Ay, He will lead us in within the veil. A believer once said to me he was a little troubled because it was the angels who carried Lazarus, and laid him in Abraham's bosom; he had thought it would be Christ Himself who would receive him. Another believer in the company said: "Oh, but you know He has the keys; He has the key of death too, and He will open the door to let you in, and so you will see Him first, though He may send his angels to conduct you thither. At any rate, our Leader who has gone to prepare a place, will let you see all He has prepared for you. He will come forward and say, 'I must show you the mansions and the rooms.' And, best of all, He will always be King." Oh, are we not ready to sing:—

There the red rose of Sharon
Unfolds its heartsome bloom,
And fills the air of heaven
With ravishing perfume;
Oh to behold it blossom,
While by its fragrance fanned;
The Lamb is all the glory
Of Immanuel's Land.

Are we to take farewell of our Leader now? Oh, no! you will NEVER TAKE FAREWELL OF HIM;

He will go before you still. I could prove it to you by his own testimony, and by the testimony of his Apostles. Take that of John: "The Lamb that is in the midst of the throne shall feed them" (as a shepherd feeds his flock), "and lead them to the living fountains of waters." What are these living fountains of waters? I suppose He will give us such enlarged views of all his ways, of the wisdom of his providences; He will give us such enlarged discoveries of the riches of his grace—that we shall say, "There is another, and another, and another fountain of living water springing up," and He will lead us from the one to the other. What we get now is only a beginning, a foretaste. It is strange how Paul speaks, though he had been in the third heaven, and the Spirit was dictating his words, when he tells of our being seated in heavenly places with Christ. That he seems to regard as just the beginning, for he goes on to say: "That in the ages to come He might show the exceeding riches of his grace in his kindness towards us through Christ Jesus." Oh! what sights lie before us! Surely, we are wearying for the time, longing for the day to arrive, and we be found ready to enter in with Him.

Am I speaking to any unsaved one in this vast assembly? Will you not join the company of those who follow Christ? Do it quickly, for whenever the Lord said, "Follow Me," it had to be done at once. "Follow Me, and let the dead bury their dead." When the angel came to Peter in the prison, he acted in the spirit of the Master. He shook the Apostle out of his sleep, and said, "Rise, Peter; throw your coat about you; put on your sandals, and follow me quickly." There is no time to be lost. That is Christ's way of calling the sinner to come. There is nothing in the way on his part; He asks you to come at once.

We have taken but a hurried look at our Leader, but I am sure we all agree with the well-known hymn that says:—

He leadeth me! O blessed thought,
O words with heavenly comfort fraught;
Whate'er I do, where'er I be,
Still 'tis God's hand that leadeth me.

Sometimes 'mid scenes of deepest gloom,
Sometimes where Eden's bowers bloom;
By waters calm, o'er troubled sea,
Still 'tis God's hand that leadeth me.

He leadeth me! He leadeth me!
By his own hand He leadeth me;
His faithful follower I would be,
For by his hand He leadeth me.

Dr. Grattan Guinness offered prayer, and the great assemblage was dismissed with the Benediction from Dr. Bonar.

THURSDAY EVENING.

IN the absence of Sir S. A. Blackwood owing to official duties, the chair was taken by

MR. J. E. MATHIESON.

In the course of a brief but interesting opening address, he said:—I dare say a good many here have been in Switzerland; and perhaps some more of you are going soon to what is called the playground of Europe; and you may have taken part in some mountain excursion. You wanted to climb one of those beautiful Alpine heights, and be able to tell your friends how you got there, and that you succeeded in mounting to the summit of some singularly glorious peak. What is the first thing to be done? To get a guide. You want a trustworthy guide, because an inferior guide may lead you into difficulties and dangers, and even death. How do you ascertain the qualities of your guide? Why, you look at his credentials; you bring his book, and you turn over page after page; and as you turn over you see that on such and such a day, in some former year, he led a certain party to a summit of this mountain or that; and beneath is the signature of the person he has thus led successfully to the summit. We have in this blessed Book the credentials of our own glorious Guide—not only his own blessed testimony and wonderful works, but we have a testimony of all the prophets concerning Him, and the testimony of the Apostles; and we have, above all, the testimony of the Father: "This is my beloved Son, hear ye Him." Oh, He has all the credentials.

The first thing to do when you have your guide is to trust him, trust him implicitly, that he will lead you straight to the place where you want to go. I have seen sometimes an expedition of that sort going forth—in fact, I have taken part in one or two myself—and I have noticed this, that the party very often sets out at a very brisk pace, and soon you say, "Where are the guides?" When you look back, you find the guides are behind you. They know better than you do what is the correct pace to go at. Young believers are very apt to rush forth at a tremendous pace, and outstrip others; but, taking the wrong turn, you get into the crooked path, and so there is a good deal of time lost. But you go out upon green slopes and pastures, and go through the woods, and get to the snowline, and it looks so beautiful and easy that you think you can take a run over it, and get to the end of it immediately. No, there is something to be done. What is to be done? Beneath those snow slopes are great crevasses, most dangerous and deep, into which if you plunge you will be lost. The next thing is to put on the rope. You are fixed. You are joined to your leader. You are joined to everyone of your party.

IS NOT THIS AN EMBLEM

of the trust we should have in our Lord Jesus Christ? We put our trust in Him, and then we have vital union with Him. Not only union with Him, but we have union and communion with all believing people. Not only are we tied in that mountain excursion to the guide, but we are tied to every one of the party, and we all go onwards and upwards, But then we come to something still more difficult; a sharp, steep piece of ice meets us. What is to be done now? Ah, here our leader comes in with his ice-axe. He cuts a step here higher and higher, and into that step He puts his foot as he goes slowly and painfully upwards, and then everyone follows Him, step by step; and, if you do not put your foot into that little place cut for your feet, you go down a steep precipice on the other side. This is a little picture of following our guide.

One word more. We know something of our past life. We know something of that path which we have already trodden. There is the future before us which is all unknown to us. We know all intelligent Christians know something of the ultimate future which awaits the blessed and those who are believers in the Lord Jesus Christ, but of the immediate future of our own little life we know nothing. We know not what is to be the future path, whether it is to be dark or brief, bright or long; and a blessed thought is this, whatever there is, the Lord Jesus is the Leader. He is the key of the future. He has the key of David. It is He that shutteth and no man openeth; He that openeth and no man shutteth:—

Christ holds the key of all unknown,
And I am glad;
If other hands should hold the key,
Or if He trusted it to me,
I might be sad.

Triumphing in Christ.

BY REV. H. W. WEBB-PEPLOE.

(THE speaker read Rom. viii. from ver. 35 to end of chapter. In some introductory remarks he pointed the distinction between the Greek words Archēgos and Archōn as used with reference to our Lord in various parts of the New Testament. The former presents Him as the prince of his people (Acts iii. 15; v. 31), and the latter as the One who is first in authority and lordship (Rev. i. 5). He proceeded to speak of Christ as the Author, Ruler, Prince, and Governor of the life of God's people.)

I cannot fail to see in the three divisions that are brought before us in this text Isa. lv. 4, the three great properties, or positions, which the Lord Jesus, our Saviour, deigns to take up with regard to his people, whom He redeems and delivers. In the "Witness," I see the character of the Lord Jesus witnessing to us of the perfect sacrifice which makes us acceptable in the sight of God in heaven; witnessing to God of the perfection of the sacrifice by which we are lifted up into a position in the heavens. I see in the "Leader" his grand position as a King who is to be the Ruler, and therefore in every sense the Guide of the life of his people while upon earth, at each point of their need, whatsoever it may be. I see in that which will engage your attention to-morrow, the title of the Lord Jesus as the "Commander." Not at all what we call a commander over forces, for the expression in the original has no bearing upon that. It is found, when translated, to mean one who sets up precepts, one who has a right to and carries out his right to command us; giving orders to his people as the Great Teacher. Therefore the Lord will come before you to-morrow as being the Great Teacher and Prophet of his people. Thus we have Him as the Priest, the King, and the Prophet of his Church in the three great titles —Witness, Leader, and Commander.

To-night I am to call your attention to Him as the Leader who takes his people away from defeat into all the blessed which ought ever to mark the triumphant Church which Christ Jesus has redeemed with his precious blood. How shall I do this? If I look back to the original, I find that the expression is one that is made use of in certain passages wherever God is deigning to call out from among men one who is to be a great captain or leader of his people for victory over their enemies. For instance, in 1 Sam. x., Samuel pours the oil upon the head of Saul, and says: "Is it not because the Lord hath chosen thee to be the captain over his inheritance?" Also in chaps. xiii., xiv. of the same book, we read that God puts aside Saul, and chooses David to be the captain over his people. Once again, in Dan. ix. 25, 26, you find the same term adopted. The Lord Jesus is the Messiah, and is called the Messiah—the Prince. We have four translations of the term, the Captain, the Ruler, the Prince, the Leader; this (Isa. lv. 4) is the only passage where the title "Leader" is given.

I turn from the mere expressions to consider the deeply spiritual meaning involved in these words; and what shall we say of the position of a Christian who is called to know and to live out the blessed knowledge which God the Holy Ghost may give him of the Lord Jesus Christ as Leader, Captain, Ruler, and Prince over his people's life, and specially with regard to victory?

You must have observed often, I suppose, that Paul was an exceedingly bold man at all points of his life. He was bold before he knew the Lord Jesus, when he sought to persecute even unto the death, but that was

THE BOLDNESS OF IGNORANCE.

He knew not against whom he was fighting that day. But, as soon as he was converted to God, and knew the Lord Jesus, he became far bolder. This was the boldness of knowledge and trust on the part of one who had learned directly by the teaching of the Holy Ghost that he had a Commander; that he had a Leader; that he had a Prince; that he had a Ruler over his life. From that moment he had never known what it was to be defeated, and he could not know it. Paul learned the lesson that from the moment of his conversion he was not only bought with a price to render service to the King; but that, by virtue of his accepting of the Lord Jesus as his life, he became so unified with Him that he could say with all humility, "To me to live is Christ." "The life which I now live, in the flesh, I live by the faith of the Son of God." "I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me." It was this only that enabled him to speak with such holy boldness of his

EXPECTATION OF PERPETUAL VICTORY.

I suppose it is only to the spiritual man that there is any apprehension at all of the meaning of these words which Paul uses. For instance, "Thanks be unto God which always causeth us to triumph," or leadeth us in triumph "in Christ Jesus." Again, in writing to the Philippians, "I can do all things in (as it is in the Greek, and not through) Christ which strengtheneth me." To the unspiritual man—to the man who knows nothing of the great truths that we would press forward—such doctrines as these present a mere absurdity. Such a man cannot comprehend how anyone, without boasting, could dare to say that he is all-prevailing; that he never knows what it is to go about except in triumph in Christ Jesus. But of this Leader, who knew no defeat, and who intends that his people should know no defeat, I am to speak to you to-night.

I do thank God that we are called together this time at Mildmay (whatever other subjects may have been before us in years gone by) to speak now of a perfect Saviour. There are many who say that, when we preach Christ Jesus, we preach perfection. We do, and we are not ashamed to preach perfection; we preach

PERFECTION IN CHRIST JESUS.

We preach absolute helplessness and sinfulness in the man whom Christ Jesus not only redeemed, but brings into the knowledge of his redemption. We preach the helpless man to the last moment of his life, with sin dwelling in him, and against him except as washed away by the blood of Jesus. And yet we preach that there is a perfect Saviour, and that that perfect Saviour knows no defeat, when simple, perfect, absolute trust is put in Him, and when men, by the Spirit of God, learn to realise what it is to have Christ Jesus for their Saviour.

It is remarkable, as I said, in the writings of Paul, that he knows nothing whatever of a victory gained by the believer—as gained by anyone apart from Christ Jesus the Lord. He never speaks of himself or any believer as hoping for victory in the battle that is to be fought and won, by following a leader as we would follow an earthly commander if we were soldiers. It is impossible for us as natural men to know anything about the great spiritual reality which we are called thus to recognise. We speak of a man as a grand leader or commander in battle, and recognise that all who follow him are directed to come after him in the sense that they are separate entities or personalities from their commander. And though we may speak of our feelings as being wrapt up in our commander, and though a dying soldier may say concerning himself: "Open my heart and you will find Napoleon written there," yet no earthly commander can ever be identified with his followers in the sense in which Jesus Christ must be recognised as being actually identified with his soldiers upon earth.

We are not here to speak of a victory to be gained by looking at the eye of our Redeemer and following Him when He comes before us. We are not here to speak of a victory zeal, and devotion to our Leader, so that as He calls and beckons we gladly follow. That may be true with regard to our physical body and natural feelings; with regard to the life that we are called to live in the natural sense of the man upon earth. But in the spiritual sense, in the great spiritual realities of the Gospel of Christ, what we are called to recognise is this: that there is no victory, and no claim to have victory, and no call for service in battle from the Lord to his people, except for those who apprehend this truth—that they are unified with the Lord Jesus Christ actually as well as judicially before God in heaven; so that, as up in heaven before God Christ represents us, and we rejoice that we have the perfect Saviour there on our behalf, down here upon earth that same Saviour is directly inhabiting, indwelling every single soul that is a real believer; and the Christian is made so one with Christ that every motion, attitude, action, thought, word, and deed of the life on earth ought to be the carrying out before the world of the very life that the Son of God now lives.

TO BE GAINED BY ENTHUSIASM,

TO WHAT EXTENT THAT IS POSSIBLE,

I do not stop to speak of. It depends, of course, upon the measure of faith and the restrictions imposed through the body of corruption, which we carry about with us upon earth. There is no perfect fulfilling of the law on the part of any man who ever lived on earth, after the type, and figure, and pattern, and example left to us by the Lord Jesus Christ: of the all-victorious man against all his enemies. But there is this—from the moment the believer is joined to Christ by the faith that saves him, and has made him one with the Lord Jesus Christ, it is not he that lives or fights, but it is the Christ of God who lives and fights in him. I trust I speak clear doctrine here, not contradicting in anywise one word of God's Book. But, so far as I can gather from the Word, there is no life of the Son of God down here on earth for any purpose whatever, except as He lives in, and is exhibited in his people. That is to say, that even in the matter of fighting, Christ never fights for his Church as separated from the individuals who compose that Church. Christ never acts upon the earth now, I humbly believe, from what I gather from the Book, on behalf of his people. He fought the fight against the world, the flesh, and the devil; and against sin in all its realities and manifestations, when He was here in mortal flesh. Having gained the victory, and led captivity captive, He proceeded on high, and there received gifts for men. Those gifts He has poured abroad richly, even his own Spirit of life, his own power that He had acquired by purchase. It is not now the Christ of God, sent upon earth to lead you to battle, as a separate Commander divided from you; you one personality, and He the other; but it is Christ in you.

IT IS NOT CHRIST FOR YOU.

That is true up there; but down here it is Christ in you, and that alone, that will lead you forward to victory.

Now, tell me, as I have traced the doctrine of the matter, if Christ be the fighter in you, his people, what right has the believer to dream of defeat? What right has he to go about cringing with fear, when the call of battle is heard? It is not I, but Christ that fighteth in me. He fighteth, not only in us, but for us. Now against a defeated foe and a dishonoured enemy we step forward, in the strength of the Lord God, and cry: "Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors through Him that loved us." The Apostle Paul testifies to his belief in what the Lord will do, with not self-assertive, but in the confidence he has in the might of Christ. He puts forward that statement: "In all these things we are more than conquerors through Him that loved us," not simply as a mathematical matter of certainty, but as a grand statement of spiritual truth, which is to become operative exactly so far as we claim it by faith and take possession of what God provides for us in Christ Jesus.

Are we quite clear, as we begin to look out upon the battle, that it is not a following Christ as the great Leader; that it is not even Christ turning and waving his sword, and calling to his followers to come on; the Leader that I set before you is the Captain who is really in my soul. He is to take possession of my being first. He dominates me, and when He dominates me He then bids me look out and say: Who shall condemn? who shall prevail? who shall separate? who shall hurt? who shall prevent the victory that God demands when we realise this blessed truth? "I am persuaded that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature shall be able to separate us from the love of God." And where is it? "In Christ Jesus the Lord"; and I, the believer, am blessed in Him.

As we turn from the doctrinal to the practical, and ask how this shall be applied to the grand fields of life in which we are called as Christians to fight, it is very magnificent to follow the Apostle's line of thought throughout Rom. viii., and to see how he works onward from "no condemnation" to the realisation of "no separation"—the man's whole soul going out with the thought. There is no field that I am called to walk through, and to fight the good fight of faith in, in which I need ever be vanquished, with Christ as my life.

WHAT A GRAND THOUGHT.

"The law of the Spirit of life hath made me free from the law of sin and death." So, not only is there no condemnation; but "the righteousness of the law is to be fulfilled in us, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit." You will remember how the Apostle speaks of the secret life; the personal life that the believer has to lead with regard to the flesh; and its relation towards the flesh, now that he has been joined to the Lord Jesus; and the temptations that come from the flesh in all forms, so that he is able to bring it before us in the guise of a foe. He says: "The carnal mind is enmity." The very word, as it were, is idealistic of an enemy. "The carnal mind is enmity against God." The moment the Lord Jesus Christ has been joined to me, so as to take possession of my soul, that moment the carnal mind that is still within every believer is, of course, at enmity, and the struggle is begun. I trust I speak, not only to the consciousness, but to the conscience of you all, when I say that I believe Gal. v. 16 onward to represent from the moment he is born into the kingdom of God to the last moment he lives upon earth. I know nothing from God's Book, or from the experience of man, of one delivered from the presence of the flesh. I know nothing of a condition of things in which there is no strife between the flesh and the spirit. I believe that to the last there is always the flesh, ready to assert its fearful power as against the Holy Spirit, by whom Christ inhabits every member. When the Apostle tries to give courage to the believer, he says: "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his"; but if the Spirit of Christ dwell in him, then Christ dwells in him. In Ephesians he prays "that Christ may dwell in your heart by faith:" that now the man who knows what it is to have Christ dwelling in him by the Holy Spirit may realise this—that though the flesh is always acting, seeking to dominate the man, and to take him back, yet the Lord Jesus Christ by his Spirit is there in the man to give him deliverance, to gain the victory. So, though there is no deliverance from the presence and the pressure of the flesh at any one single moment of life, yet, thank God, every true believer may say: "Thanks be unto God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." Moment by moment, as we live the momentary life, not only of what is called faith, but of realisation, the Christ of God inhabits us.

THE NORMAL CONDITION OF EVERY BELIEVER,

WHAT A BATTLE IT IS!

Every man in this congregation, great as it is, knows, I believe, what the life of struggle is; what he calls fighting against sin, and the flesh that tries to dominate the spirit. You are glad to realise this: that the victory is Christ's, and that Christ is in you. As you apprehend it in the moment of temptation, when the strife seems to be imminent, it is Christ the Lord who is indeed the all-victorious Leader, the Prince of life. The moment that Christ has stepped in and gained the victory, the soul turns from the alluring or degrading assault of the devil and the flesh; and in that moment you are able to say, "In all these things we are more than conquerors."

Once only in the Bible do we find the word "over-conquer." Blessed be God, we over-conquer through Him that loved us; and it is this that I am called to preach. I can see in the faces before me a sense, perhaps of half distrust, half anxiety, or half irritation, and half yearning that they could know this; and yet that it cannot be—

THAT IT IS TOO GOOD TO BE TRUE.

Do let me appeal to your own consciences; it is not what you have hitherto thought that you came to the Mildmay Conference to hear; it is not what you have known of life when it was a failure, but it is a life that God emphasises as a victory that you have come to learn. Christ my Lord, my Prince, my Ruler, gives the victory when the temptation comes, when the assault is delivered, because it is "not I, but Christ" who meets the foe in his strength.

Turn to the second great department of life. Paul says: "We shall be glorified together, if so be that we suffer with Him." The second great branch of experience for all Christians is that they have to go through the long continuance of tribulation—trial and constant temptation from without. It is of this the Apostle now speaks; the other is the contest of the spirit against the flesh. He now speaks of the great external foes that will assault, and he continues to put them before us from verse 18 on to the close of the chapter. We trace this that comes through tribulation, through circumstances, through the assaults of foes, whoever they may be; whether they be actually the foes of a man's household (for these ofttimes make him groan the most), or whether it be from poverty, distress, sickness, trial, sword, nakedness, peril, or any other foe that comes against us from without to assault the believer and turn him from his blessed power in Christ. Here again the Apostle says that there is this indwelling Spirit of God, who, if He be realised in the mighty possession of the soul, if He be trusted as the great Intercessor, brings Christ to the man who takes the gift of God. Such a man may know what as a believer he is to expect, and has a right to expect, and ought to expect. And that is, to be "more than conqueror through Him that loved us."

I cannot dwell in detail upon the blessed power of the victory that Christ secures for those who trust in Him. The great point I wish to press home is that we have not got a separate Commander far away. Many believers think they must call in Christ to help them in their time of trial, as though the Lord Jesus to whom they cried were at a distance. No, brethren. We are to learn by God's help that that Christ, who is one with him, gives the victory over every trial, makes the man more than conqueror in all the afflictions, troubles, strifes, and distresses of life; for life is one long strife, whilst we remain in the flesh; and yet the man need never know what it is to be defeated. We may expect, by God's grace, from this hour to be more than conquerors in all these things. As you pass out to-night to the great strife of home-life, and business-life, and world-life that every believer must live, what are you going to expect? What will you dare to expect from to-night?

Ofttimes it has been said to one who preaches like this: "Do you mean to say that from this moment I need never expect to fail again?" Brethren, I am not here to make an oration or preach. Last year, when I might have spoken to you, I stood very near the gates of death, as I thought. This year, raised up by the mercy of God to come and speak any word which the Lord may have given me, do you think I care for man's opinion, when I have to preach such a perfect Christ; such a magnificent Saviour; such a Saviour who can keep me in the face of all trial; who can make me conqueror in all struggles; who can deliver out of every doubt, and difficulty, and danger, and never let his people know defeat, if they put their trust in Him? Do you think I dare to lower the standard, because of the low experience of too many Christians? Would you not rather wish that my one word should be, that the Christ of God should speak. The Christ of God is perfect; though you will never know perfection, because the body of your corruption and the body of your humiliation still remains with you as the habitation in which your personality now dwells. Yet, according to the measure of your faith, and your realisation by faith, you have a right to expect victory; not because you have got a bit better or learnt to trust a little more than yesterday; or because you are a little more watchful in striving against your temper, and against the devil; but because by faith you have apprehended something more of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus, and of that which the Apostle Paul described as the thing for which you were to be apprehended of God in Christ Jesus the Lord.

BRETHREN, DO WE BELIEVE IT

—that all victory, love, and grace, are to be shed abroad in our souls? "Then should our hearts no longer roam, rooted and fixed in God." Remember, as the last word I have to utter this night: if ever you fail; if ever the devil, the flesh, or the world overcomes you, and scores a victory against a child of God, it is not because Christ fails. It is not because you, perhaps, do not cry out loud enough to Him in the hour of your weakness; it is because you had not the faith at the moment of need to apprehend, as you should have had, that God has given to you a perfect Leader, who is to dwell in you, and make you more than conqueror in all your need. That Victor is Jesus Christ, our precious Saviour.

Christ's Eternal Leadership.

BY REV. JOHN SMITH.

THROUGHOUT the whole day we have been engaged in studying the great subject of Christ our Leader. We have been taught in a way that we cannot forget for many a day, if for ever, what a wonderful Leader this Christ is in every variety of human circumstances. The speaker who has preceded me has given us to see afresh—it may be to some of us for the first time—that there is a living Christ in us, giving us present victory over the power of sin. In one respect my position differs from that occupied by the brethren who have gone before me. They have kept to the trodden ground of experience; but I have to go beyond experience. The text given to me is, "The Lamb who is in the midst of the throne shall lead them unto living fountains of waters."

Now, none of us have seen that glorious place. We cannot realise such a place on earth. Some of you coming for the first time to London have tried to realise what sort of a place London is. Well, I am sure you found out it was a different place from what you expected. We cannot realise even strange places here; how much less can we realise that glorious world where our risen Redeemer dwells? And yet God, in his wonderful grace and his wonderful wisdom, taking our experience of the world in which we dwell, and the conditions in which we exist daily, has sketched for us, in a way we can understand, marvellously complete and glorious pictures of that better world. At the close of this day, in which our hearts have been weighted with blessing, it may not be out of place for a little while to look beyond, although we do not yet know what we shall be, although the world of glory is as yet hid from our eyes.

As it appears to me, our blessed Lord, in sketching to us and giving us from our present experience some conception of the glories of the world that lies before, supplies the law of comparison and the law of contrast. In this figure of Leader we have got a wonderful combination of the two. First of all we have got the method of comparison. In this figure of Leader we are reminded of the great facts of association, and that there will be a personal association. We know what association we have had with Him here; and how blessed, glorious, and tender it has been. Then there is the other idea which is also familiar to us. It is the very key-note of our life—submission and surrender. It has been a struggle day by day to yield to Christ, ofttimes hard and difficult; but yonder we shall yield with a fulness and completeness that we cannot realise here.

There is another idea, to which I shall further advert—the idea of progress; for there will be progress yonder. But though we have got, in this figure of the Leader, very many of the elements of our present experience translated, as it were, and lifted to a higher plane, yet there will be many new elements. Christ will be new to us, and what that means I cannot tell. We shall see Him with the bodily eye, and we shall be known to Christ; for perfect body will be joined to perfect spirit. We shall be without a fault before the throne. God and the Saviour will be new to us then in a far fuller sense than here, for our citizenship will be in heavenly places. We will be with the Lamb, who is in the midst of the throne. The valleys of humiliation, through which God makes his saints to pass here, will be all overpast, and our progress will be from glory to glory, from vision to vision, from heights of power to fresh and

GRANDER HEIGHTS OF POWER.

We shall be led to fountains of living water.

Let us look at some of the fragmentary thoughts on this great theme. In dealing with the unknown it is always well to try and get a footing in the known. There is a word in this text that brings us to the known—"The Lamb." If there is one thing that is dearer than another in the great Apocalypse it is the frequency with which God the Holy Ghost puts Jesus Christ in the light in which he is most familiar to us—"The Lamb that was slain;" "The Lamb that is in the midst of the throne." I draw several inferences from that. Let me mention one. Have there not been times in your experience when the mere sight of old friends has deeply moved you? What a revelation there has been in an old face that you have not seen for twenty or thirty years! It brings the past back like a dream. When you and I leave this lower world, and pass away from the clouds and shadows of time, and when we see no longer the cross on which our Christ was crucified, but the once crucified, now exalted Redeemer—will there not be in that a resurrection vision of the past; of our sin and unworthiness; our failures and backslidings; and the abounding love and long-suffering of the risen Christ? Will not that be a revelation? The past will be crystallized on the living page of memory, and all the new experiences of that world will be something added to the deep basal experience of time.

There is one passage (I do not know if I understand it fully) that has always enkindled my imagination; it is the vision (Rev. xv. 2) of the sea of glass and they that have gotten the victory. We read in Revelation, "There was no more sea," and the meaning I have put upon it is this: The sea is the great isolating element of time. It corresponds to sin, which is the great isolating element in the moral life of man. There will be no isolation yonder; there will be no sea. Here it is true, by ingenuity, and yielding to the laws of the sea, we have made that which was a barrier, the highway of the nations. And Christ has, so to speak, made sin to minister to its own final defeat. One day it will be swallowed up in victory. Allow me to use the figure of a poet from whom I have received much quickening—Robert Browning. In one of his poems he describes the moral attitude of man in this age as that of a swimmer. We are able to lift our heads above the environment of evil into the upper air, but evil is all around, and it is a constant struggle of faith to keep it up. But let us turn to the picture in Revelation xv. Whatever the period it belongs to, this is true—they have gotten the victory. We are now rejoicing in the presence of Christ and trusting Him for victory; but we are still in the midst of the conflict. They have gotten the victory. Look at the sea; it is a sea of glass and fire cooling to solidity. By the conflict with evil we will be established immutable against evil; the life of God in us developing it on every side into grace and power and aspiration; a spiritual absorption of our whole being committed to God from the centre to the circumference, so that to fall will be as great an impossibility to us as to the angels round about the throne. And what do they sing? The song is not only the song of redemption, but the song of struggle, the song of the Lamb. As I said before, we recall the past struggles of time and the experience of

OUR OWN UTTER NOTHINGNESS.

Let me put a companion picture, that is a spiritual picture, and I love it because it shows the continuity between time and eternity. Archbishop Whately once was near dying. His chaplain took the Bible, and, amongst other passages, read Phil. iii. 21 in the old version: "He shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body." The Archbishop knew his Greek Testament; he stopped the chaplain, and said, "Not our 'vile body,' but 'the body of our humiliation.'" We have it thus in our Revised Version: "He shall fashion anew the body of our humiliation, that it may be conformed to the body of his glory." There is a distinction of idea between fashioning and conforming. Suppose you were to take this hall, and pull it down and build a railway station, you would not be keeping to the fashion of the building. But if you had a great architect, who, in looking at this building and trying to realise its distinctive features, saw he could produce an enlarged, perfected edition of it with ornamental developments here and there, grander in every respect, and yet so as to suggest the old hall with all its blessed memories, that would be fashioning anew. Now Paul says there is identity between the old body and the new. What the nature of it is we do not stop to consider, but it is to be fashioned anew—on the same lines, the same identity; but developed out in this direction and in that, in ways we cannot conceive of. "For who by searching can find out God? Who can find out the Almighty unto Perfection?"

We do not dwell on speculative themes, for there is the other line of suggestion which we have brought before us in the characteristics of our Lord's body. Coming to the opposite side—conformed to the body of his glory—I find there are several ideas. The first idea is that of suffering. We have groaned, being burdened; but that groaning will be at an end. Then I find adaptation to every faculty and power of the perfected spirit. Have you pondered that wonderful description of the risen Christ in Rev. i.? Yes, the humanity of Christ is adapted to the glorious power of the Divine Redeemer on the throne; and the humanity that we shall wear shall be adapted to our perfected spirits.

Last of all, the humanity shall be subject to the spirit. Here the body directs the spirit. Here the impulses of the flesh lead us. There are multitudes of men that are body-led, lust-led, the flesh tyrannising over the spirit. But the body shall be submissive in that great and glorious world. One would like to dwell on these points and let one's consciousness play freely round such thoughts—the redeemed of God through the struggle with evil rising above evil, standing immutable in virtue and holiness, above the possibility of falling; bound by the memory of past struggles, and re-invested with a bodily frame

MADE LIKE TO THE BODY OF CHRIST.

A great philosopher has said that all timid thinkers run up into contradictions. One feels, with such a theme, and when we think of the eternal world, that endless duration rises foremost in our thoughts. Yet when we heap year on year and cycle upon cycle, that gives us an incomplete idea of eternity. Eternity is a quality of existence as much as a duration of existence. Eternity is being lifted above the conditions of time. Eternity consists in our being brought to the centre; in knowing as we are known; seeing from the standpoint of God through direct, living, spiritual intuition. It is a different knowledge from the outside slow processes which are open to us here—I am speaking of worldly knowledge as a whole.

While we have these two ideas—eternal duration, on the one hand, and a quality of existence on the other hand—there is a third thought. I find the New Testament words descriptive of eternity are full of the idea of progression. We have all through the New Testament the idea of age and the ages—the age of the age and the ages of the ages. Of course, an age is a certain period of time, from one year to another year; but that is a very superficial way of speaking of an age. Why is it that we separate certain periods of time, and call one the Apostolic age, another the Reformation age, and another the Methodist age? It is because the unit underlying each of these periods of time is a thought unit? Take the great Reformation age. Within that period of time there entered into the circle of human thought a great religious idea to which we have been giving expression in prayer—justification by faith. That, with certain cognate ideas, began to take possession of the mind of man at that time. The idea had been ramified and spread from one land to another, until it reached its natural limit, and then began to give place to other ideas.

So with the idea of an age as we have it here. Mr. Peploe has been dwelling on "Christ in us"—the very principle of a new life, and the source of all power, our strength, our wisdom; yonder, however, we shall be entirely yielded to Christ; our whole being possessed by Him. With this perfect spirit, there will be also a perfect and immortal body. Not only will we have the whole fulness of Christ in us, but we shall be with Him. We cannot all at once enter into the infinite glory of God. It will be Christ's great work there to open up, not a limited idea such as we have here, but to take that glory of God and open it up to our view step by step as we are able to bear it. He will reveal, now on one side and now on another, the infinite fulness of God.

CAN YOU REALISE WHAT THAT IS?

Standing with Him on the platform of perfect submission to the Divine will, to have Him who has dwelt with the Father from eternity opening up to us the glory of God. That is the age of eternity, an age that can have no end because God has no end, and because we can never come to the limit of that idea.

Then look at the other phrase, "the ages." There will be cycle upon cycle of glorious revelation. We have here the Apostolic Age, the Reformation age, the age of the Methodist revival, and all these are included in the grand sweep of the Christian dispensation. Up yonder these single cycles will be marking out in the great eternity vaster cycles. Not only will there be one age, but ages of the ages. You may think I have been keeping Christ out of view. It is in order that you may see the glorious idea of a Leader in eternity. What a thought the leadership in eternity will be. He will lead us into the light of the Father, in what ways we cannot tell; we are only sure of our nearness to Him and oneness with Him, and that our needs are in accord. From that standpoint He will open up to us the glories of eternity.

There are several names of the Lord Jesus Christ given us in the New Testament, and especially in Revelation. There is a curious circumstance about these names. Christ is spoken of as "the first and the last; the Alpha and the Omega; the beginning and the end." You always find the two together. I would explain this by a quotation from Himself: "Father, I will that they also whom Thou hast given Me may be with Me...for Thou lovedst Me before the foundation of the world." One part of Christ's employ will be to lead us into the depths of the past, and open up the eternal purposes of God. You remember that great chapter of Pascal where he tells us that we are

IN THE MIDDLE OF TWO INFINITIES

—that we understand something of the middle, but know nothing either of the beginning or the end; but Christ is going to lead us back into the past and on into the future. He is going to bring us to the knowledge of God's great purpose.

I come from Scotland, and we are proud of our hills. You advance to a great mountain range; first of all, as it lies in the far distance it looks like a blot of blue, but that is made comparatively clear as you distinguish the different ranges. Afterwards you see there are valleys between, and you are filled with a sense of the vastness of this mountain tract. What are the eternal purposes of God at which some people mock (may God forgive them!)—what are they to us but just as if they were the dim expanse into which we cannot pierce? But Christ will lead us, and we will be able to see range after range of vast expanses that now we cannot understand.

He will do that with regard to our individual life. What a mystery we are to ourselves? How many longings we have that never come to anything. How many aspirations and ideas which are never realised. Yet we press forward. The Master will lead us back along the line we have travelled, and He will recover every forgotten aspiration, and everything we have tried to obtain below, and work them into the fulness of our perfect life.

What will the end of that knowledge be? It is an awful thing to be brought into the presence of God here, and be taught his will. But even yonder it will be an awful thing to enter into the holy will of God. Jesus will be declaring God's name, opening up the infinite heights of God's holiness. We will be entering into this, and we will be embracing his will, and making it our joy to glorify that will. "I have declared unto them thy name, and will declare it: that the love wherewith Thou hast loved Me may be in them and I in them." Our whole being will be yielded up to God in some measure as the will of Christ is yielded up to God.

In the surrendering the perfect will to Him—that will be the secret of our power. As we rise into perfect oneness with God, our power will come from our absorption and assimilation to the Holy Will of God. It is not easy to speak of these things; I feel that sometimes we have to restrain ourselves and put off the shoes from our feet, because the place whereon we stand is holy ground. I would not in a presumptuous manner speak of these realities. Let it be our joy to follow in that glory.

I want to ask: Are we following Christ to-day? There is a name in the letters to the seven churches that has come home as with fire to my spirit. It is the name given to the Church at Philadelphia, "These things saith He that is holy." That word "holy" means fundamentally separated. There is the Separated. He was separated for the glory of God down here, and is separated yonder. "These things saith He that is true." We live in an age that is full of moral enthusiasm, and Christian men are being drawn out in different directions far away from the centre. I believe we are here to stand for righteousness; but, oh! I say, keep near the centre. There are a good many of our moral reforms that never come to anything. But Christ is the complete image of God, and if I advance his cause, the glory of God is sure to be secured.

You remember where Isaiah has drawn with poet's eloquence and a prophet's power the attack of Sennacherib:—"In that day there was a man set over the house." He got the key of the House of David to administer the affairs of Israel, and he said, "I have the key of the House of David." Round about us there are elements that are hostile and insulting to our blessed Lord, but let us not fear. Christ has the key. Let us be true to Him, yielding ourselves to him. He will lead us safely, and at the last we shall see Him in that glory of which I have so imperfectly spoken.

FRIDAY MORNING, JUNE 27.

The Lord Jesus as Commander.

MR. J. E. MATHIESON

occupied the chair, Sir Arthur Blackwood being prevented from attending through pressure of official duties. Commenting upon the portion of Scripture, Isa. lv., containing the words which the addresses were designed to explain and illustrate, he said: Are we to accept God's thoughts and God's appointments, or are we to accept human opinion? There is great freedom of opinion in these days, and we need to be very much on our guard against the spirit of sitting in judgment upon the Word of God. In Ps. cxix. 113, we read: "I hate vain thoughts, but thy law do I love." The word "vain" is in italics in the A.V., and in the R.V. the statement appears, "I hate thoughts." The Psalmist had some conception of the authority and value of the word which proceedeth out of the mouth of God, so he set aside human opinion as worthless and weighing nothing in the balances compared with the word of the living God.

In this country of civil and religious liberty the very air we breathe seems to impart an independent, proud, boastful spirit, with the idea that every question is to be dealt with according to our own opinions. A better spirit is inculcated in Isaiah l. 4: "The Lord God hath given me the tongue of the learned"; or, as rendered in the Revised Version, "the tongue of them that have been taught." Oh! that we could always remain learners, sitting as disciples at the feet of Jesus, and hearing his word. Some ten or fifteen years ago a book appeared, which made a great sensation at the time, called "The Battle of Dorking." The book pictured an army landing on our shores, and coming up through Kent and Surrey. The troops who were defending the capital were chiefly volunteers. They disobeyed orders however; there was panic and confusion; and the invading army marched upon London, and a great ransom had to be paid. All this was shown as the consequence of disobedience. Soldiers and disciples must obey orders. In the army of Christ we are all volunteers; there is no conscription, no press-gang; the only compulsion is the sweet and gracious influence of the Holy Spirit. If there is not real discipline in the army of Christ, the defence of the faith will be a failure, the attack upon the foe will be feeble, and our claim to be loyal to Christ may well be abandoned.

Of all the commands of Christ there are two which are neglected to the special hindrance of Christian work. There is the thrice repeated command to love the brethren (John xiii. 34; 1 John iii. 11). This hall is a centre whence that blessed truth has been proclaimed for years, these institutions having for their specific object the gathering of those of every name who love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity. The neglect of this truth prevents the manifestation of Christian unity before the unbelieving world, and has greatly hindered the cause of Christ. The second neglected command is that given after our Lord's resurrection, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." People are apt to think, because Christ said on that occasion "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth," that they may go in his power, that He is behind them and before them, and all round about them. That does not, however, seem to be the primary signification of the passage. Rather we should observe that our Lord says, "All authority is given unto me, therefore go." His was the authority to send, and it is ours to obey the command.

The Life of Submission to Christ.

BY REV. HUBERT BROOKE.

WHEN you listen to a true witness, then you are taught to know; when you follow a reliable leader, then you know where to go; and when you are under a sure commander, then you learn what to do. Every name by which the Lord Jesus is called, really reveals to us at once two things: a fresh need in ourselves, and a fresh supply in God, with a fresh possibility of attainment as soon as that supply is accepted and used. So, as we are looking at these names of the Lord Jesus that He has put before us, we find with every name a need. We were ignorant, needing to know, and we had the gift of a Witness to make us know. We were ignorant of the route, needing to be taught it, and the Father has given us a Leader, to make us understand the way to God. Much more and far reaching is our need, after those first two stages of knowledge have been gained; much deeper is our need to be instructed concerning the will of God that we may have, from Him, the gift to meet it, the Commander to make us see what is His will.

All these names by which the Lord Jesus is revealed to us may, perhaps, be divided into three great stages of the soul's need, corresponding to those three conditions of growth which the Epistle of St. John marks off, when he says: "I have written unto you, little children...I have written unto you, young men ...I have written unto you, fathers." As children, we need many things to take us through our child growth, until we reach youth; and, as we reach youth, we need many things more to lead us on, until we reach manhood; and, in the full growth of manhood, there are yet fresh needs to lead us through life, in prosperity and blessing, until we reach an honoured old age. In all these needs—countless, unbounded, unlimited—if we only knew it, comes again and again the revelation of God in Christ, the gift of God in Christ Jesus, in manifold forms to meet those needs. Time after time, as we accept the name which meets our need, we learn a fresh meaning to the great principle, "They that know thy name will put their trust in Thee."

Israel's experience shows us, in large figures, what is our own experience; Israel needed the true Witness, the Word, and the Witness to lead them out of Egypt and into the wilderness. Israel needed the Leader to guide them through the wilderness into the land; and Israel needed

THE COMMAND OF A KING

To give them peace and settled permanence in the land. We can understand how Israel could have nothing to do with command in the land, until the word of the Witness had brought them out of Egypt; nor could they benefit by the blessing of the King, until the Leader had taken them through the wilderness. So is it in the Christian life. Matt. xxi. shows how impossible it is even to know the Lord Jesus Christ as King, unless we have first listened to Him as Witness. There came some (ver. 23) and asked about his authority, because He acted as a King: "By what authority doest Thou these things? and who gave Thee this authority?" He answered and said unto them: "I also will ask you one thing, which if ye tell Me, I in like wise will tell you by what authority I do these things. The baptism of John"—which, remember, was the work of a witness—"whence was it? from heaven, or of men?" They had rejected the witness, therefore they said: "We cannot tell." And He said: "Neither tell I you by what authority I do these things."

Unless the Word of God has been accepted as a witness in the heart—and you know whether it is so—the word and authority of a King has nothing to do with you yet. As it is with the Witness going before the King, so it is with the Leader. In John xii. you read the words which were given to those who heard the Witness, and which are given to the witness-bearer (ver. 26), "If any man serve Me [as King], let him follow Me [as Leader]." You cannot get into the place of service unless you have taken the character of a follower. You must hearken to the word of the Witness, and know where you stand; you must follow the guidance of the Leader, and go in the right way, before you have the blessing of being under the command of the King, and know how to do the will of God. Therefore, we have come to a high stage of the Lord's guidance and blessing when we have apprehended the truth which is in the one gift. It is all hidden there. It is not new, though it is true; but is only the unfolding of an old gift. Have we not, as children, had gifts granted to us of which we did not know the full value. We have perhaps had a watch given to us. We thought it a pretty plaything, did not dream that it could tell us the time, did not know what time is. By and by we came to know that it was a thing to bring us back from school at the right time. It was an old family heirloom, and we took great care of it. There came a time when there was sickness in the house. The room was dark, and we wanted to know the time in which the poor sick one was to be tended. We wished to avoid striking a light, because it would disturb the patient; but we touched a little spring, and the repeater whispered what the hour was. It was all in the old gift, but we never knew it, and had never used it before. We see what it is, in the glorious portion which the Lord has given us to-day, wherein a wonderful view lies before us.

If the Lord be our Commander and King, we need to be quite sure, first of all, as to what is the basis of his authority. What right has He to command us? and why, if He does, should we obey? Now, it seems to me that which is founded on a threefold basis, a glorious threefold cord not easily broken. First, the authority of a king, a kingship authority is that with which the Lord speaks unto us. In the last verse of the Book of Judges, we read of a time in Israel's experience when it was said, "In those days there was no king in Israel, but every man did that which was right in his own eyes." Perhaps we might change "those," and say "these." Many and many a one of us might say, "In these days there is no king in Israel." How do you know? "Because everyone does what is right in his own eyes." Yet the Lord had brought them out of Egypt at this time.

The days were far advanced from Egypt's darkness when they had known the leadership of the Lord through the wilderness into the land; still there was no king in Israel, but every man did that which was right in his own eyes. And that was sure to be wrong in his brother's eyes, and not what the Lord intended, because it looked a strange thing to Him. Yet in 1 Sam. xii. 12, we find "The Lord your God was your King." All the time that they were saying, "There is no king in Israel, we may do what we like; we have left Egypt behind, we can never go back there through the wilderness into the wonderful land. There is no king in Israel"—all the time, "The Lord your God was your King." You see, they did not know Him, did not accept Him, did not recognise Him, did not obey Him; and all the blessings, the boundless blessings of the Kingship of the Lord were unexperienced, because they were not accepted and submitted to.

Now, it is written for us in Ps. ii.; "Yet have I set my King upon my holy hill of Zion"; and in Heb. xii. we are told that it is the very Mount Zion to which you, as believers, are come. Therefore you are brought already to the place where God has set his King. And we have heard again to-day that He is given to us purposely, as a King and a Commander. "Unto us...a King is given, and the government shall be upon his shoulder." He is given for the crowning purpose of ruling over your life with the authority of a King. Whether you have accepted it or not, whether you have bowed under the King's authority or not, whether you have believed in the King or not, God has set Him there. Whether his citizens have done to-day what was done in the story of old, sent after Him, and said, "We will not have this man to reign over us," it remains that God has set Him as a King. If you understand that, if you believe that, let us ask at once, What is to follow? The same Psalm will tell us, "Kiss the Son." Give Him the kiss of loyal submission, and take your place as a loyal subject from that time onward. Many of us have done so, of course, for years; and, as I talked about the King, every one of us has said, "Thine is the kingdom."

But perhaps some of us have spoken, or at least acted, as if we were little children playing together. "I will be a king, and you shall be a servant." It is all right until the first child gives a command. Then the second does not like it, and says, "No, you be the servant, and I will be the king." That is what some people do with the Lord. He tells us so. Have you ever read Isa. xlii., and noticed what the Lord says about His own people there, in the end of verse 24?—"Thou hast made me to serve." Think of that! His loyal subjects have with their sins, and have wearied Him with their iniquities. Oh! friends, what is it? What has it been hitherto? Has it been the case with us, that the word of the King has brought power behind our lives? Has it been that we have been in this sense ambassadors for the Lord? Have we known the Lord doing for us what every ambassador knows his king will do for him, that is, put all the power of his kingdom behind him? One who rejects or insults the messenger, rejects or insults the King. "Where the word of a King is, there is power," and those who go groping about for power in slaves had better look up and ask, "Is the word of a King the rule of my life?" Under his authority the life becomes good. There is no third alternative. Loyal liegeman you must be, unless you are rascally rebels; and sworn soldiers, unless you are malingerers and mutineers. In the great day of the King's battle, when a messenger came to call Israel out, under God's captain, Barak, they knew no third place between the blessing and the curse. Which is for us? Which is for our lives from to-day? The blessing of those who follow the King, or the curse of those who stay at home when the King calls them to come out to Him?

But there is a closer authority than that. When the King left his throne, He emptied Himself of his glory, laid aside his power, and became a Man in order that He might be more than a King, in order that He might be an Owner. He wanted to come down and purchase something; He came into open market, bid against all other bidders, and offered the highest price, a price that neither God nor man could find fault with. God approved the price; yea, God was paying the price Himself; He was the price. His very enemies had to say when the price was being paid and tested—three times over Pilate gave him the seal: "I find no fault in Him." And when the price was paid, another heathen put to his seal and said, "Truly this was the Son of God."

When He had done that, He had bought you and was your Owner. That is a closer authority than that of a king. There are some things I think, even in the highest call of kingship, in which a king does not interfere with his subjects; but an owner has the FULL RIGHT TO HIS POSSESSION.

You have read, and you have said many and many a time, that you "are not your own, that you are bought with a price; therefore"—you know the rest. And, again, "He gave Himself for us that He might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto Himself a people for his own possession." One who understood it said that he was Paul, "the bond-slave of Jesus Christ"—just his goods and chattel. We were once someone else's goods. Once the strong man kept the palace, and the goods were his; but when the "Stronger than he" came, He changed the ownership, and you became someone else's goods. A purchase was effected, a price paid. Have you sent the purchase home? Has the Owner got it yet? That is the point. Has He let you know that it has come to hand? A little while ago I bought a box and some contents for a present. When the box came home, the key was not there. I sent off, at once, a little postcard to say, "In sending home the box to-day you left out the key. Please send it on at once." The last little bit of it must be with me if I am the owner.

Some deal in all sorts of ways with this vessel of the Lord. Some say they will give Him the key and take the box: "Lord, take my heart, but I am going to use my life for myself." Some give Him the box, the outside, but they do not give Him the contents, the inside: "Yes, take my life, and save me from dangers and discomforts; but, as to the filling up of the life, that is mine." O friends, do you wonder that the Apostle Paul, after taking up the Ephesians into the heights of heaven, and seating them in Christ, came down and said, "Let him that stole, steal no more"? I do not. He says it again to us, to-day, "Let him that stole, steal no more." They that stole the time, the talents that did not belong to them, that were purchased and claimed by another One, and kept them back to themselves, purloined them.

We forget that we were taught, as little children, to keep our hands from picking and stealing; we forget that we are not to covet and desire another man's goods; we forget the grief and sorrow we are giving to that other Man, the Man in glory, because we are not giving Him his own. Do you think we can be comfortable while we are stealing? O friends, there is no such thing as real peace, real blessing, real calm, real settled joy in the Lord, as long as there is a divided ownership. Whilst there are two kings in the land, there is no peace there; and whilst there is a double heart about making either of them king, there is no peace in the heart. There is need for us to begin to be honest, and to settle the question that terribly needs settling, whether the rightful Owner is to have his own or not; whether, if we accept his word to-day, that He is given unto us as a Commander, we mean Him to have his own; whether that which is his, as we confess, is to be his as we show it; whether what we confess with our lips is to be done and shown in our lives.

But there is a closer tie and a stronger authority than even that. "I have given Him to be a Commander." In one place, "He hath given Him to be in another place, "the Church, which is his body." Yes, there is the relationship of the Head and the members, and the authority of the Head over the members. The king may not always be in touch with his subjects; the owner may not always be using his possession; but the head can never be severed from the members, unless there is death in the body; it is an inalienable authority, that which none can touch or alter, a bond that can never be broken. The head and the members are one; and what the head wills, the members must do. Why do they not do it? Why is it that morning by morning the Head issues his commands, the Head of the House? It was long ago settled that every man should bear rule in his own house. Why is it that He whose house we are, sends forth commandments, day after day, rises up early to send them, has been sending them this long time, and the members are fast asleep, or deaf? Why, when the Head has spoken, do not those who claim, believe, and profess that they are his members, obey what the Head commands? Is it that they are infantile members, so that they do not understand what the Head is commanding, and just fling themselves about without proper control? Surely they are not all such little babes in Christ as that? Or is it that they are nervous members, not under proper control of the Head; that is, have not full confidence in the Head, and have not fully submitted to the Head? Or is it that they are just foolish members, bodies that have not a head, or do not use it, which comes to the same thing? Do not we say sometimes of a rather unprofitable servant, "She is not much good, she does not use her head." Is that why some of the Lord's servants are not much good, because they do not use their Head, or act as if they had it not, going on in their own wisdom, forgetting that their ways can never be his ways, and that they cannot be right, for they are not under their Head? Ah! perhaps that is it—is it because some of the members are paralyzed members; that the union between the Head and that portion of the mystic Body is somehow broken; that the life's blood does not flow in vigour; that there is not the real touch which holds the members at the absolute disposal of the Head, so that they must do whatsoever the Head commands?

O Lord, thy touch has the same power to heal, in the mystic Body, as in the days of old. Shall we not bring ourselves, as members that need healing, and bring them to the touch of the Head? Shall we not ask Him to sweep out of the way what has been holding back, binding, keeping away us, the members of the Head, from

HIS SWAY AND POWER?

Shall we not let the Head henceforth just have his power over all his members? If the King, because of his authority, calls you to submit, and if the Owner calls you to be honest, I think the Head only wants you to be sensible, just to understand and to know what He means, and then to accept it as a matter of fact, not to make a strange thing, much less a great thing, of just giving the Lord what is his own, and letting Him have the right to decide what shall be his way with each one of us.

And, remember, whether we will or not, whether we accept it or not, the thing stands fast. I do not think that one of us can forget that God has given Him to be a Commander. Now, brethren, have you taken Him as such? You have taken Him as a Witness, every saved soul has; you have taken Him as a Leader, every guided life has; now, have you taken, or, if you have not, will you take Him, as God's gift of a Commander and King, from this very hour? Will you say what the men said to David: "Thine are we"? Will you say to Him what Israel said: "Other lords have had dominion over us"; it is full time, now, for the Lord to have his own power over us? Let our eyes be closed to the pointing hand of every other leader, and let us know what it is to be the Lord's alone.

The time is short, and the warfare will soon be over. Our time for usefulness is passing by. Oh that the Lord may save us from coming before Him to say: "Here Thou hast what is thine, my life"; and if He asks what we have done with it, reply that we have wrapped it up in the napkin of selfishness, and buried it in the earthly life. If we do so, we shall be pronounced wicked, because we are not honest; and slothful, because we will not work: wicked, because we rejected the King; and slothful, because we would not obey the command.

What shall we say to Him to-day? Surely He with whom there are endless fresh beginnings means us to take that name every day, and, from this day, walk in the power of that name every day. Afresh we may use his name, all the names we know Him by. While it is mainly by his name as Witness that He takes us out of Egypt; as a Leader, takes us through the wilderness; and, as a Commander, rules us in the land; yet we always need Him as a Witness. We do not give up what we have once found in the gift; we do not cease to admire it because we have liked it once; we do not cease to follow Christ because we have found Him as a Leader once. So, day by day, we can take up the words that David has taught us in Ps. cxliii., words that shall bind in our minds and on our hearts, and manifest in our lives, the threefold blessing in which He is revealed to our souls. "Cause me to hear thy lovingkindness in the morning," the voice of the Witness, telling us again what He is; "for in Thee do I trust: cause me to know the way in which I should walk," the blessed Leader guiding every step; "for I lift up my soul unto Thee"; then, "Teach me to do thy will," the Commander of the hosts of the Lord, the Owner, and the Head of his members, "for Thou art my God."

The Secret of Acceptable Service.

BY REV. JOHN G. TRAIN.

TURN to John xiv. 15: "If ye love Me, keep my commandments"—in the R.V.: "Ye will keep my commandments." Carry your eyes down to ver. 21: "He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth Me: and he that loveth Me shall be loved of my Father, and I will love him, and will manifest Myself unto him." Again, ver. 23: "If a man love Me, he will keep my words: and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him." Read chap. xv. 9-12: "Abide ye in my love. If ye keep my commandments, ye shall abide in my love; even as I have kept my Father's commandments, and abide in his love. These things have I spoken unto you, that my joy may be in you, and that your joy may be full. This is my commandment, That ye love one another, even as I have loved you." Then, proceeding to speak to his disciples regarding the world, He says, ver. 17: "These things I command you, that ye may love one another" (R.V.).

It is impossible, I believe, to take any words of our Lord and fail to find in them notes from which one may render, by God's help, an infinite variety of music. As to the words on which we have been occupied these days, "Witness," "Leader," and "Commander," there is absolutely no end to the variety of music that may be obtained from them. I suppose if each Christian were asked to express him or her self with reference to the significance of these words, having regard to his or her life, some new thought would be contributed by each. So it will not be supposed that there is any divergence whatever on my part from the thoughts of those who have spoken to you already, when I say that the words "Witness," "Leader," and "Commander," suggest to me these three things: "Witness" suggests "Hear," and I know that as a sinner I came by salvation through hearing Christ the Witness. There is much that is humbling concerning this, on which we have not time to dwell. To me ever uttered by our Lord was what He said to the Jews: "Because I tell you the truth, ye believe Me not." He implied, in saying that, that if He had told them a lie, they would have credited Him; and, as a fact, we find in the world that the father of lies obtains a far greater currency for his word than the Lord of truth Himself. But He is the Witness, and testifies the truth, and, as we hear, we live. This Witness says: "Incline your ear, and come unto Me; hear, and your soul shall live."

As our Leader, Christ bids us follow, and whatever our circumstances may be, we can sing on the way: "The Lord is my Shepherd; I shall not want." Rightly we consider that his word to us, under the aspect of our Leader, is "Follow." At present we are confronted by the Lord under the third aspect He sustains to us—"Commander." As has been suggested, his supreme word to us as Commander is "Do." It is very noticeable, as you have regard to all the Gospels, that the closing utterances of our Lord to his disciples concerned the matter of doing; He gave them plainly to understand that they sustained to Him a relationship other than that of disciples—that they were intended and qualified to sustain the relation of servants. Turn to Matthew. As you come to the close, and to the parables that concern us, you will find that the burden is this same matter of doing. The word that obtains prominence in relation to the followers of Christ is "servant," while that which stands out with regard to Himself is "Lord." So towards the end of Mark, where we find that brief but suggestive utterance in which the Son of Man is likened unto one taking a far journey, who left his house, giving authority to his servants, to every man his work, and commanding the porter to watch. Turn then to the Gospel according to Luke, and notice that as He went up to Jerusalem, and was nigh unto the city, there was a misconception prevalent as to the issue. The disciples thought of the throne; Christ of the cross. They looked forward to acceptance; He knew that rejection was before Him. Then He spoke a parable, to the end that the kingdom of God was not immediately to appear—that an interval was to succeed, in which those who were his were to sustain a certain character. What was that character? Servants; and He, their Lord! And He spoke of an occupation in that pithy sentence,

"TRADE TILL I COME."

Now we come to the Gospel of John. What is the burden of the closing utterances of our Lord in those marvellous chapters from the thirteenth to the seventeenth? I venture to include the seventeenth, for throughout the prayer there recorded runs the thought that his people were to sustain the character of servants—to have a trust committed to them, for He says: "As Thou hast sent Me into the world, even so have I also sent them into the world." But look at the beginning of this line of thought as seen in the incident of washing the disciples' feet. Personally I have found it exceedingly profitable to endeavour, God's Spirit helping me, to trace the rise and progress, in this discourse, of the thought that the Lord's people sustain to Him the character of servants, while He is their Lord. We have in the discourse the full significance of the washing of the disciples' feet. Notice that when the washing was accomplished, Christ said: "Know ye what I have done to you? Ye call me Master" (that is Rabbi, and perhaps we are too familiar with the word Rabbi in this aspect) "and Lord, and ye say well, for so I am. If I then, the Lord and the Master" (as the Revised Version expresses the emphasis of the original, Christ inverting the order of the epithets, not without significance), "have washed your feet, ye also ought to wash one another's feet." From that time onward in the discourse, prominence is given to his Lordship. He speaks from that time onward of commands. He says: "If ye know these things"—and we come by that knowledge having regard to Him as Rabbi and Master, sustaining the character of disciples—"happy" (literally blessed) "are ye, if ye do them." In effect, He says: "If ye apprehend that I am not only your Master but your Lord, then, in the strength of an energy of my own giving, set yourselves to the actual doing of the things I command."

What is the spring of the obedience that Christ as Commander claims? He makes it very plain.

"IF YE LOVE ME,

ye will keep my commandments." You will remember how He had said, giving a synopsis of his commandments: "A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another." We are concerned for the present with the thought that our love, or what we are credited with in the way of love, finds its rise in Christ's "as I have loved you." Given an apprehension of the love which Christ has for us, we become possessed of an energy which, if it has its way with us, enables us to keep his commandments. The Apostle Paul expressed this truth when, accounting for the secret of that extraordinary energy of his, which carried him everywhere and enabled him to dare every difficulty, he said: "The love of Christ constraineth us, because we thus judge that if one died for all, then all died; and that He died for all that they who live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto Him who died for them and rose again." In love for Him we find the secret of obedience, and that love is of his own giving; it is an apprehension of his love towards us as our sacrifice.

If that be so, it is further true that, if love is the spring of obedience, obedience is the evidence of love. Christ is very explicit on this: there is no love present where obedience is absent. "He that hath my commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth Me." If you would have commentary on this, what better than that afforded by John in his First Epistle: "He that saith, I know Him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar." Strong language this; terribly strong; but solemnly true. In a more succinct form, the thought appears in 1 John v. 3: "This is the love of God, that we keep his commandments."

We have seen that love is the spring of obedience, and that obedience is the evidence of love. But Christ reaches and He would have us reach it. He sought that his first disciples should reach it, when He made it plain that love is the reward of obedience. Let there be no misapprehension of what is meant. That is meant which is set forth in his own words in John xiv. 23, where He says, "If a man love Me, he will keep my words, and my Father will love him, and we will come and make our abode with him." Before that He had said (v. 21), "He that hath my commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth Me, and he that loveth Me shall be loved of my Father, and I will love him, and will manifest myself unto him." Again to the same effect, chap. xv. 10, "If ye keep my commandments, ye shall abide in my love; even as I have kept my Father's commandments, and abide in His love." What is evident from these marvellous words on the part of our Lord but this, that love is the reward of obedience? It was so in his own case. As He obeyed, He apprehended more and more of the Father's love; and He has passed the blessed secret on to us. He says in effect: "As you obey you will know more and more of my love, and the Father's love, and the Spirit's love." There is no gainsaying it—love is, in this sense, the reward of obedience.

But there is a thought within the thought, and we do well to notice it. You may recognise that love is the reward of obedience in the case of the servant of the Lord Jesus Christ, as you have regard to the case of the servant in its God-ward aspect; but there is that in the utterance of our Lord which suggests that love is the reward of obedience even in the relation of servants to each other. If we would seek out the reason why there is so little apprehension, not merely of the love of God by us, but also of the love of God towards each other, we shall assuredly find it in disobedience of the Lord's commands. What does He mean when He says: "These things I command you, that ye love one another"? (John xv. 17). He does not repeat Himself, but having mentioned a variety of things—"commandments," "sayings," "words"—He thus sums up all. Concerning what things had He been speaking? Without going into details, we may start with the feet-washing, and I believe that was still in his view when He spoke. We have "these things" there as well as here. Recollect, on the occasion of the feet-washing He said: "If ye know these things, blessed are ye if ye do them." With the entire body of marvellous injunctions in view, by what are we impressed? Surely by this: our Lord commands us as fellow-believers to serve one another. Ay, to washing one another's feet; not casting dirt at each other, but seeking to secure cleansing for each other. What are we doing in that direction? What does the Lord say? There is a poor, literal way of interpreting his words—God save us from that, and help us to enter into his spirit. He virtually says, "I have given you an example, that ye should do not what I have done unto you, but as I have done unto you." We are very quick to noise abroad faults concerning each other; and what comes of it? What do we know of washing one another's feet? And this is one of the things He commanded. Again, has He not exhorted us to pray? "Hitherto ye have asked nothing in my name; ask, and ye shall receive, that your joy may be full." How about this matter of prayer? We know it is customary in connection with such gatherings as this, to wait on meetings and speakers. But what do we know of waiting on the Lord individually?

Take one thought more in connection with this discourse of our Lord. Before He said "These things I command you," did He not say, and I think with ultimate reference to all his servants, "Ye have not chosen Me, but I have have chosen you, and ordained you, that ye should go and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit should remain: that whatsoever ye shall ask of the Father in my name He may give it you." What is He commanding us there, if not activity in his service? Commentators have found difficulty with the word "go," but I believe it means "go," and that here we have in essence —that when He told his servants to go, he intended them to go everywhere. I maintain, then, that if we are disobedient to his commands in any of these respects, then we cannot hope to apprehend the love of the brethren, as we cannot hope to apprehend the love of the Father, and the Son, and the Spirit.

THE GREAT MISSIONARY COMMAND

Also note that love as the reward of obedience is represented by the Lord as his joy. He says: "If ye keep my commandments, ye shall abide in my love...These things have I spoken unto you that my joy may be in you, and that your joy may be fulfilled" (John xv. 10, 11). But we cannot have noticed closely the utterances of our Lord here without remarking the play upon two expressions. Sometimes He speaks of "word," at other times of "words"; sometimes of "commandment" at other times of "commandments," rendered occasionally "sayings." I doubt not there are those who are his servants who say, as I have said myself sometimes, "But what is his word, or what are his words? What is his commandment, or what are his commandments?" Truly, fellow believers, we cannot tabulate the commandments of the Lord Jesus Christ as we can the commandments of Moses. "The law was given by Moses"; it was a thing apart from him altogether. "Grace and truth came by Jesus Christ," and we must needs look to Himself ultimately for what his word is, for He is the Word in very deed, the Word made flesh. But with intentional significance his "word" is sometimes spoken of, and at other times his "words." When He speaks of "his word" He sometimes means the soul, as it were, of all that which He told his disciples. When He speaks of "his words," He refers to various sayings applicable to the various circumstances of our lives. In his "word" we have an infinite variety of instruction for the varying circumstances of life, so that in no point shall we fail to find a word to suit each special case.

You cannot fail to observe that when He speaks of his believing people as his servants and enjoins obedience, He speaks sympathetically, intimating that He is asking of them no more than He Himself had rendered. He makes it very clear that the word He passed on, He had Himself obeyed. How often is prominence given, in these utterances of our Lord, to the fact that He had kept the Father's commandments. There is one expression that we are apt to pass over without due consideration, when He says, "As the Father gave Me commandment, even so I do." From first to last, on the part of Christ, there was, with reference to the word or words of God, the most absolute obedience; and we are cheered by the fact that in his call as addressed to us there is

A TOUCH OF SYMPATHY.

He is calling us to the very same course that He Himself obeyed, even as He is calling us to the enjoyment of the very same reward as He Himself enjoyed.

And I venture to think that in the fact that our Lord is calling us as his servants to obedience unto the same word that He Himself obeyed, He gives us a pledge that He will give us the power to do what we address ourselves to. It has interested me to notice how there is, on the part of as many soldiers as are spoken of in the New Testament in relation to the Lord Jesus Christ, a manifestation of the same spirit that actuated Him. In the case of the centurion that was noticeably so. When he sought that the Lord should heal his servant, he said, "I am not worthy that thou shouldest come under my roof, but say in a word (or, as in the Revised Version, "say the word"), and my servant shall be healed." When the centurion so spoke, he gave expression to the thought lying nearest his heart, that he, as a man under authority, having soldiers under him, apprehended to the full the power of a word. If a word came from Rome, the power that lay behind him, the centurion knew that it had to be obeyed, and as he passed it to those beneath him he knew that it would meet with obedience. Therefore he said, "I am a man set under authority, having under me soldiers, and I say unto one, Go, and he goeth; and to another, Come, and he cometh; and to my servant, Do this, and he doeth it." Why? As the man speaks you have a suggestion of the man in authority, because he is under authority. Because he apprehended the power that lay behind him, and was fully obedient, he knew that on the part of those placed under him there would be the same apprehension. So with our Lord; as one under the authority of God Himself, He knew, that, in every sphere below Him in which his word would be spoken, it would assuredly have its way.

AS BEING IN AUTHORITY,

The word of Jesus had its way in many spheres in the days of his flesh. It had its way over the elements, and He commanded them; over diseases and over devils, and He commanded them; over death, and He commanded it. And as He came to part with his disciples, He said, in effect, "You are within the sphere of my authority as g ven Me of the Father. Ye call Me Master and Lord, and ye say well, for so I am. If I then, your Lord and Master, call you to obey, understand that you are committed to this—that there will be on your part implicit obedience, and my word will have its way with you."

Is the Lord's word to have its way with us in every respect? Are we to give way in full subjection to Him? Our blessedness turns on that. He says it: "If ye know these things, blessed are ye if ye do them." And the old divines used to say: "His biddings are enablings." Yes, there comes authority with them. The Lord will never call us to anything in which He will not give us the power to perform that which He requires us to do.

How blessèd, from the bonds of sin
And earthly fetters free,
In singleness of heart and aim,
Thy servant, Lord, to be!
The hardest toil to undertake
With joy at thy command;
The meanest office to receive
With meekness at thy hand!

What are the characteristics of these commandments? They are "not grievous." His love is an inspiration. "If ye love Me, ye will keep my commandments"—you have my own life and love operating in you. The commandments of Christ are benignant. As the old Psalmist said, "In keeping them, there is great reward." While we recognise that they are not grievous, but benignant, and marvellously sympathetic, we must remember that they are stringent, and that He is our Lord. I sometimes think we do Him an injustice, and ourselves an injury, as we overlook the fact that we are servants of our Lord. This relation is indeed coloured by the fact that He also calls us friends; therefore we should not find his will arbitrary, and I do not think we are likely to, unless we are "unwise, not understanding what the will of the Lord is." "Henceforth I call you not servants, but friends; the servant knoweth not what his Lord doeth."

He who calls us to his service is pleased to admit us to know his will, and to give us an apprehension of most blessed intercourse and communion with Him, even while we go on his errands! What will sweeten service like this knowledge, that, while He calls us servants, He also calls us friends. An old Bishop in England said, "I will either stand before my Master as his servant, or kneel before Him as my Prince."

[We are obliged to defer our reports of Dr. Bonar's Communion address, of the addresses of the last evening, and of the afternoon gatherings.—Ed.]

NATIVE AGENCY IN INDIA.—Rev. Robert Stothert, of Bombay, writes:—"At a station on the line between Bombay and Poona a native catechist carries on successful work in a way deserving of special notice. This catechist, whose name is Balwant, is not expensive, as his pay amounts to less than twenty rupees a month. It is sometimes said that at a station where there are European residents it is necessary that the native missionary should have an English education, which would, of course, imply higher pay. In the case of Balwant, however, we have a native catechist, with a very limited knowledge of English, who is respected by all the European residents, and treated with sympathy and kindness by several who are brethren in Christ. Again, it is often said that native agents require constant superintendence, either by Europeans, or by highly paid natives. The experience of several years has fully proved that Balwant works all the better for being made to feel his strict responsibility to the Master in heaven. Balwant was trained in Mr. Haig's institution (C.V.E.S.), and was sent to work at Khandalle not because he was a brilliant student, but because he was modest and industrious. When we are brought into such a position as to feel the supply of such agents to be a personal need, the Lord will provide them"

THE IDEAL MINISTER.

It behoves ministers to unite the cherub and the seraph in their ministry—the angel of knowledge, and the angel of burning zeal. If we would win souls, we must point clearly the way to heaven, while we cry, Flee from the wrath to come. I believe we cannot lay down the guilt of man—his total depravity, and the glorious Gospel of Christ, too clearly; that we cannot urge men to embrace and flee too warmly. THE BEGINNINGS OF EVIL.

It is the very principle of sin that it ever aims, as Dr. Owen finely observes, "at the very uttermost," and strives to do the worst. The beginnings of evil may be small, but it grasps at the whole. It may urge but few claims, but it means to obtain everything. It presents the fine end of the wedge, but it intends to rend the knotted oak asunder. It is but a look, but it purposes adultery. It is but an angry word, but it involves murder. It is but circumcision, but it leads to a departure from all the truths of grace (Gal. v. 3, 4). It is but a bow in the house of Rimmon, but it includes in it all the trimming principles of worldly conformity. It is but murmuring against God, but it leads to atheism. Here then lies especially the necessity of mortification, because every sin has in it the principle of all sin, and aims at the very uttermost.—James Harington Evans.

SUMMER CAMP FOR CITY LADS.—Last year five hundred poor lads, recommended by Ragged School teachers, were sent to the Ansdell Sand Hills, near Lytham, for a week's encampment, under the auspices of the Central Refuge, Strangeways, Manchester. This good work has been resumed this year, and forty or fifty lads are being sent weekly during the summer months to spend a few days in salubrious surroundings and health-giving exercises. Good discipline is, of course, maintained, so that the encampment may prove a moral education to some of the neglected lads of Manchester. Communications regarding the work may be addressed to Mr. Leonard K. Shaw, at the Refuge.

THE KING'S DAUGHTERS AND SONS.

BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE ORDER.

We are asked to give space to the following statement. The President is "the wife of a Methodist minister, and a devoted Christian woman." A comparison of this with former references to the Order will enable our readers to comprehend the cause and character of its difficulties. The Council appear to be Trinitarians, while the membership is unrestricted. We must now leave the subject for the present.

THE question that we hear on every side just now is, "What about the trouble in the Central Council of the King's Daughters? Is there division?" Yes, but not because we were not all evangelical or all Trinitarians. There was no difference among us in the matter of belief. We differed as to the requirements that should be exacted of persons desiring to enter the Order. Should there be a creed condition of membership?

The Council decided that the responsibility of individual members was to God, and not to the Council, and that each soul must decide for itself whether it held such a relation to Christ as would justify its entrance into our ranks. This was in exact accordance with our constitution, which expressly admits all "who hold themselves responsible to the King, our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ."

We are not a church. The members must be guided theologically by their chosen ministers and pastors. The Order has not established new work, but identified itself everywhere with church and church interests, and many have been won to the church through joining our order.

The religious attitude of the Order of the King's Daughters is to-day exactly what it was in the beginning of its existence. The statement made in different papers, that we have changed our basis, is simply untrue. We could not have changed from the unsectarian attitude in which our first circular placed us, and have been true to ourselves.

No tongue has told or pen written what God has wrought through this beautiful Order, whose pillars are Faith, Hope, and Love. Our beautiful ship, with 145,000 souls on board, is going through a heavy sea just now, but we shall soon be in calm waters again; and I see a vision of many sons and daughters bringing in the kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

MARGARET BOTTOME.

ALL SAINTS' GIRLS' EVENING CLUB, UPPER HOLLOWAY, is an unsectarian place of recreation and education, open every evening for the use of factory girls and young women of a needy class. It is proposed to open, in connection with the club, a summer cottage a short distance from the Metropolis, that these girls may be enabled to enjoy a short holiday in the country. Besides the cottage and furniture, about £20 is needed to develop the scheme. Details may be had from the lady superintendent of the Club, Miss H. J. Elcum, 25, Rupert-road, Holloway-road, N.

DR. BARNARDO'S GIRLS' VILLAGE HOME.—On Saturday afternoon Dr. and Mrs. Barnardo were "at home" at Barkingside, Ilford, to some 500 or 600 ladies and gentlemen, who take an interest in the work which is being carried on there and at Stepney. The visitors were conveyed from Ilford Station in carriages, and received by Dr. Barnardo on the lawn at Mossford Lodge. Thence they proceeded in parties to inspect the village, which consists of some forty-seven cottages, affording shelter to upwards of nine hundred female children, whose ages range from five or six to about sixteen years. Here they are fed, clothed, educated, and prepared for domestic or other service. The elder girls are mainly employed in the extensive laundry, which on Saturday was open for inspection, while the younger attend school in the village, and all reside in families of from sixteen to twenty-five in the cottages, each of which is in charge of a matron. The appearance of the children, and their manner of living, enlisted the lively interest of the visitors, whose pleasure, however, was somewhat marred by the persistent downpour of rain.

Dr. Hodge's Last Legacy.

EVANGELICAL THEOLOGY. By A. A. Hodge, D.D. Nelson & Sons. This volume is spoken of as "Dr. Hodge's Last Legacy to the Cause of Truth," and a rich and valuable one it is. It contains nineteen lectures on the leading truths of Revelation, originally addressed, not to a theological class, but to a miscellaneous audience. Clothed in a form at once popular and comprehensive, they gain greatly in general interest and yet lose nothing in thoroughness and precision of treatment. The subjects dealt with are worked out in a manner worthy of the lamented author's high repute. The chapters on "Inspiration" and on "The Original State of Man" are specially helpful, although it is difficult to specify where all is so good. In treating on the Sacraments, baptism is, of course, viewed from the Presbyterian standpoint, that side of the question being skilfully handled. In view of the wide prevalence of Rationalistic theories and Ritualistic practices, it is devoutly to be wished that such a book as this should be extensively circulated and read; it provides an antidote of peculiar power, and furnishes guidance trustworthy and safe, because based on sound exegesis of the Word and profound faith in God.

A Book of Travel.

A THOUSAND MILES ON AN ELEPHANT IN THE SHAN STATES. By Holt S. Hallett. William Blackwood & Sons. This book is dedicated to the American Missionaries in Burmah, Siam and the Shan States, as a mark of the high esteem in which the author holds the noble work the American Baptist Mission and American Presbyterian Mission are accomplishing in civilising and Christianising the people of India. Mr. Hallett's book is a record of his travels through the Shan States on a surveying mission. He is the advocate of the building of a line of railway from India, through those States, into China, for the purpose of securing to the English race the benefits of Chinese trade. Mr. Hallett proves himself to be a keen observer of the manners and customs of the people he has met. Every page is sprinkled with matters of more than ordinary interest to the general reader. Of missionary work Mr. Hallett has much to say. "I never understood what a great boon Christianity was to the world until I recognised what heathendom was, and how it acted on its victims in the interior of Indo-China." Nothing struck the traveller more during his journeys "than the high estimation in which the missionaries were held by the chiefs." Throughout the pages of this work are frequent references to successful missionary work and to the opportunity for its further development, but the greatest field for missionaries in Indo-China lies, in Mr. Hallett's opinion, "undoubtedly amongst the non-Buddhist hill tribes." Excellent coloured maps of the route followed, and numerous illustrations explanatory of the history, habits, and customs of the people and the nature of their country, lend additional worth to this very interesting book of travels through a comparatively unknown region.

MISCELLANEOUS.

LITTLE FOLKS: A magazine for the young. Midsummer volume. 3s. 6d. Cassell & Co. This is a veritable treasury of attractive reading for the little ones. The illustrations, whether woodcuts or coloured lithographs, are all good. Moreover the letterpress is varied, and in a wholesome proportion designed to stimulate the perceptive faculties of the youthful readers.

THE CHURCH OF THE FIRSTBORN: A Few Thoughts on Christian Unity. By the late Rev. William Pennefather, B.A. New edition, revised. 1s. John G. Wheeler, 88, Mildmay Park, N. This book sets forth the Scriptural aspect of the one Church of Christ, showing that it is not limited to any section of the professing Church, but consists of all who are indwelt by the Spirit of God, by whatever name they may be known among men. The desire to allow this truth to find influential expression, led Mr. Pennefather to convene the Barnet Conference, which has given place to the Mildmay Conference, the meetings of which, as the years go by, are fragrant with holy memories of their founder as well as times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. The volume contains seven addresses, all of them full of important teaching. An appendix relates in brief the origin of the Conferences already mentioned, and gives three of the hymns written by Mr. Pennefather to be sung thereat.

THE TEN COMMANDMENTS IN THE NINETEENTH CENTURY. By F. S. Schenck. 4s. Funk and Wagnalls. A book well worthy of careful study; dealing with themes calling for far greater attention than this self-indulgent age is wont to give them. The author, while upholding the supreme and unvarying obligations of Divine Law, does not fail to exhibit the provisions of grace, or to show how the Sinless One, who perfectly kept that Law, alone can save others from its curse, and bring them into harmony with its holy requirements. Sound theology and common sense are admirably blended in the treatment of subjects not always wisely dealt with.

ALETHEIA. Under this title Dr. Paulus Cassel, of Berlin, has published, in German a series of lectures which are as suggestive for their teaching as they are erudite in their scholarship. Much that is curious is contained in two of the pamphlets devoted to ecclesiastical edifices. One of two on Christ in relation to social questions, deals with the Lord's day, another with the peace problem. "Christ and Mary," and "Christ and Judaism," both afford the author occasion for the display of his varied learning, as well as the statement of much sound doctrine. So far seven numbers of this serial have been issued. 50 pf. each. Berlin, N.W.A.: Haack, Dorotheenstr. 55.

Personalia.

Dr. and Mrs. Barnardo have left The Cedars, South Hackney. All communications should be sent to their only address: 18 to 26, Stepney-causeway, London, E.

The Hon. Lady Sebright asks us to state that she is open to take evangelistic or Gospel temperance meetings. Travelling expenses required. Address: Raven's Cliff, Bournemouth.

Mr. Daniels Matthews, of the Maloga Aboriginal Mission, sailed from England on June 27, and is now returning to Australia after a year's sojourn in this country. Next week we hope to give a brief letter from him to his friends and helpers.

Miss Kate Marsden, who is about to investigate the condition of the many lepers of Russia, is thirty-one years of age. Her father was a solicitor, and died when she was only fifteen. Left to battle with the world, she devoted herself to hospital nursing. Human suffering is her care, and God is her trust.

OBITUARY.—The Protestant community of the Canton of Zurich have just mourned the death, at the age of 42, of Dr. Martin Usteri, who was not long ago appointed to a professorial chair in the University of Erlangen. He was an authority on the life and times of Zwingli, and published several valuable works on the teaching of that celebrated reformer.

MIDNIGHT WORK.—On Thursday week the Midnight Meeting Movement gathered together a large number of women from the Strand in Exeter Hall. A goodly company of voluntary workers handed refreshments, and entered into personal converse with individual cases. Seven young women left to go into Homes. Brief addresses were delivered by Mr. George Williams, who was the host of the evening, Rev. G. W. McCree, and Mr Christien.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on the following:—Gospel meetings to be held at Morley Rooms, 14, John-street, Bedford-row, among young women engaged in bars and restaurants.——An eight days' mission at Watford, in connection with the Y.M.C.A.——Gospel tent, Arbroath, in connection with the Forfarshire Christian Union.——Special services by Mr. Opie Rodway, at Mission Chapel, Fox-street, Heywood, near Manchester, July 5, 6, and 7.——Speedy and complete deliverance from a most terrible form of melancholia, aggravated by spinal irritability and business losses.——PRAISE: For blessing on tent mission work, Montrose, N.B. For blessing on a special Gospel mission to the Militia at Horfield, conducted by Mr. G. Cummings.——For blessing at the Gospel services on the sands at Margate, both to children and adults. Pray that there may be yet greater things seen, and that at the opening meeting at the "Hall-by-the-Sea," on Sunday, July 6, many souls may be saved.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The Archbishop of Canterbury has introduced to the House of Lords a Bill for better enforcing Church discipline in the case of crimes and certain other offences. It enacts that upon the conviction of a clergyman his preferment is at once rendered vacant. Questions of doctrine and ritual are excluded from the Bill.

The Bishop of Bloemfontein (Dr. Knight-Bruce) is about to commence a mission in Mashonaland, the territory to the North of Matebeleland, over which the British South Africa Company has acquired extensive rights. The Bishop has himself visited the district, and intends taking up the work with energy and decision. Three clergymen are to proceed to Mashonaland shortly, and others will follow.

A special service was held on Sunday morning for the herdsmen attending the Royal Agricultural Show, in a large tent in the grounds, at Plymouth. The Bishop of Exeter and Rev. William St. Aubyn conducted the service. The Bishop took as his text: "Blessed is the man that trusteth in the Lord, and whose hope the Lord is. For he shall be as a tree planted by the waters." Without manuscript or note, Dr. Bickersteth held his congregation from the outset. Thus literally meeting the herdsmen and shepherds face to face, he began with the words: "My brother workmen," and delivered an address which was sure to reach the hearts of the men; in concluding, he implored them also to make sure that they answered the description of the man indicated in the text.

SALVATION ARMY.

In Holland great crowds have gathered to hear Miss Eva Booth, who was overwhelmed with glad surprise at the large number of converts, and the evident signs of revival.

Captain Ruddle, a veteran officer, has been drowned in the disastrous Australian floods, while bravely attempting the rescue of a fellow creature; the largest crowd ever known at a funeral in Brisbane gathered round his grave.

Despite the hot weather in the United States, Commissioner Booth-Tucker and his Indian party have had a good reception, the large Opera House, New Jersey, and the largest buildings in other towns being crowded; the camp meeting groves were also well attended, and the spiritual results most encouraging.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

On Monday, June 23, a most able and interesting lecture on India was delivered in Cardiff by Frederick Sessions, illustrated by gods that had been actully worshipped and many objects deeply instructive. There was a good attendance.

At Western Quarterly Meeting, held in Neath on the 24th and 25th ult., much concern was expressed that Friends' meetings might be revived in Wales, where there were once many congregations. Many hearts were moved, too, by the thrilling reports of H. S. and M. A. Newman on their American labours, especially with the loyalty, faith, and progress in the West. The openings for work seem limitless.

In spite of the fact that we are in the middle of summer, successful missions have just been held in Penybont, Radnorshire, and Almeley, Herefordshire. In the latter place a tent was used, and Isabella Young, of West Hartlepool, and H. S. Newman, Leominster, were the chief workers; while at Penybont, Pales, and Coedgwygham Hall, William Hobson, of Cardiff, spent the last week of the mission. Many at the close testified to the blessing received.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. C. A. Berry, of Wolverhampton, has declined a call to the pastorate of Westminster Chapel, London.

Rev. M. H. Le Pla, late of Exeter, will enter upon the pastorate at Kingsland Congregational Church on Sunday next.

Rev. C. H. Spurgeon has promised to deliver the address at the opening of the next session of Hackney College, on Tuesday, September 16.

York-street Chapel, Walworth, has just celebrated its centenary. Rev. Paul J. Turquand, who has been pastor of the church for the past thirty-seven years, has announced his intention to retire from the ministry.

Rev. W. Crosbie bade farewell to the congregation of Clifton-road Church, Brighton, to whom he has ministered for ten years, at a large meeting held on Wednesday evening last week. Mr. Crosbie will enter upon the pastorate of Park Hill Church, Nottingham, immediately.

Several missionaries of the London Missionary Society were taken leave of at a farewell meeting held at Abney Chapel, Stoke Newington, last week. They were:—Revs. W. E. Cousins, P. G. Peake, and T. Rowlands returning to Madagascar; Rev. R. Roberts going out for the first time to the same island; and Rev. W. E. Abel going to New Guinea.

Rev. Vine Hall, of South Cliff Church, Scarborough, has accepted a call to the pastorate of Claremont-street Church, Cape Town, for two years. The state of Mr. Hall's health renders a change of climate necessary, and it is with great reluctance that he has decided to leave Scarborough, where he has been ministering for three years. He will leave for South Africa during September.

PRESBYTERIAN.

The memorial stone-laying of the new church at Wimbledon attracted a large gathering. Six years ago, services were commenced in the Drill Hall, and two years later, a hall, to form part of the permanent church buildings, was opened on a site in Mansel-road. The church now in course of erection is estimated to cost about £7,000, and to seat 700 people. In laying the stone Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., said it was characteristic of Scotsmen that whenever a few of them came together the world over, one of their first thoughts was to build a Christian Church. Some people, he went on to say, pinned their faith to the beliefs of the fathers. For his own part, he preferred going to the Bible for his doctrine—the fountain head—before the stream became muddy.

METHODIST.

There are now 2000 children in the lowest parts of Liverpool connected with Rev. Charles Garrett's Mission.

The Convalescent Home opened at Bisley, near Stroud, by the West London Mission has become a centre of much aggressive work.

The Wesleyan Conference of New South Wales has decided to maintain a staff of European missionaries in Fiji and Samoa, and to accept the invitation of Sir William Macgregor to establish a mission in New Guinea.

The Clapton Mission of the Primitive Methodist Connexion, superintended by Rev. Thomas Jackson, is making cheering progress. There are 186 members in Church fellowship, which is an increase of twenty-four for the year. The agencies of the Mission are numerous, and in full operation.

Complaints are made that amongst the candidates for the Wesleyan ministry there is a marked absence of those who have had the advantage of a university training. "From some unexplained cause Wesleyan Methodism fails to attract into her ministry the sons of her wealthy and cultured families." This matter is about to engage attention.

BAPTIST.

Rev. Thomas and Mrs. Lewis have returned on furlough from San Salvador, Congo country. Mr. Lewis brings very encouraging accounts of the progress of the work in this the oldest of the Baptist Missionary Society's station.

At the last committee meeting of the Baptist Missionary Society, Mr. George Hughes, of Aberystwith University and Haverfordwest College, was accepted for missionary work in India, and Mr. John Whithead, of Rawdon College, for work on the Congo.

A special fortnight's mission has been held at Hull in connection with the George-street and Pryme-street churches, the missioners being Revs. F. C. Spurr and E. H. Ellis. Throughout the mission large congregations gathered to both afternoon and evening meetings, and great good has been accomplished both in the quickening and deepening of the spiritual life in the churches, and in leading many to a decision.

Intelligence has arrived of the death of Rev. W. Littlewood, who nearly fifty years ago went out to the Bahamas as a missionary of the Baptist Missionary Society. In 1881 he retired from active work.—The death has also occurred, in Victoria, of Rev. G. Slade, a native of Hanslope, near Wolverton. Mr. Slade went to Victoria in 1858, under the auspices of the Baptist Missionary Society, settling in Geelong, where he remained for over twenty years. In 1877, he took charge of bush mission work in Kerang, afterwards becoming pastor at Rockhampton, Queensland.

NOTES FROM WALES.

A most successful united camp meeting has taken place at Kingsmoor, within five miles of Tenby, Pembrokeshire. On a recent Sunday services were held nearly "all round the clock." A morning prayer-meeting was followed by an open-air assembly on the common. In the afternoon there was another outdoor meeting. The evening service of praise, led by a London city missionary, was followed by an evangelistic service. A most cheering spirit of unity was displayed. In ten chapels of the neighbourhood the ordinary services were given up, and six ministers of different churches took part in the day's proceedings, besides local preachers and other friends.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

By the death of the late Mrs. Hopper, of Bristol, it is stated that Irish Church Missions will receive a bequest of about £50,000.

The Belfast Prison-gate Mission is doing a Christ-like work. During the past twelve months ninety-seven women received the shelter of the Home, while thirty-two are at present inmates, and these have been surrounded with a godly influence, and encouraged by Christian advice.

At one of the meetings in connection with the recent Irish Methodist Conference, Rev. R. Crawford Johnson, superintendent of the Belfast City Mission, described the work which he and his colleague, Mr. Grubb, are doing in Belfast. He said that Belfast grew at the rate of 10,000 a year, and that startling discoveries had been made with regard to lapsed Protestants. There are 850 public-houses in the city, and only eighty-five churches.

The Irish Methodist Conference was brought to a close on Wednesday week. The Conference was very largely attended; an increase of fifty-nine in the membership was reported. Encouraging reports were presented on the state of day and Sabbath-schools, temperance, Orphan Society, and Belfast Mission; while the conversation on the state of the spiritual work throughout the country was one of the most practical and hopeful almost ever remembered.

NOTES FROM SCOTLAND.

Rev. Dr. Stewart, the venerable principal of the Lovedale Missionary Institution, South Africa, has arrived in Glasgow on furlough. Dr. Stewart has been labouring in South Africa for nearly twenty-five years. Next year the jubilee of the Lovedale Institution is be celebrated.

Professor Charteris presided at the opening of the Deaconesses' Institution and Training Home, for which premises have been secured at Berkeley-terrace, Glasgow. He hoped that by the training received in that institution a large and increasing amount of good would be done among the poor, the sick, and the needy.

Dr. Alex. Whyte presided at the gathering held in Edinburgh on the occasion of the presentation of prizes to the successful competitors in connection with the Free Church's Welfare of Youth Scheme. The movement owes its inception to Dr. Whyte, and he declared that it never had a better hold than at the present time. Many of the former competitors, he added, were now ministers, elders, and even writers for the Press, who had done their first literary work in connection with that scheme.

Rev. A. Stewart, Evangelical Union minister, Ayr, in the course of a sermon to his congregation on the controversy in the Free Church, remarked that whatever the object in demanding adherence to a creed, the Confession of Faith is too antiquated a document to serve as a symbol of present-day faith; on many points it has, unquestionably, been superseded. Compiled nearly two and a half centuries ago, it would be anomalous if, after so many years, they were unable to devise a more suitable document.

Rev. Dr. Laws, of the Livingstonia Mission, Lake Nyassa, has been again dangerously ill from overwork and worry. He was thought to be very near death, but a note from him dated March 18 says he was slowly recovering. The strain on Dr. Laws and his colleagues, owing to the trouble with the Portuguese and the Arab man-stealers, has been terrible, and it is with extreme difficulty that the work of teaching, preaching, and attending to cases requiring medical treatment has been carried on.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

Rev. A. H. Dumville, incumbent of Horetown, co. Wexford.—Mr. Wm. Lowry, Antrim.—Rev. John Baillie, D.D., rector of Wyvenhoe, Colchester, formerly a minister of the Free Church of Scotland.—Major George Ormonde Stoney, of the King's Own Borderers, "a good soldier of Jesus Christ."—Mr. James Fulcher, of Tattingstone, a well-known veteran worker in the Wesleyan denomination in Suffolk; he was the original "Mister Horn" in Rev. Mark Guy Pearse's work, "Mister Horn and his Friends."—Rev. John J. Forbes, missionary of the American Board, at Kusaie, Micronesian Islands.

MINISTERING CHILDREN'S LEAGUE.—A second Home in connection with this organisation was opened a few days ago at Ottershaw, Chertsey, and the foundation-stone of a third laid by the Countess of Meath's little daughter. In the course of an address, Rev. C. J. Ridgeway, vicar of Christ Church, Lancaster-gate, spoke of the rapid advance of the League, the membership of which now numbers 40,000, living in various parts of the world. Lady Meath, who is the foundress of the League, commended the work to the increased sympathy of the children present.

WORK AMONG THE JEWS IN PARIS.—Mr. L. C. Mamlock, missionary of the London Jews' Society, writes:—"The Lord has again blessed my humble efforts among his ancient people. A Jewish family, consisting of husband, wife, two daughters (one is a widow), and a son, whom I have been visiting for the last three years, and, as I thought, without any evident result, have lately declared to me their belief in our blessed Lord. They are now under Christian instruction. The widowed daughter is not only most anxious to confess Christ openly in baptism, but wishes to bring up her child in the faith of Christ, and herself to engage in Christian work." Mr. Mamlock's address is 19, rue de Rome, Paris.

THE FEMALE SERVANTS' HOME SOCIETY.—The fifty-fourth annual tea and public meeting was held a few days ago at the Institute of the Young Women's Christian Association, Regent-street, W. The report (read by Mr. C. Stuart Thorpe) set forth the benefits of the Society to friendless young women. The principal event of the year had been the removing from the Home, 74, High-street, Camden Town, to 143, Camden-road, where comfortable lodgings can be obtained by servants from 2s. 6d. to 3s. 6d. per week, including gas, firing, and free registration. The admissions for the year had been 1091. There had been a deficiency in the income, which had been made up by grants from the Rescue Society. The three Homes, capable of accommodating 90 inmates at one time, can be maintained for the small sum of £400 a year. Mr. R. C. Morgan presided, and addresses were delivered by Revs. Nevile Sherbrooke and S. Dixon. Thirty-six young women received testimonials for faithful service.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

These Notes run concurrently with the Readings of the "Bible and Prayer Union," founded and conducted by Rev. Thomas Richardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Mile End-road, London, E., of whom card of membership may be had for 1d., and Monthly Notes, prepared by himself, for 1s. per annum, post free. We hope many of our readers will become members of the "Bible and Prayer Union," and take its Monthly Notes, which of course are entirely different from these.

SUNDAY, JULY 6.—Psalm LVIII.

THIS Psalm is against wicked rulers. The word rendered congregation (1) means also "mighty ones," or "rulers." It has been suggested that it was written on account of Abner and the rest of Saul's princes, who judged David as a rebel and outlaw, and urged Saul to pursue him. It is the fourth of the Golden Psalms. For superscription, see also lvii. The word Michtam signifies inscription, and some have conjectured that the six Psalms thus described, and which were written during the days when David was a fugitive, were inscribed on the sides of the caves in which he took refuge.

The divisions are very simple: a description of the evils of the unrighteous judges (1-5); prayer for their overthrow (6-10); the satisfaction of the righteous (11, 12).

2. Weighing is always symbolical of justice, but these unrighteous judges weighed out violence rather than justice.

3. It is said that the young serpent will sting as swiftly and as poisonously as an older one. And certain it is that the virulence of our nature will show itself in young children. Of course, by nature, we all share the fallen nature of Adam, though, in the case of the believer, grace neutralises its effect.

4-5. The second clause may be rendered, like a deaf adder, he stoppeth the ear. "The hearing of all the serpent tribes is very imperfect, as all are destitute of a tympanic cavity." The charmer has to reach the snake by very shrill notes of voice or flute. In the case of David's persecutors, it was not so much their inability as their unwillingness to hear. Saul's conscience was not dead, for he was on more than one occasion touched by David's appeals (1 Sam. xxiv. 20; xxvi. 21). But he resisted the prompting of his better self.

6. This imagery is borrowed from the lion, which tears his prey with his great eye-teeth.

7. Let his arrows be as if they were cut—headless, pointless, blunt, and harmless (Ps. xxxvii. 15).

9. Before the contents of the pots can feel the heat of the thorns burning beneath, God will take them away; both those which have not been reached by the fire, and are therefore green, and those which are burning. The rapidity and rush of the tempest, which sweeps away all preparations for the meal, is very vivid.

10, 11. As the weary traveller is refreshed by the washing of his feet, so will the saints be comforted when they see the righteousness of God vindicated. There is a great distinction between the desire for the gratification of personal vengeance and zeal for the vindication of God's character. Ah, what a commentary is supplied by Rev. xix. 1-4!

MONDAY, JULY 7.—Psalm LIX.

The fifth of these Golden Psalms. Compare the title with that of lvii. and lviii. Delitzsch says, "We believe that it is most advisable to adhere to the title." The contents of this Psalm correspond to the title, and carry us naturally to 1 Sam. xix. 11.

It consists of four parts, of which the first and third are very similar, and the second and fourth. Compare 1-5 with 11-13, also 6-10 with 14-17.

1, 2. Four times the persecuted man cries for help. He speaks of his enemies as workers of iniquity, men of blood, plot weavers, and insolent in their might. How often must similar cries have been wrung from the Waldenses, the Huguenots, and the Covenanters!

3. Transgression rather refers to the treason with which he was charged against the king; sin as towards God. We should habitually exercise ourselves to have consciences void of offence towards God and man (Acts xxiv. 16).

4. This may refer to their efforts to scale the house; "but, in the darkness, do Thou keep awake."

5. Dwell on these reduplicated names for God: Jehovah, the unchanging; God, the strong; of hosts, indicating the resources at his command; the God of Israel, in his covenant relations. Each is a new plea, which God cannot resist (Jer. xxxv. 17, xxxviii. 17).

6, 7. The Eastern dog is a wretched animal, prowling through the streets to feed on offal, and filling the night air with howlings, when its search for food has been in vain. Thus for several successive nights his foes may have gathered round his house, whispering, or pouring forth their hatred in muttered tones. Silence has settled on the houses all around, the inmates are wrapt in slumber: Who doth hear?

8. What a bold image! God looks down through the dark, and laughs at them in scorn.

9. The Revised Version gives a beautiful sense: "O my Strength, upon Thee will I wait."

10. It might be read, "My God shall go before me with his mercy." Here is God's pre-eminent grace. He goes before the sheep which He puts forth. He marches in front to make the crooked straight, and the rough smooth (John x. 4).

11-13. A terrible intensification of his imprecations.

16, 17. There is also here an amplification of his former resolve (9). The morning is ever breaking on the godly, succeeding the night of anxiety and peril. Let it summon us to loud songs of praise.

TUESDAY, JULY 8.—Psalm LX.

This is a national Psalm to be taught to the people (Deut. xxxi. 19). As xliv. was sung by the sons of Korah when the Edomites were taking advantage of David's absence to invade the land, so this Psalm was composed after victory had been assured. Shushan-eduth means the lily of testimony; and may refer to the name of the tune to which this Psalm was set. Aram is Syrians, the Syrians which dwelt between the two floods, Euphrates and Tigris, had become confederate with the Syrians of Zobah (2 Sam. x. 6, 8, 16, 19). For the whole story, see 2 Sam. viii.

The nation's anguish, (1-4); the nation's confidence in God's Word (5-8); the nation's prayer (9-12).

1. These earlier verses have a plaintive tone, due to the great losses inflicted on the land by the Syrian invasion. Sometimes disasters fall so thick on the Church that it seems as if it were God-forsaken.

4. There is the more reason for claiming God's help, because his people carry the banner of his truth. If it is trailed on the ground, great dishonour is done to his holy name.

5. We are beloved indeed, if we are in the Beloved (Deut. xxxiii. 12; Eph. i. 6).

6. This is an allusion to God's promise that his people should hold Canaan. And therefore the nation rejoices in its certain victory over its foes. When we have any promise of God, we may confidently reckon on it.

Shechem was east, Succoth west of the Jordan. As it was promised in Jacob's days, so should it be (Gen. xxxiii. 17, 18). The enemy should not succeed in wresting an inch from Israel.

7. Gilead, though lying across the Jordan, should not be dismembered. Manasseh and Ephraim, the martial tribes, and Judah, the seat of government, were welded into a strong united kingdom, and should remain so.

8. The three hereditary foes of Israel had been reduced to subjection. Moab, a washing tub (2 Sam. viii. 2); Edom, a slave taking care of sandals (Matt. iii. 11), or the idea may be of the transference of authority (Ruth iv. 7); Philistia, compelled to welcome with shouts of triumph (Ps. cviii. 9).

9. The victor pants for new victories. The strong city is probably Petra, the famous capital of Edom, hewn in rock.

11, 12. The cry for help and the assurance of deliverance go hand in hand. Here is a motto for us in all times of opposition and difficulty.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 9.—Psalm LXI.

Neginah implies that the Psalm was intended for singing to instruments. It was evidently composed while the tabernacle was standing (4); and after David had received the promise of the everlasting kingdom (6, 7). Yet he was evidently passing through a time of great distress, and Delitzsch is, therefore, probably right in fixing its date at the time of Absalom's rebellion, and in heading it, "Prayer and Thanksgiving of an expelled king on his way back to his throne." It is a precious gem.

2. "The end of the earth" is any place of extreme sorrow or depression; it is equivalent to the uttermost of which Heb. vii. 25 speaks. We are never really far off from God; but, owing to depression, and physical weakness, and the oppression of our foes, we may feel ourselves to be. But we are never too far off to cry to Him.

What rock is this, save the Rock of Ages, cleft for us? And yet we cannot climb up into its clefts; we need the hand of Divine grace to lift us thither, and keep us there. "I will put thee" (Exod. xxx. 22).

3. What God has been, He will be.

4. If ever permitted to return, He purposed to abide for ever in the sacred shrine. But everywhere God pitches a pavilion for us. These are the outspread wings of the Shekinah (Ps. xxxvii. 7). Ah! what a heritage is here (Isa. viii. 17; Eph. i. 3).

6, 7. Words which can only be fulfilled in their entire wealth of meaning in the King of kings, and are true of us in proportion as we are identified with Him in daily fellowship.

THURSDAY, JULY 10.—Psalm LXII.

This is the "only" Psalm. It consists of three strophes, each of which begins with that word in the Hebrew, and closes with "Selah." (1-4; 5-8; 9-12). It was probably composed during the time of Absalom's rebellion, and it resembles the xxxix. in being dedicated to Jeduthun (1 Chron. xxv. 1-3); and that Psalm also contains "only" four times.

1. "Only my soul waiteth," or "is silence." There are times when words fail us, and when the soul mutely waits for God's salvation. Silence is often golden eloquence, and God can understand it. Also waiting on God stills the soul.

2. The movement is only the surface of the life, while the great deeps of the soul are at rest. (Acts xx. 24.)

3. It is probably David which was the bowing wall and tottering fence. One thrust, and his enemies think he will be at their feet.

5. It is well for us if we have learnt to look away from all creature help to God alone.

6. What a loving accumulation of endearing titles for God! The man of fifty catches up the imagery of earlier years, and ransacks memory to supply fit names for this Almighty Friend. And all that God is, is mine.

8. "At all times," means on dark as well as shiny days. When the heart is charged with sorrow or sin, what a relief it is to open the sluice gates, and pour all out toward God.

9. See R.V.: They go up as the lighter scale, lighter than vanity, i.e., a breath. How often have we looked for help from men and money in vain, but never from God. (10.)

11. Power and Mercy are the two pillars on which the Temple of his justice rests.

12. There is communion, but no supplication, for at times the soul rests in God, muses with itself, and is still.

FRIDAY, JULY 11.—Psalm LXIII.

This is said to have been from the third century the morning song of the Church. The superscription tells us it was written in the wilderness of Judah. But the word king (11) forbids us supposing that it was during the Sauline persecution. It was probably written amid the events recorded in 2 Sam. xv. 23-28, xvi. 2, xvii. 16. This wilderness stretched southwards from Jericho on the western shores of the Dead Sea. There is a noticeable use in the story of the life of the soul. My soul thirsteth, my soul satisfied, my soul followeth hard after (1-5-8).

1. This should be the cry of each of us in the dawn of life, and of each day, watch the morning. Watch! "In a dry and weary land," R.V. How weary and sad is life without God, though we have all, yet if He be not there, our soul is athirst and weary (John iv. 13).

2. As he trod sadly over the burning sand, and crossed the dry torrent-beds, it seemed a picture of his state of soul, and he contrasted it with the happy past, when he had had similar desires, which were then slaked by the vision of the Divine power and glory.

3. Already a sense of the love of God breaks on his soul, as a tropical rain on chapt earth; and he becomes assured of speedy satisfaction.

5. God not only gives us necessaries but dainties.

6. Many of David's most rapturous experiences of God seem to have been at night. In all these Psalms there is imagery borrowed from the night-watch in the camp.

8. The hand of God ever supports the soul in its pursuit of Him (Phil. iii. 12).

9. Perhaps there is an allusion here to Num. xvi. 31.

10. Absalom's army was badly routed, and many of the slain must have fed the jackals which roamed the forest (2 Sam. xviii. 6-8).

11. "By Him," refers of course, not to the king, but to God.

SATURDAY, JULY 12.—Psalm LXIV.

This Psalm probably dates from the Sauline persecutions. The slanders of the tongue, specially mentioned, are very characteristic of that period. There are two strophes. Prayer for preservation (1-6), and assurance of Divine vindication (7-10).

1-5. What a marvellous picture is given here of the whole range of calumny. Insult, sarcasm, slander, innuendoes, tale-bearing, and suspicion are rife enough in our society, and especially in Christian society. How fond are we all of hearing and spreading reports of which we have not taken the trouble to ascertain the truth. Sometimes it is a look, or a gesture, or a shrug of the shoulders, but it is enough to ruin a man's reputation.

6. If this search is always on foot, how careful and circumspect should we be (1 Cor. x. 32).

7-9. God relieves us of the necessity of fighting for ourselves. Whilst the wicked are bending their bows against us (3), God's arrow is flying from an unsuspected quarter against them. Curses come home to roost (3).

10. The Psalm began with the singular and ends with the plural. Our experiences enrich the whole Church. And those who trust shall have abundant cause for rejoicing and praise.

THE GREAT SUPPER.

LUKE xiv. 15—24.

GOLDEN TEXT: Verse 15.

DESCRIBE the circumstances leading up to this parable. Jesus is a guest in the house of a chief Pharisee (1). It is possible to do a seeming kindness to accomplish an evil purpose, and the Pharisee seems to have invited Jesus mainly in order to give him and his friends ground for accusation against Him. Jesus accepted the invitation, though not ignorant of the motive that prompted it. But even in the house of the chief Pharisee He is "about his Father's business." His miracle (2-6) is not only an act of mercy to the afflicted man, but an answer (3) to the thoughts in the hearts of his enemies. His teaching fearlessly applies the lessons suggested by the eagerness of the guests to obtain the highest seats, and by the interested motives that prompted the host in the choice of his guests (7-11, 12-14). It is important to note that the humility which is necessary for entrance into the kingdom of God will find earthly expression in the choice of the lowest seat at a feast. And equally important is it that in everything—even in providing a feast—we should have "respect unto the recompense" at "the resurrection of the just."

At this point his teaching is interrupted by someone exclaiming, "Blessed is he," &c. (15). (Compare also Rev. xix. 7.) From the fact that the parable which follows is addressed to him (16), it appears that he was more enthusiastic in extolling the blessedness of partaking of the Feast than ready to enter and partake for himself. It is quite possible for many to do that. To sing about "The happy land," and "What must it be to be there?" and not seek to enter is just as foolish. Even a teacher may commend to others a salvation which he does not personally possess and enjoy. Then follows

THE PARABLE.

Verses 16, 17.—Gospel blessings are often represented under the figure of a feast (Isa. xxv. 6; Matt. xxii.). It suggests the joyousness of the Gospel, and that its blessings meet a real hunger of the soul. There is neither joy nor satisfaction in anything else. Why "a great supper?" The host—God Himself; the provision—such as neither wealth could purchase, nor power procure, including pardon, peace, deliverance, heaven; the cost—not silver and gold, but the precious blood of Christ (1 Pet. i. 19); the number invited—("many")—wide as the world is the invitation, none are excluded. According to Eastern custom the guests invited at the first receive a second intimation when the supper is ready (17). Dr. Thomson says: "In Lebanon, if an Emir invites, he always sends a servant to call you at the proper time. This servant often repeats the very formula mentioned here—'Come, for the supper is ready.'"

Verses 18—20.—"With one consent" means as one man. Though they had accepted the invitation, they now agreed to refuse to dine. There can be no doubt that these invited guests were the Jews, to whom had belonged Old Testament privileges, and who were invited again during the ministry of John and Jesus. But they represent all those who frequently hear the Gospel, but stop short of entering for themselves. The three excuses correspond to "the cares, and riches, and pleasures of this life" (viii. 14), which choke the good seed. The first is just beginning to get (18); the second is eagerly seeking more (19); the third is bent upon enjoying what he has (20). In the first and second, earthly prosperity, and in the third, earthly delight, is preferred to the salvation of the soul. There is a hardening of the heart manifest in the three. The first recognises his obligation, and only asks off to attend to urgent business: the second has forgotten his obligation, and simply says: "I go to prove them": the third says: "I cannot." The last is the worst condition of all. And every one who procrastinates is in danger of reaching that condition. Excuses are not reasons. Not one of these given was genuine. Underlying them all was a spirit of opposition to the generous host. In the light of eternity such excuses cannot stand. Beware of the habit of making excuses for [illegible].

Verses 21-24.—The anger of the host indicates that He knows the intinerity of the excuses. When such love is slighted, such costly provision refused, what wonder that He should be angry? No sin is so great in God's view as that of rejecting his grace (John iii. 18). The leaders of the nation have rejected Him, but among poor, maimed, &c. (21), the "publicans and sinners," whom others despised, many are found willing to enter the feast. "Yet there is room."—The feast is great—the [illegible]. His compassion is. His [illegible] and [illegible]. Him [illegible] : the [illegible] Him [illegible]. If [illegible]—[illegible]—[illegible]. [illegible]. [illegible]. [

Evangelistic Notes.

Hull.—A successful fortnight's mission has just been held in connection with the George-street and Pryme-street Baptist Churches, conducted by Revs. F. C. Spurr (of Cardiff) and E. H. Ellis (of London). Large congregations gathered to both afternoon and evening meetings, and great good was accomplished, both in leading outsiders to decision and quickening the life of Church members.

Y.M.C.A., Devizes.—A fortnight's mission in connection with this newly formed branch has been conducted by Mr. Rowland Sturt, of the Evangelisation Society. The meetings held in a tent were well attended, and it is confidently believed that many have received blessing. A special meeting held for "young men" was a solemn time, and many remained, seeking to know the way of the Lord more perfectly. Throughout the mission Mr. Sturt has conducted daily afternoon Bible-readings, which have proved most helpful and instructive.

Trowbridge.—A three weeks' mission has been held in connection with the Y.M.C.A. The meetings commenced in a tent, but this was found to be too small for the numbers who assembled to hear the Gospel. On the last three Sundays of the mission, the largest hall in the town, which seats 900, was crowded, many having to go away for want of room. A noon prayer-meeting was held daily in the Y.M.C.A. rooms, Duke-street. The mission was conducted by Mr. J. Elliott, of the Evangelisation Society. The meetings are being continued for four Sundays longer, by evangelists from the same Society.

Tent Work.—Mr. J. A. Vicary, of Bristol, writes:—A very successful tent mission has been conducted in the village of Bishopsworth, also at Limpley-Stoke. A large tent was pitched on Horfield-common, with a view of benefiting the young men of the Militia encamped close by; but such was the opposition that the second night it was levelled to the ground. We erected it again, but only used it for a short time, when the ground was refused us, and open-air testimony had to take its place night after night, with encouraging results. We are putting up our wooden-sided tent on Knightstone, Weston-super-Mare. At Batheaston, Tiverton, and other places, missions have also been arranged for.

Appeals.

Chili.—Rev. G. D. COLEMAN, Casilla-square, Concepcion, Chili, writes:—"One great difficulty under which we labour is that there is no money-order system between Chili and England. I am in need of books and papers, but must for the present wait."

A Need in China.—Friends having old linen would confer a great kindness by sending it for a mission hospital in South China, where it is greatly valued. Parcels may be sent to Messrs. DAKIN & SONS, Creechurch-lane, E.C., marked "For Dr. Grant's Hospital, Chin Chee."

South Queensferry, N.B., Young Men's Christian Association.—This Association, which has been in active operation for the last ten years, has bought a hall lately used in carrying on the Forth Bridge Mission. The sum of £40 is still wanted to clear off the purchase price. The building is well adapted for a centre of Christian work in the neighbourhood. Address the SECRETARY of the Association.

THE CHRISTIAN PORTRAIT GALLERY.

Consisting of OVER ONE HUNDRED Life-like Portraits and Biographic Sketches of Prominent Christian Workers of the Present Day.

Handsomely Bound, Demy Quarto, Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 10s. 6d.

PRESS NOTICES.

"In respect of truthful portraiture, nothing could be more desirable than the sketches here presented; many of the faces familiar to the public of to-day starting from the pages with the vividness of life. The subjects are drawn from a very extended tract of religious life; and a meed of praise is rendered equally to the popular pulpiteer; the worker in the slums; the gleaner in the Indian mission field; and the South African evangelist."—Scottish Leader.

"This handsome, large, quarto volume, beautifully bound, is one of more than ordinary interest to the Christian reader. It contains upwards of one hundred biographical sketches, with remarkably life-like portraits of men and women who have been—and some of whom still are—eminent workers for God at home and in foreign lands."—English Churchman.

"The statement on the title-page that the portraits are 'life-like illustrations' is no empty boast. Of the kind there are few which more nearly fulfil the exacting requirements of popular taste, or indeed of artistic criticism. The letterpress also is admirable. The book is handsomely bound in cloth, with gilt edges and lettering. As a worthy record of noble lives it deserves a place on every Christian drawing-room table."—Methodist Recorder.

"This handsome volume will be valued by all who are interested in the Christian life and work of our day. The portraits are very good, and the accompanying sketches are models of brief, terse, and adequate biographies. The volume will form a handsome feature for the drawing-room, and be especially suitable for presentation."—Baptist Magazine.

"Written amid the multiplied engagements of a busy life, it would be impossible to estimate the benefit to heart and thought by bending over these translucent depths of sacred truth—so calm, so still, so profound, so counteractive of life's feverish haste: and it is my earnest hope that these Expositions may pass on to others some of the blessedness which their preparation has brought to myself."

THE NOTES and READINGS contained in this volume originally appeared in the pages of The Christian week by week. The interest taken in them at the time of their issue has led to republication in their present form. It will be observed that the Chapters have been considerably extended and enlarged since their appearance in The Christian; and several new features have been added.

It is believed that these "NOTES" and "READINGS" will be found of service by Sabbath School Teachers, and by Bible Students; whilst Ministers and Evangelists, may also be able to gather some help from their pages.

It should be understood that the present work is intended to be a HELP for Bible Readers. It is not, therefore, prepared with a view to being read through like an ordinary volume. But as chapter after chapter of the Pentateuch is perused by Bible Students, it is hoped that they will have this book open at their side for constant reference. In this way the use and value of the work will be most fully realized.

GALVANISM v. NERVOUS EXHAUSTION and DEBILITY.

31, New Walk Terrace, York, June 6th, 1890.

Dear Sir,—A few months ago I recommended a lady suffering from nervous debility to wear one of your Galvanic Belts, and I am pleased to inform you that she has derived the greatest benefit from doing so. I may add that your treatment has also been the means of restoring the colour, tone, and gloss to the lady's hair, which had prematurely faded.—Yours very truly, (Mrs.) M. JOHNSON.

3, Clarence-square, Brighton, 29th May, 1890.

Dear Sir,—I write to report to you the state of my health after wearing your combined belt for three months. The effect it has had on me is really wonderful, and my work is now a pleasure to me. I have not had a single day's illness since wearing your appliance, and my digestion is quite restored, in fact I am enjoying better health now than I have for years. Thanking you for your kind attention, yours truly, S. HAYNES.

Penybont, Radnorshire, 19th May, 1890.

Dear Sir,—I am happy to tell you that your Galvanic Belts have been the means, in God's hands, of wonderfully restoring my health, and I hope you will forgive me the ingratitude of not answering your letter sooner. For the last five months I have been able to attend to business with wonderful health and strength, and my appetite is splendid, also my digestion. If you publish this letter, please use initials only; but I will gladly answer any inquirers. You may refer to me at any time.—Yours very truly, A. M.

GALVANISM v. INDIGESTION and MENTAL DEPRESSION.

32, Norfolk-road, Ipswich, May 12th, 1890.

Dear Sir,—Some time ago I was a great sufferer from indigestion, nervous weakness, and disordered liver. I also suffered from such lowness of spirits that I was at last compelled to give up my business. I then wrote to you stating my case, and you advised me a set of Pulvermacher's Belts, which I purchased, and after wearing them for three weeks a great change for the better took place, and gradually I was restored to perfect health. I have now resumed business, and find my duties a pleasure, and all my friends congratulate me on the wonderful improvement. I shall always be happy to recommend your treatment to any sufferers.—Yours very gratefully,

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

(THIRTY-THIRD SERIES.)

CASE of a YOUNG GIRL at CORNHILL-ON-TWEED.—"NO HOPE of RECOVERY."

In June last year I received a letter from Rev. GEO. LAUDER, of 6, NEW BRIDGE-STREET, ALNWICK, highly recommending this case to my favourable consideration. (I am always glad to treat any cases so recommended on the most favourable terms.)

The father of the patient first wrote me June 18, 1889. His name is JOHN DAVIDSON, of Heatherslaw, CORNHILL-ON-TWEED, Northumberland. The case is that of his daughter, twelve years old. She had had severe attacks of bronchitis one upon the other, so that the doctor at one time gave "no hope of her recovery." She improved, however, for a time, and then relapsed. At the time he wrote me she was suffering from cough, expectoration, pains in the chest, wheezing, flushes, palpitations, great weakness, and loss of flesh all over the body.

Letters from July to October reported general improvement.

On the 18th February last I received a letter from Mrs. Davidson, who says:—"My daughter is now as well as ever she was in her life. Amidst so many colds and influenzas she keeps free. I shall always have your medicine in the house."

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

"Written amid the multiplied engagements of a busy life, it would be impossible to estimate the benefit to heart and thought by bending over these translucent depths of sacred truth—so calm, so still, so profound, so counteractive of life's feverish haste: and it is my earnest hope that these Expositions may pass on to others some of the blessedness which their preparation has brought to myself."

BUILDING FUND APPEAL.

An earnest appeal is made for Funds to enable the Committee to rebuild the front portion of the Hospital. This, the only remaining part of the Barracks of the Light Horse Volunteers which occupied the site of the present Hospital in the early part of the century, is now much dilapidated, and has become quite inadequate and unfit for the present needs of the Charity. It is therefore imperative that the work of rebuilding should be undertaken without delay, in order to meet the ever-growing demands upon the Hospital. It is estimated that the cost of rebuilding the front portion and furnishing it will be about £20,000. Admission to the Hospital is entirely Free, no letters of recommendation being required. Contributions for the Building Fund and for the general expenses will be gratefully received by Messrs. BROWN, JANSON & CO., 32, Abchurch-lane; or at the Hospital by

The Christian.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Rev. Dr. DOUDNEY, vicar of St. Luke's, Bedminster, Bristol, and editor of The Gospel Magazine.

We have received a large amount of correspondence on the subject of Romanism, Holiness Conventions, &c. We have only space this week for a very few letters, but these are fairly representative.

☞ It is particularly requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan & Scott. Communications for THE CHRISTIAN should be addressed to the Editor. Private letters should in every case be so marked.

We heartily congratulate the Salvation Army on the issue of the Whitchurch action in the Queen's Bench. It ought to teach our country magistracy a needed lesson as to the elementary rights of peaceable Christian citizens to meet in the open air and proclaim the Gospel according to the dictates of conscience and the command of their Lord and Master.

An article on "Child-Life Insurance" by Mr. Waugh in the month's Contemporary Review appeals powerfully to the deepest instincts of our nature, and must go far to strengthen the action of the Bishop of Peterborough, and of those who demand legislation on the matter. The appeal of the article is wisely based on the indisputable evidence of facts. It is plain in expression, because no rhetoric could add force to its appalling statements. It is surely of Him who poured such regard over childhood that the unuttered cry of the little ones has found an interpretation which cannot without national criminality be disregarded.

The report lately presented to the Chief Commissioner of Police by Rev. Benjamin Waugh, dealing more especially with the work done under the Police Order of March, 1889, contains much instructive informa-ion as to the good results attending the exertions of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children. It is stated that last year 980 cases of cruelty were dealt with—some ' sudden, sharp, single-deed cruelties which ift up their voice in the streets," others "of he exhausting, hidden, speechless sort." t is satisfactory to learn that the effect of he latest Act of Parliament "has been a ractical clearance of the Metropolis of hild-beggars," and that the Police Order as had a very wholesome and deterrent ffect upon the tramp class, "has made a ery different London for children, and will onduce to a new, more endurable, perhaps appier, tramp-child life." Mr. Waugh akes various recommendations, whereby he application of the law may be made ore certain and complete.

The decision of the Special Committee appointed to sift the allegations made last year in The Methodist Times, as to the Wesleyan missions in India, is a somewhat inconsequential and perplexing one. The missionaries have been "completely exonerated" by the Committee from all imputations of luxury in their modes of life, or of unsatisfactory relations with the native populations. At the same time, a recommendation is made which, if carried out, will effect a considerable reduction in their scale of pay. It seems to us that this controversy ought never to have arisen. European missionaries who have gone to foreign, and in many cases unhealthy, climes to labour in the Gospel, deserve all possible consideration; greater self-sacrifice should not be expected of them than we look for among workers at home.

The Record contains a foreshadowing of one of those divisions among the English Jews out of which new epochs arise. A conference is shortly to be held in London, under the presidency of Lord Rothschild—the first of its kind—to confer on the appointment to the Chief Rabbinate. The question involves important issues. Young and talented members of the race contend that the Rabbinical code does not meet present requirements, and that, with the appointment of the Chief Rabbi, an Ecclesiastical Board should be nominated with powers to make alterations in ceremonial practice and worship. The orthodox party oppose this. The coming contest may go far to purify the conservatism of Judaism, and lead to greater changes.

London will next week be the scene of an interesting gathering of advocates of peace from all parts of the world. On Monday, at the Westminster Town Hall, the Universal Peace Congress holds its first meeting, which will be the precursor of various meetings, receptions, &c., that are announced to take place during the week. Delegates from France, Belgium, Germany, Italy, Austria, and other countries will take part in the Congress, which meets in the mornings and afternoons of five days. Everyone interested in this question will, we are sure, wish all success to what promises to be an interesting and useful Congress.

The recently published annual police report of Vienna records the startling fact that last year there were in that city two hundred and sixty-nine actual suicides, besides two hundred and sixty attempts at self-destruction. During the month of May there were no less than forty-three cases, a total which had not been reached for many years. Very many of these, especially among the titled and moneyed classes of society, are said to have been due to the unhappy victims having lived beyond their means. May not the true cause, however, lie deeper than this? May not this sad death-roll be largely the result of breathing that deadly atmosphere of unbelief and materialism which has become so prevalent in many of the great Continental cities, inducing a reckless disregard of anything beyond the present? It would be instructive also to know for what proportion of these cases intemperance was answerable. And side by side with the above figures may be placed the fact that in France the number of suicides during the last fifteen years has increased more than fifteen per cent.

The following words furnish a clue to the attitude of Professor Huxley towards Christianity. They are taken from an article on "Lights of the Church and Lights of Science" in the July Nineteenth Century:—

> The question of "Inspiration" really possesses no interest for those who have cast ecclesiasticism and all its works aside, and have no faith in any source of truth save that which is reached by the patient application of scientific methods.

Life would be brought to a standstill if there were no faith in testimony except as it had first been tested by the Professor's rule. The dictum shows that reconciliation between Christianity and present scientific scepticism is impossible. Christian believers act in relation to truth, as the wisest and best of mankind have done in every age. There must, it may be, ever remain a residuum of objections in relation to all history, but in reference to Christianity there are preponderant evidences which cannot be subject to scientific experiment, and around which there are such accumulating corroborations as to forbid unbelief. Pascal finely says on this: "There is light enough for those whose sincere wish is to see; and darkness enough to confound those of an opposite disposition."

It may further be asked, Are "scientific methods" infallible? A quarter of a century ago certain scientists were sure about a number of things, respecting which they are in doubt now—the ape being the progenitor of man, for example. How do we know that their present historical investigations and examinations of phenomena may not bring them to equally different conclusions a quarter of a century hence? And is there no truth for man till scientists are agreed? We could wish that Professor Huxley, instead of entering upon an unprovoked disparagement of the Anglican clergy, would use his ability to account for the character of Christ, and for the magnificent benevolence and philanthropy which Christianity has exerted, and is now exerting in almost every part of the world.

The Guardian pronounces, very decisively, against the Bill of Rev. Teignmouth Shore, in reference to Church legislation, which, after being prepared and approved by the Convocation and House of Laymen of Canterbury, is, if possible, to be shortly introduced to Parliament. It provides for the authorisation of additional services and revision of Rubrics. All such efforts justify the closer union of the Evangelicals which is now going on. Mr. Froude, in his History (Vol. vii. p. 79), says, in a remarkable passage, that the statesmen of Elizabeth so framed the Church formulas that they might be patient of a Catholic or Protestant interpretation. In many ways we are receiving in this age the fruits of grave mistakes in the past. The demand is growing stronger, therefore, for firm Scriptural principles, so that we may be prepared for the hour of rectification, or of overturning, which God's providence is hastening.

Mr. Punch did a very praiseworthy thing last week in printing a stirring poem, founded on Mr. J. W. C. Fegan's appeal for "A fortnight's holiday under canvas—by the seaside, if possible." We give some of the telling stanzas:—

Imagine the rapture
Of wrecks from the gutter and waifs from the slum,
When first on their ears falls the jubilant thrill
Of the sky-soaring lark, or the wild bee's low hum!

Imagine the pleasure of plunging at will
Into June's leafy copses of hazel and lime;
Of scudding through acres of grasses knee-high,
And of snuffing the fragrance of clover and thyme.

But what is all this to the dumb-stricken wonder,
Swift followed by outbursts of full-throated glee,
Which fancy can picture, when London's pale outcasts
From some grassy cliff catch first sight of the Sea!

Thalatta! Thalatta! There's many a lad
Who has never before had a glimpse of the wave;
For these are of those who, from London's dark wastes
'Tis the aim of their leaders to rescue and save.

"Nobody's Boys," the lost waifs of the City,
Foredoomed, but for aid, to debasement and crime;
Possible gallows-birds—they, with wan faces,
Late cleansed from the rookery's hideous grime,

Snatched from the gutter whilst boyhood bears hope
Gathered and tended with vigilant care. [with it,
Servant's of soul-thrift their volunteer champions!
Weeds of the slum, with fresh soil and sweet air,

Grow into grace and fair fruitage. These pariahs,
"Southwark Boys," strays from the slime-sodden east,
Fegan takes forth in gay troops to the meadows,
In freshness of nature to frolic and feast.

. . . .

Picture it! Fegan's pink pamphlet has pictured it.
Read it, all lovers of Nature and youth;
All who have care for the wrecks of humanity;
All who are moved by the spirit of ruth.

Ere Spring returns, far Canadian homesteads
Will house their contingents of "Nobody's Boys."
Let them take with them kind thoughts of Old England,
And memories sweet of its rare rural joys.

Good is the work, and the fruit of it excellent;
Giving poor wastrels a fair start in life,
Taste of true pleasure and wholesome enjoyment,
Aid in endeavour, and strength for the strife.

What better use for spare cash at this season?
Come, then, Punch readers, right willingly come!
Mr. Punch knows scarce a cause more deserving,
Or worthy of aid, than the Southwark Boys' Home!

"Mem.—Mr. J. W. C. Fegan, of the Boys' Home, Southwark, the writer of the pleasant pamphlet entitled, 'Camping Out,' makes appeal towards the expenses of giving 'a fortnight's holiday under canvas—by the sea, if possible'—to the waifs and strays in Mr. Fegan's Homes. To that gentleman, and NOT to Mr. Punch, subscriptions should be sent. Remittances may be made to him at the Boys' Home, 95, Southwark-street, London S.E."

An interesting paper on the subject of "The Needlework Guild" which has been contributed to the current number of The English Illustrated Magazine by the Duchess of Teck and by Lady Wolverton, gives an account of a very excellent association which is quietly doing good charitable work. The primary object is stated to be that of bringing waste and want to each other's relief. How far the result is attained may be gathered from the fact that during the past year the Guild distributed over 200,000 articles of good useful clothing to parishes, homes, hospitals, and missions in England. This association is a supplement to all other existing work, and the amount of time and material represented in the above figures really, as Lady Wolverton says, "represents the waste that was." What relief the Guild has been able to give becomes evident when we read that on one occasion during an epidemic at Birmingham 2000 articles were sent to the hospitals in a fortnight. We commend the paper to the attention of our readers, especially as it appears that there are six English counties still unrepresented in the Guild.

The Roman Catholic Bishop of Ardagh gave a confirmation address at Mohill last week, and the newspaper reports credit him with having said that he "would rather see a father and a mother offer their child to be burnt than hear that they had been in the habit of sending their children to Protestant schools"; for "it might in this world destroy their temporal life, but the gradual daily intercourse of a Protestant school was calculated to destroy their spiritual life." He is stated to have added that "to send their children to Protestant schools was as if they went to live in a place where the air was infected, and where, without knowing it, they might imbibe the seeds of death."

The annual Conference of the (Roman) Catholic Truth Society, recently held in Birmingham, may be taken as a somewhat remarkable one by reason of the tribute which was paid during one of its sittings to the value of the labours of the Salvation Army. The reader of the paper upon which the discussion was taken, did not fail to testify to the good done by the Army, though he laid great stress upon the fact that its preachers were "preachers without the charter of authority." Canon Brownlow, a speaker who followed, stated, in reply to a thesis that people must be civilised before you go street-preaching amongst them, "Bring a man to Christ, and civilisation must necessarily follow."

There are few things in the mission field so encouraging as the testimony borne by the native newspapers of Japan to the progress of Christianity in that country. The Hochi Shimbun, a leading journal, has recently stated that, although the number of converts is not very striking, the "foreign faith" is advancing steadily and never retrograding for a moment. That the remarkable paper concludes with an appeal to Buddhists to exert themselves in regard to their faith only adds to the value of the testimony.

One of the latest literary products of that misdirected intellectual activity which aims at supplementing, correcting, and supervising the old fundamental truths of the Bible, of Christ, and of his Apostles, so as to meet the requirements of "modern thought," may be seen in a book, entitled, "Essays towards a New Theology." Its author assails the revealed doctrine of the atonement and the substitutionary work of Christ; is not ashamed to confess that "the new criticism puts God farther off from the Bible;" pleads vigorously for the "larger hope" (which practically claims for believer and unbeliever alike a common salvation, irrespective of any change of heart); and maintains that the Bible writers were only inspired as all Christians are, and that their inspiration does not preserve them from errors or omissions. His bitterest invectives, however, are contained in his essay on "The Calvinistic Conceptions of Grace," in which he attacks (inter alia), the doctrines of saving faith and regeneration, and contends that Calvinism is routed along the whole line.

Upon this point it is sufficient to remark here that, in common with many other modern critics who think it sufficient to attach this label to any revealed doctrines which they may wish to disparage, the author bases his arguments upon unfair premises, and has not been careful to represent accurately the real nature and principles of the system which he assails. We are not concerned here to defend any merely human systems of theology: the best and most complete of them are still imperfect, leaving the inquirer at many points helpless, and they are apt to be stretched beyond their legitimate end.

We recently drew attention to Roman Catholic intrigues in Uganda. It now appears that the Jesuits have thrown the subtle glamour of their influence over some of the African travellers, for the Berlin correspondent of The Standard reports a conversation with Major Von Wissmann, in which the latter spoke very bitterly of the Protestant missionaries: and he is stated to have drawn an unfavourable comparison between their conduct and "the good works of the self-sacrificing and indefatigable Catholic missionaries, whose labours materially contributed to spread Christian influence, civilisation, and morality. The Catholic missionaries were real pillars of civilisation, whereas the Protestant missionaries actually threw obstacles in his way, so that the great sums spent on them were really thrown away." Another traveller, Lieutenant Tiedemann, is also loud in his praises of the Roman Catholic missionaries, especially of the "Apostolic Vicar" of Nyanza. The presence of one of Cardinal Lavigerie's priests with Emin Pasha's expedition to Victoria Nyanza has also a sinister significance.

Upon the above it may be remarked that all history shows only too clearly that whenever Romanism has gained the ascendency in any State or community, the result has invariably been, not progress, peace, and civilisation, but stagnation, disorder, and retrogression. Moreover, in view of the fact that many persons nowadays are ever eager to cast a stone at missionaries and their work, and of the strange tendency to praise Romanism at the expense of Protestantism, such unjust reflections and unwarranted assertions as the above are calculated to do great harm, and are emphatically to be deprecated. Over against such descriptions, however, may fairly be set the testimony of travellers such as Mr. Stanley and Professor Drummond, to the genuine, noble, and self-denying work done by Protestant missionaries.

THE THREE GARDENS.

BY REV. JAMES CULROSS, D.D.

THE GARDEN OF GETHSEMANE.

III.—The Meaning of the Agony.

Of one thing we are certain beforehand: Here are none of the elements that have often made death so terrible to men. Here is no back-look over a stained and guilty past, no sense of failure, no remorse, no mutiny against an irresistible and hated will, no dread of "wrath to come": it is "sorrow"—the sorrow of the Holy One of God.

He is looking forward to "the cross" in all the deep and dread meaning it had for Him. Viewed simply from the physical side, it was a ghastly and hideous thing. "The death of the cross" was one of the few kinds of death whose horror has not been exaggerated in the popular imagination. It was the most ignominious kind of death that was known; and it was at the same time the most dreadful to endure. In other kinds of violent death insensibility soon comes on, and the sense of pain ceases; whereas in crucifixion every moment is full of agony to the last—and the last comes with terrible slowness. Being found in fashion as a man, the shame and torture of the cross could not but be dreadful to our Saviour, possessing all the sensibilities of our nature, unblunted by sin. Yet when we have taken all this fully into account, we have not explained Gethsemane; we feel that we are yet but where the eight disciples were—outside and afar off from the centre of the mystery.

We advance a step farther, and say: Here is love's sorrow over the sins and woes of men. The loving Saviour does not lean down from his loftiness, secure in his own bliss; He does not exert his omnipotence to break our chains; He has come down, and entered into our humanity as the Brother born for adversity. And now "the crisis" of the world has come; and man's sin and woe must have stood out before Him with awful vividness. "Alienated from God"—men who play at living do not think of it, and, of those who do, imagination fails to grasp what this means—fails to sound the depth into which the race has fallen. The world's pride and glory cannot hide its shame. Take just a sample of what we find in it to-day, which may help to interpret to us what his eye beheld and his ear heard. There is falsehood. There is injustice. There is brutalism. There is envy, "eldest born of hell." There is avarice, with its sharp-sighted, keen-scented, "fox-faculty." There is lust, poisoning life, and bringing on shame whose only hiding-place is the grave. There is selfish power, trampling down the helpless without pity or remorse in marching to its goal. There is ambition, mad for glory or conquest, dashing armed hosts against each other, and leaving the ground soaked with blood. There is famine, with hollow cheeks and wolfish eyes. There are sufferers on beds of down, or writhing on straw, through nights that weep and wail, with no joy waiting for them in the morning. There are lost ones, to whom a plunge in the midnight river seems a welcome escape from the woe of living. There are homes whence love has vanished, with hate and murder lurking in the shadow—their hand holding the poison-cup or clutching the knife. There are women from whose faces all womanhood—mothers from whose hearts all motherhood—has faded out. There are children who never had a childhood, nor ever "sunned themselves at Being's portal"; and who are orphans both of the heavenly love and the earthly. There are young hearts dried and withered even like unto the grass. There is bitter and hopeless grief, envying Rachel her tears. There is remorse, with her whip of scorpions for the guilty conscience. There is fear looking forward tremblingly from its lurking-place to a future dark, fathomless, hopeless. And all through Sin. Such, in kind, was the vision that lay open in all its awfulness to the eye of God's Holy One. The Son of God, the Lover and Friend of man, is face to face with the Sin that wrought such woe; how it must have borne down upon his holy, loving heart!

We know how it is even among ourselves. One who has been nurtured amidst the unnumbered, sweet, and holy influences of a Christian home, and around whom great hopes have gathered, joins himself to vile companions; gives himself over to some course of evil living; casts off restraint; throws the reins upon the neck of his lusts; is deaf to remonstrance and appeal; finally brings himself to public disgrace and ignominy: who can measure the grief of his kindred? His sin wounds, pierces, agonises them in a manner and a measure which none can understand but those who have experienced something like it. But here is a ruined world. And here is One with a soul sensitive to evil as the eye is to touch, before whom the world's sin lies in fullest and distinctest view; in whose ear resounds the deep monotone of human woe. Here is One who knows what sin means, in all its actual or possible developments. He has a clear view of its hatefulness in its very nature, its unspeakable baseness and shame, its dread consequences; and unfalteringly He says Amen to the judgment of God upon it. Is it strange that on his holy and loving heart the burden of man should have borne down with intolerable pressure? How could He, without anguish, hear the awful wail that ladened all the winds of heaven—the misery that voiced itself in sighs, groans, shrieks, curses, tears of blood, or that sank helpless in the dust in dumb despair? Is even a Gethsemane strange in the presence of such woe?

To all this add (though we must speak with hesitance where the record says so little) the last fierce onset of hell. It is now "The Power of Darkness." All the might of the dark world is brought into the field. The temptation in the wilderness had been from the side of desire; all the kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them, had been offered Him for the bending of the knee; now, the tempter makes his assault from the side of fear; to overpower our Saviour's soul with dread and horror; to shake his filial trust; and if possible to arrest Him in his Saviour-course to Calvary.

But when all this has been fully taken into account, there still remains a mystery beyond. He is about to die for sinners, making vicarious atonement. The cross was no accident or contingent in his career, but the contemplated end of his appearing. He came into the world, not simply to reveal the Father, not simply to incarnate an ideal of human virtue, thereby "enriching the moral life of humanity," but to be a "propitiation"—to suffer, "the Just One for the unjust, that He might bring us to God." For this cause came He into the world. What is the significance of words like these: "He was wounded for our transgressions, and bruised for our iniquities"; "It pleased the Lord to bruise Him"; "He made his soul an offering for sin"; "God commendeth his love toward us, in that while we were yet sinners Christ died for us"; "God made Him who knew no sin to be sin for us, that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him"; "We have redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of sins"? Such words assuredly mean something: is it impossible to say what? We dare not evade their force, under the plea of not being in bondage to the letter. It is not the letter, but the sense, that is in question. According to the words, Christ's death, being at once a disclosure of Divine love and a guilt-offering, stands in direct relation to the soul's sins and wants and terrors; his blood (He Himself says so) was "shed for the remission of sins."* Hence the cross, as expression of pardoning love and righteousness, forms an appeal of the mightiest kind to the insensate conscience and the selfish heart of man, and is so used by the Holy Spirit. It is this magnanimity of suffering love that inspires the song, "Jesus, Lover of my soul," and that binds hearts to Him for ever in loving obedience. It is not as when one comes on some wild animal caught in a snare, and undoes the snare, and lets the panting, struggling thing return to its wild freedom again; but as if he tamed it and made it love him and become obedient to his will.

Now, Gethsemane is the prelude to Calvary, with its travail of soul, and cannot be dissociated from it in our thoughts. In Gethsemane the Father puts a "cup" into the Redeemer's hands to drain, and He accepts it as "the cup which my Father giveth Me to drink." Strictly speaking, the agony in the garden is not the drinking of the cup, but the yielding of consent to drink it, the yielding of the last consent. If one may so say, in the garden He takes the cup from his Father's hand and lifts it to his lips, from which it is not removed till He has drained the last dark drop. What ingredients were in it none can tell, save He who drank it.

On the great and mysterious subject of which this is a branch—while much is clear—God has chosen to leave somewhat unrevealed, which in our present condition we are probably incapable of comprehending. This need be no surprise. If we could comprehend all the mysteries of redemption, we should be equal to God. One thing we must never forget—or be too proud to own: our knowledge must always be partial in this life; while we wait in hope for that Hereafter when the curtains of the universe shall be drawn up, and we shall look forth upon the things of God, on all sides, as they lie disclosed and illumined in the sunlight of eternity.†

* The Revised Version puts it still more strongly, "unto remission of sins."

† If anyone would see how utterly shallow an accomplished and brilliant man may become, let him read what Renan says about Gethsemane. He admits the fact of the agony, and suggests, by way of accounting for it, that Jesus might be thinking "of the clear fountains of Galilee, where He might have refreshed Himself, the vineyard and fig tree under which He might have been seated"—and so forth.

TENT.—Dr. Henry Grattan Guinness, Harley House, Bow, E., has a tent to accommodate 400 persons, which, with three evangelistic students, is ready for use during the vacation. The expenses would be the carriage of tent, railway fares, and accommodation of the students. Anything beyond this optional.

An Appeal.

TO ALL PROTESTANT CHURCHES OF CHRISTIAN LANDS.

DEAR BRETHREN IN CHRIST,—We, the General Conference of Protestant Missionaries in China, having just made a special appeal to you for a largely increased force of ordained missionaries to preach the Gospel throughout the length and breadth of this great land—to plant churches, to educate native ministers and helpers, to create a Christian literature, and in general to engage in and direct the supreme work of Christian evangelisation; and having also just made a special appeal to you for a largely increased force of unordained men, evangelists, teachers, and physicians, to travel far and wide distributing books and preaching to the masses, to lend a strong helping hand in the great work of Christian education, and to exhibit to China the benevolent side of Christianity in the work of healing the sick: Therefore, we do now appeal to you, the Protestant Churches of Christian lands, to send to China in response to these calls

ONE THOUSAND MEN WITHIN FIVE YEARS FROM THIS TIME.

We make this appeal in behalf of three hundred millions of unevangelised heathen; we make it with all the earnestness of our whole hearts, as men overwhelmed with the magnitude and responsibility of the work before us; we make it with unwavering faith in the power of a risen Saviour to call men into his vineyard, and to open the hearts of those who are his stewards to send out and support them, and we shall not cease to cry mightily to Him that He will do this thing, and that our eyes may see it.

On behalf of the Conference,

Shanghai, May, 1890.

An appeal from more than two hundred ladies, members of the Missionary Conference held in Shanghai has been addressed to the Christian women of the British Empire, the United States, Germany, and all other Protestant countries, in which they state:—

The work of women in China has been prosecuted at the oldest stations for about fifty years, at first chiefly by the wives of missionaries, but in later years single ladies have largely augmented this working force. There are now ladies engaged in educational, medical, and evangelistic work in China. Much has been done by them, many lives have been uplifted from the degradation of idolatry and sin, many sad hearts comforted, many darkened minds enlightened, and much solid good effected. But our hearts are burdened to-day with love and pity for the millions of women around us, our sisters for whom Christ died, still unreached by the sound of the Gospel. If you could see their sordid misery, their hopeless, loveless lives, their ignorance and sinfulness, as we see them, mere human pity would move you to do something for their uplifting. But there is a stronger motive that should impel you to stretch out a helping hand, and that we plead—the constraining love of Christ. We who are in the midst of this darkness that can be felt, send our voices across the ocean to you, our sisters, and beseech you by the grace of Christ our Saviour that you come at once to our help.

Open doors are all around us, and though idolatry lifts a hoary head, and ancestral worship binds the people as with chains of adamant, yet with God "All things are possible," and mountains of difficulty melt like snowflakes before the rising of the Sun of Righteousness.

God is on the side of his own glorious life-giving Word; we ask you to come in the power of consecration and faith, with sober expectations and readiness to endure hardness as good soldiers of Jesus, and take your share in the most glorious war that was ever waged on earth—the war against the powers of darkness and sin, assured that God will accomplish his own purposes of love and grace to China, and will permit you, if you listen to this call, to be his fellow workers in "binding up the broken hearted, proclaiming liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound."

For the Young.

LITTLE THANKAM.*

DID you ever see an idol temple, and a great many people boiling rice for the god? This is just what we see every day in Ceylon. Across the road from our home in Manepy stands a large idol temple, dedicated to the god Pulliar. This god has the head of an elephant. He is called the god of wisdom; and when heathen mothers take their children to school, they always bring them first to an image of this elephant god, that he may give wisdom to the child, and make it a good scholar. It is the first god that a great many children are taught to worship. What a pity that they do not know of Jesus, the Friend of little children.

In this temple there is a man called a Pandahdam, whose business is to bathe the stone and brass images with milk, cocoanut water, and perfumes daily. He also receives offerings presented to the god. This man has one little daughter, and it is of her I want to tell you. Her name is Thankam Mutthu, or Thankam, for short. The meaning of the name is Gold-pearl, and the child deserves the name; for she is the head scholar among sixty girls in our station girls' day-school. Since she began to come to school, she has regularly attended the Sunday-school, and learned many Christian hymns and Bible verses. When she first came to school she used to have some sacred ashes, the marks of the heathen god, rubbed on her forehead; but she left that off after a time, and she studied the Bible so well that she could repeat the whole of Matthew without prompting.

Thankam's Sunday-school teacher, a very lovely native Christian woman, took a great interest in the little girl. Thankam would steal into her house sometimes and beg her to pray with her and teach her how to serve Jesus. She feared to let her father and mother know of her visits. They wanted that she should learn to read, but they did not want her to become a Christian. They despise the Christians, and consider them polluted, because they partake of the Lord's Supper with the low-caste people who have joined the church. They were so very particular that, when Thankam came home from school, both at noon and at night, they would not let her come into the house till she had bathed her whole body at the well. They were afraid she might have touched a low-caste or a Christian child during the day, and s would defile the house.

As Thankam was on her way to school on morning, she called to see her Sunday-scho teacher. While she was there she said, " have found a beautiful verse; it says: 'Whe my father and my mother forsake me, then th Lord will take me up.' That means me doesn't it?"

Poor child! she did not know how soon he courage would be put to the test. Her father ha seen her go into a Christian house. He hurrie to the gate, and called out loudly and angrily "Thankam, Thankam, come to me." Thankam looked, and saw him cutting a long switch from the hedge. He seemed to be in a terrible passion, and was uttering the worst kinds o threats and abuse.

The poor frightened child clung to her teacher and the teacher went out and begged that he would not whip the child; but it did no good He grew more and more angry every moment, and nothing would soothe him. He dragged the child into the road, and there he whipped her very cruelly. The women and children standing near could not help weeping as they say him; they all felt very sad, as the little girl went slowly away, and they knew not what would become of her.

For a whole long month Thankam's father and mother kept her shut up in the house, and no Christian was allowed to see her or speak to her. How I wearied to see the dear little face. But it was of no use; to try to see her would only have made her parents angry and made Thankam suffer more. Some other Sunday-school teacher, who loved her, and the Christian girls in the day-school, told Jesus all about it, and asked Him to help her. We knew that He could and would.

After a time the father and mother said they would let her come back to school if she would rub ashes and promise not to be a Christian; but Jesus must have helped her for she would not promise. She cried so much that at last her father and mother relented and said: "Why should we make our only daughter miserable?" So they allowed her to return without making any conditions.

You would hardly have known her when she came, she looked half starved and so sad; but, as soon as she found herself among us, you ought to have seen her face shine with joy! From that time blessings seem to have followed the brave little girl, and she has now become a pupil teacher in the station school. Will you not pray for the child who begged so hard to come to us, and for the father and mother who are serving Satan so blindly?

However, it remains doubtful whether such a measure would be in accordance with religious liberty, and whether it would therefore be desirable in the long run, though practical at present."

MILDMAY PARK CONFERENCE.

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, JUNE 27.

Communion Address.

BY REV. A. A. BONAR, D.D.

PEOPLE have different ways of telling about the time when the Lord brought them to Himself. A friend, now in glory, used to speak of the day and the hour of his conversion in this manner: "That hour when I first felt the power of the atoning blood was the beginning of my spiritual life." Paul, I notice, has another way of expressing it. He says to the Galatians, "When it pleased God to reveal his Son in me." There is a comprehensive view of the change that took place in the heart of Paul when he was Saul of Tarsus. Now we understand that no one comes forward to the Lord's table at this time who is not able to say something like that: "It has pleased God to reveal his Son in me; we have seen the Lord and He is everything to us now." This is a table for those who have seen the Lord; it is not a place where anyone is to expect to get his eyes opened for the first time. The feast is for those whose eyes have been already opened. We come to get eye-salve to anoint our eyes with, that we may see further and deeper into the riches of his grace and love.

Understanding it thus, you will follow me for a few minutes as I look at some passages from God's Word regarding what it pleased God to do in regard to the Saviour. "It pleased the Father that in Him should all fulness dwell" (Col. i. 19). Again, "Yet it pleased the Lord to bruise Him; He hath put Him to grief" (Isa. liii. 10). Then think upon the wonderful words that came from the Father to Christ, and to those around: for, by comparing the two Gospels, we find the words must have been uttered twice. One voice said to Christ himself, "Thou art my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased" (Matt. iii. 17): and the voice said again, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased," spoken to all around.

Think for a moment of the first of these passages: "It pleased the Father that in Him should all fulness dwell." I am not going to make any remark in the way of criticism, for the sense comes to be the same whatever change you may make in the mode of expression. It comes to this: It was the Father who was pleased that all fulness should dwell in the Word made flesh. For a little after He says to us that "in Him bodily," or, in his body, his real humanity, all fulness dwelt. Muse upon it for a moment. Look at Jesus, the incarnate God; look at that temple of the Holy Ghost; never was a temple like this temple.

"All fulness" of what? Fulness of the Godhead. In this you will find a most amazing mystery. God makes his abode therein. "The fulness of the Godhead"—every attribute of God is manifested in Him. Every wondrous perfection of God was to be found taking up its abode in that humanity. What a wonder is this; dwell upon it. Heaven looked down to our world to see the perfections of God. Angels looked down to our world that through the humanity of Christ they might better understand the Divine attributes and perfections. This being so you can see what a storehouse of blessing is the humanity of Christ. He was "full of grace and truth." Look well at Him before we take another step. "In Him dwelt all the fulness of the Godhead bodily."

What do we find in the second text? "Yet it pleased the Lord to bruise Him"—to bruise that wondrous One. Think of the love the Father bore to Him; and then think what this means—to bruise Him; to put Him to grief. When a man belongs to God it would appear to be the teaching of the Word that He takes care of that person, so that he should not even kick his foot against a stone. When Moses was spoken against by Miriam and Aaron God said: "Were you not afraid to speak against my servant Moses, with whom I have communications face to face?" Here is the Temple of God in perfection, and yet the Lord bruises Him. The first intimation of redemption you find given in connection with this word "to bruise," telling that the seed of the woman should bruise the serpent's head, though Satan was to bruise his heel. And Satan did bruise Him whom the Father delighted to honour. You know how Satan sought to bruise Him, and to stir up men to bruise Him so that they nailed Him to the cross. It was sore bruising, though it was only the bruising of his heel. But when the Father rose up to bruise Him, that was another matter. The Father bruised the soul of his Beloved Son. The LORD laid upon Him the penalty due to all in whose name Christ was acting. The Father had said to Him: "There is a company I have given Thee, and Thou art to redeem them." He said: "Lo, I come." Now He is there, bearing the tremendous load of imputed guilt belonging to that great multitude that no man can number, out of every kindred and tongue and people and nation. The load of our iniquity being laid on Him, the Father smote Him and put Him to grief. What that implies no one knows—no one can even fancy. Do you think you can understand that awful cry, "My God, my God! Why hast Thou forsaken Me?" He was bruised for our iniquities. He was wounded for our transgressions. Thus you see the price at which we were bought. Put the two texts together, and you will find there are unfathomable wonders in this matter of our redemption by the Great Substitute who took our place—the incarnate Son of God.

We pass on a step, and we come to see this same truth with some of its blessed results. There is a hymn—I do not know if you ever sing it here, but it used to be sung in old times:—

All ye that pass by,
To Jesus draw nigh,
To you is it nothing that Jesus should die?
Your ransom and peace,
Your surety He is;
Come, see if there ever was sorrow like his.

He died to atone
For sins not his own;
The Father hath punished for you his dear Son;
The Lord, in the day
Of his anger, did lay
Your sins on the Lamb, and He bore them away.

At every step of the work the Father was looking down well pleased. And when that day the voice broke the silence of Heaven, and spoke in the ear of the Saviour, saying: "Thou art my beloved Son; in Thee I am well pleased," you may suppose something of the Saviour's rapture. When you think of the words spoken, not once only, but oftener, you will observe that the beloved Son proclaims the Father's unchanging love to Him all the time when He was pleased to bruise Him.

Think of the words, "In whom I am well pleased." They say to you and me that in Him the Father always sees what pleases Him, in regard to the sinner who takes his place by the Saviour's side. If you take this place, the Father looks down on you with the same well pleasedness that He felt toward the Son, when he accomplished that amazing work of redemption, and you share in it. Sitting at the table, the Father will look down when you take the bread and wine. You look up to Him and remind Him that they speak of how the beloved Son wrought redemption; the Father will look down with infinite delight upon you.

Then may we not say this to ourselves: "The Father is well pleased with me because I have taken up my abode in Christ; I belong to Him; then I shall have my share of all that belongs to us in Christ mediatorially." Out of that fulness, of which we were speaking at the beginning, may we all receive, and grace for grace, one measure of grace after another. It is sanctification, and not justification only. In coming to such a Saviour as ours, and to such an ordinance as the Lord's Supper, you are seeking, not only a new sense of acceptance, but you are seeking a new measure of grace to be communicated to you out of that fulness. Every time you look at this Saviour, another measure of grace is coming forth to you; and you become holier just in proportion to the frequency and the constancy with which you are ever dealing with Christ. You will never be sanctified away from his cross, or apart from fellowship with Him. He gave Himself, and when we take this bread and wine, we are claiming Christ as ours; and in so doing the Father is well pleased with us; and the Holy Spirit, who came down on Christ that day when first the words, "In whom I am well pleased," were uttered, may be expected to come down upon us. There will be new spiritual life communicated out of the fulness of Him in whom all fulness dwells.

AFTER THE SUPPER,

Dr. BONAR said: Beloved friends, you have shown the Lord's death "till He come." You have been saying what some one sings:—

Upon a life I did not live,
Upon a death I did not die,
Another's life, Another's death,
I stake my whole eternity.

Christ is everything to you. Will you now, as you rise from the table, remember what the Master said? It is very significant. We cannot give you any right illustration of its meaning, but the Master said: "Blessed are those servants whom the Lord when He cometh shall find watching. Verily, I say unto you, that He shall gird Himself and make them to sit down to meat, and will come forth to serve them. And if He shall come in the second watch or the third watch, and find them so, blessed are those servants." Will you be men who really are expecting the coming of the Lord? At a communion season can you help thinking of the day when that shall be fulfilled which He spoke to his disciples on the first communion occasion: "That ye might eat and drink at My table in My kingdom." I do not know what that table in the kingdom is; but if the table on earth is something that is so satisfying, what will that table in the kingdom be? A very simple and earnest Christian woman in my congregation at our last communion, speaking about this very matter said: "Oh, if the table on earth be so grand, the table in the kingdom will be terribly grand." She could not get a word to express her meaning. I do not know what He meant by it; but it is especially for those who are watching. All who are his will go in with Him to the kingdom; but there is a special blessing for those whom He shall find not sleeping but watching: "Verily He shall gird Himself, and make them to sit down to meat, and will come forth and serve them." Some wondrous revelation of condescending love will welcome us that day when He takes us into his kingdom, and sits down at the table that He has spread. He holds out to us the prospect of something that is very precious and very wonderful. Let us be found watching.

FRIDAY EVENING.

"What saith my Lord unto his servant?"

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

Having read Josh. v. 13-15, and briefly described the meeting of Israel's leader with the "Captain of the Lord's host," the speaker proceeded:—

I do not know what your Jericho may be. I am quite sure you have thought of it during the past three days. You would like to stay here beneath these holy and helpful associations, but you must go back to fight the battle of life. Right before you, in the very path you must tread, there stands your Jericho. It may be some whom you are obliged to live with, and whose temper tries you; it may be some class of unruly boys or girls; it may be some squalid district or parish; it may be some great and crowning bastion of the devil's castle. I want you to take this thought home—that there is never a Jericho without a man with a drawn sword beside it, but everyone does not lift up his eyes to see him. Joshua's heart was bold and confident in God, and, therefore, approaching this mysterious being he challenged him, and immediately there came an answer which revealed that in addition to the host of Israel that lay beneath, and the host of Canaan that lay entrenched in front, there was the third host, whose serried ranks were covering all the country round, unseen by mortal eye, but present.

There is no doubt as to who this wondrous being was. He was not man nor angel; for had he been either he would have refused the homage that Joshua gave. Paul forbade the Lystrians to worship him. The angels in the Apocalypse forbade the Apostle to worship him; but He who stood there thought it not robbery to be equal with God, for He was God; He was the Commander of the host of God.

I want for a moment to take that word archegos, and to follow it especially in the New Testament. Isaiah tells us that He was to be a Prince, and a Prince of peace. Daniel tells us He was to be Messiah; but when we come to Heb. ii. 10 we learn something more about Him. In Heb. ii. 10 we read: "For it became Him, for whom are all things, and by whom are all things, in bringing many sons unto glory, to make the Captain of their salvation perfect through sufferings." When we ask what that lesson was which this mysterious Captain learned from the day of his incarnation, we turn to Heb. v. 8, and are there told that, "though He was a son, yet learned He obedience by the things that He suffered." So that before He became our Captain and Commander

HE LEARNED TO OBEY.

The one keynote of his life was that He came to keep the commandments of his Father. His biography has on the title-page the text, "Lo, I come to do thy will, O my God," and at the finis the words, "He became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross." It is because He was a man under authority that He is able to say to his servants, Do this.

Again, in Heb. xii. 2, we are told to look away to Jesus, the Author, the Prince, or Captain of our faith, for the word does not mean that He creates faith, but that He Himself is the leader of all faithful hearts. We learn from this that, as our Captain, He has trodden our world, and has shown his brotherhood, not simply by his tears, his hunger, his thirst, his death; He lived a human life by trust in God, even as his brethren do.

In the same verse we learn that our Captain was put under great stress of sorrow, but that He "endured" the cross, stood steadfast beneath it. It is a great comfort to a soldier to know that his captain has been under fire. When we look at what our Captain asks of us, it is an infinite comfort to know that He Himself for three years, yes, for thirty-three years, of human life, anticipated the cross, the shadow of which fell upon his soul; He endured it, and despised its shame. A man travelling in Switzerland sees and admires the lowland hills, in the early part of the morning of his first day's sojourn; but he will think little of them when, presently, the wind sweeps away the hanging mist and shows the mystery of the Alps behind. So did Christ despise the shame as He beheld the glory that beckoned Him on.

Once more, in Acts v. 31 (following the lead of the same word), we are told that "God exalted Him to be a Prince and a Saviour." Stand with me for a moment on the dew-besprinkled sward of Olivet in the early morning, and see Him, as, with outstretched hands, He blesses his waiting disciples. He begins to ascend. You cannot see it, but the right hand of the Father there is raising Him to the seat awaiting Him. Estimate, if you can, the contrast. Here neglect; there welcome. Here fisherfolk and peasants; there the innumerable company of angels. Here the whispered farewell; there the multitudinous welcome. Behold Him as He passes up and on, past all orders of created beings, and carries our nature where no created thing had ever gone before, to the very throne of the Eternal. "God hath exalted Him to be a Prince," and so we worship Him.

The mistake of countless Christians is that they reverse God's order, and omit one of our Lord's characters. They like to take Him as Saviour now, but He is only to be Prince some day. God has put the infallible order—first Prince, then Saviour. Enthrone Him in your hearts that ye may know how mightily He will save you from the power of sin.

Here, to-night, with our Jericho in sight, the Captain of the Lord's host is present. What is to be our attitude to Him? First of all there is humility; for

JOSHUA FELL ON HIS FACE.

The man who to-morrow is to lead the assault against Jericho, in this moment of privacy is in the dust. You will never be able to stand in the breach or lead the Lord's hosts unless you have your time when you too fall upon your face. Dread the holiness which is not married to humility. The man who knows most of God thinks least of himself. You may gauge the depth and intensity of a man's spirituality by the lowliness with which he prostrates himself before God. Search your heart and see whether you are getting the holiness which makes you proud, and able to lift up your head; or whether you are getting the holiness such as made Job and Isaiah say they were unclean; that made Peter, as he caught a glimpse of the purity of Christ, ask Him to depart from him, as he was a sinful man; that made John in Patmos fall at the Master's feet as dead. I doubt if you have ever caught a glimpse of Jesus Christ in all the purity and majesty of his character, if you have not learned what it is to fall on your face before Him.

Secondly, there was worship; for Joshua worshipped. When he asked, "What saith my Lord unto his servant?" the reply was that he was to take off his shoes from off his feet; being to an Oriental the symbol of even deeper worship than before. In worship a man has reached the attitude in which he can learn God's deepest lessons.

DO WE WORSHIP ENOUGH?

Worship is that state in which we do not necessarily pray, or confess sin, but in which the whole being lies emptied in adoration at the feet of God. Oh, for more of the spirit of worship ere we go to do God's errands!

My third and main point is obedience. "What saith my Lord unto his servant." Every Christian is chosen to be a soldier. We must never forget how blessed it is to be a Christian; but we must also never forget that the first step will involve a life of fighting; and, as soon as the new life is born, it resembles the spawn of the salmon, which has to fight against hundreds of foes in its passage to the sea. Directly you have lost your burden at the foot of the cross, you must go into the house Beautiful, and be armed for the fight. The prime requisite of a soldier is obedience. You may say it is strength, or courage; but strength or courage will not avail unless there is the habit of obedience. Have you learned to obey? Do you not think that some of us must give Christ much trouble? How can He get his work done when we have so many fads, and notions, and ideas of our own, each liking to do Christ's will after his own fashion? Oh, that we all might learn to do as He tells us, and that to-night we should look up into the face of Christ, and say: "What saith my Lord unto his servant?"

Does He not deserve obedience? By his bloody sweat, his cross and passion, He has surely purchased us, that we should be his slaves and do his will. We have chosen Him to be our Captain; ought we not to give Him our hearts' allegiance? Have we ever gone through his Word and counted up his commandments to see if our life tallies with them? There must come almost inevitably in the life of every true Christian a moment—it may be the moment of conversion, or it may be some subsequent moment—when the Christian heart elects to obey Christ, come what may. Many Christians live in a kind of hazy state. They pick and choose what they will do and what they will not do. This is borne in upon them, and they do it; that other is not borne in upon them, and they leave it alone. The Christian Church is in the drifting state in which people please themselves as to

HOW MUCH AND HOW FAR THEY WILL OBEY.

There must come a time in your history when that indecision shall come to an end for ever, and when you shall quietly kneel down before your Captain who stands before you, and choose from the depth of your being that you will obey Him in everything. Have you done it? I charge you to do it now, in the silence of your own soul. Prostrate yourselves before the Christ of God, and say, "My Captain, I definitely in thy strength choose to obey Thee utterly, entirely, and for ever." Instantly Christ will put into your life a little test as small as that which he put into the life of Joshua. Joshua is on his face; He will do anything—everything the Master bids him do. It is only one little thing, in that sublime moment when a very ocean of mystery and wonder was pouring its tides through his heart. "Loose thy shoe from off thy foot." "Is that all?" Joshua might have said; "have you not some command worthy of this great occasion? Is there not something more for me to do? Some city to take, some battle to fight, some warrior to overthrow? Only this!" And the Master seemed to say, "I only ask this of you; if you will not do so small a thing for me, of what worth is your pleading? Do this. He that is faithful in a little shall be faithful in a great deal, and Jericho shall fall before you."

"Loose." Do you hear his voice? Loose that practice in your business which your conscience condemns. Loose that unhallowed friendship which is damning your better life. Loose that practice of secret sin. Will you? Dare you? If you will not, the teachings of this Conference will be lost upon you; but if you dare to do that, words will fail to tell what blessings will come into your soul.

Beware of one thing, in all this dealing. The Christian's conscience is the great test; and we must exercise ourselves to have that conscience void of offence. Be very careful that you distinguish between the VARIOUS SORTS OF CONSCIENCE.

For instance, there is the unenlightened conscience, which is a hindrance to many. The only way to deal with a conscience like hat is to bring it in contact with God's ruth and God's Spirit. There is also the crupulous conscience, which is always consider- ng how to commend itself to Christ, instead of elieving that it is accepted in his love, and hat He will indicate clearly what He desires o be altered. Seek the good conscience en- ightened by the truth; filled with the Spirit; vashed in the blood; accustomed to exercise tself in daily discipline, and so to live that here be nothing between your King and your- elf but what is instantly translated into obedi- ence. When that is so, Jericho will fall.

This man who took the shoes from off his eet went back to the host of Israel. Pre- ently, at the bidding of God, he led them gainst the walls of Jericho. They marched o that mighty rampart, which fell beneath he charge of their invincible allies. Then Canaan, the sweet, bright land of promise, was open. Do you want that land of promise, f rest, of victory, and holy ecstasy, where the oul is satisfied; where it sits beneath the hadow of the vine and fig tree; and where one dares to make it afraid? Are you weary f the wilderness? and longing for the land of lessed rest? Then, once more I say, wait n the hush of your spirit at the feet of Jesus ntil He tells you what He will have you to do. Do not try to invent something. Do not get lurried or nervous, or full of wonderment and erplexity. Be quite still, and there will be orne in upon your soul the command which, when obeyed, will open your way into exceed- ng blessedness.

The Blessings that follow Obedience.

BY REV. E. W. MOORE.

I HAVE been asked to say a few words upon he blessings which follow obedience to ur Witness, our Leader, and our Commander. do not know that those wondrous blessings ould be better summed up in one word than in he familiar one which you will find in Matt. i. 29, "Take my yoke upon you, and learn of ne; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye hall find rest unto your souls." It sounds like message from the skies. Is rest possible in his distracted, sin-stricken, and sorrowful orld? It is for rest that all men are toiling, owever unconscious to themselves the object f their search may be. The worldling seeks it n the haunts of pleasure; the business man eeks it in the crowded mart; the student seeks in the long hours of weary study; the states- an seeks it in the halls and counsels of the ation. They may call it pleasure, or learning, r gain, or wealth, but what they seek is rest. hey want something that shall still their raving, that shall quiet the unspeakable ongings of the human heart.

Sceptics have been so bold as to affirm that ur Lord, during his ministry upon earth, never laimed for Himself absolute Deity. I would e content to rebut the charge by pointing to hat word alone where, above the hubbub of arth's voices, standing amidst the surging rowds of humanity, the Prince of Peace, the ord of Life, stretched out his hand and said in ords that come as fresh to us to-day, across he ocean of centuries, as on the day when they ere first uttered: "Come unto Me, all ye that abour and are heavy laden, and I will give you est." What sane man, it has been well asked, owever gifted, however powerful, would dare o stand before his fellow-men and make them he offer of such a gift? I say, the fact that hrist, the Son of Man, offers to fulfil this deep, eep need of humanity, would be of itself proof nough that He claims to be God. And when Ie fulfils in our own bosoms the promise which Ie makes, then we have proof, which no sceptic an gainsay, that He is what He professes to be; that He is God of God, Light of light, very God of very God. Look with me at

THIS WONDERFUL PROMISE OF REST.

What did our Lord mean when He offered rest to the heavy laden ones around Him? Did He mean only a release from the yoke, cruel as it was, of ceremonial burden? No doubt that was present to the minds of his hearers in a degree, and with a force with which it cannot be present to our minds, because, as we read in Acts, Peter expressly refers to that yoke of Jewish custom and the like, "which neither our fathers nor we were able to bear." Christ did relieve them from all that cumber- some tradition with which religion was fettered, but it would be a poor rest indeed which Christ bestows were He to limit it to this. In the days in which we live we see men returning to the darkness out of which the Light of the world has brought them. Was it from temporal oppression that Christ promised to release them? Was it from the iron yoke of the Roman that pressed so hardly upon the nation at the time in which He lived? They thought so: "We trusted that it had been He which should have redeemed Israel." They looked for temporal release, but the day had not yet come, and has not come now, when the king- doms of this world shall become the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ; though we hope and believe it is very near. But there are still breaches to be carried; wrongs to be righted; difficulties to be met with which must wait until the Master comes. It is by faith and patience we inherit the promises.

The next step in the rest which Christ promises to weary hearts is a rest from the guilt and burden of sin, from that iron yoke far more terrible than any which a Roman emperor could impose upon an enslaved people. It is a rest from that curse of the law under which men are born, and which Christ can deliver from.

Jesus, I rest in Thee,
In Thee myself I hide;
Weary with sin and misery
Where can I rest beside,
'Tis on thy meek and lowly breast
My wearied soul alone can rest.

Yes, there is rest from the penalty of sin through the blood of the Lamb that was slain. This is a blessed aspect of rest, but it is not the only or chief one. It is probably the chief aspect in ver. 28; but in ver. 29 you observe that there is an advance in the thought of the Master. In fact this passage furnishes one more illustration of the truth of the great difference between the works and the word of God and the works and the word of man. If you take, for instance, a needle (which is, I suppose, as finished a specimen of human workmanship as can be found) and subject it to the power of the microscope, at once you discover unevennesses and irregularities of the existence of which before you were unconscious. Take, at the same time, a blade of grass, one of the simplest and humblest of the works of God; subject it to the same magnifying power, and lo! beauties which before were hidden from your sight are disclosed. As you look at it, though it be but a blade of grass, you say: "How wonderful God is."

So it is with his Word. We come to man's words and we gain much from them, but after a while we feel that we have had enough, and we get tired of them. We have read them through again and again, and drawn all the strength that they contain. It is not so with the Word of God; we come to it again and again, and every time we come, if our eyes are enlightened by the Holy Ghost, we see some fresh thought in it, and derive some fresh sus- tenance. It is a well of perennial freshness which never runs dry. Dr. Kennicott, after spending years in collecting ancient manu- scripts for his Hebrew Bible, wearied with his task, proposed to take a drive. He asked his wife to take a book so that they might read upon their journey. She asked, "What book shall I take?" and he paused a moment and said, "Let us begin with the Bible." It is he who knows the most Scripture that is precisely the man who is conscious that he knows the least. The more we know of this book, the less we find we know. Oh! that we may have our eyes opened to see the

WONDROUS THINGS CONTAINED IN GOD'S LAW.

It is said that in the Green Room of the Saxon princes in Dresden, where the treasures and gems of the Saxon sovereigns have been treasured and stored for years, there is shown to visitors a silver egg; you touch a spring in it and it opens and discloses a yolk. You examine the golden yolk, and as you do so you set loose another spring so that a chicken appears. You press the wing of the chicken and it opens, and reveals a magnificent crown; while you are admiring the crown you inadvertently touch another spring, and in the midst of the crown there is a wonderful and magnificent diamond. There would seem to be no end to its treasures. It is even so with Jesus and the word of Jesus. His riches are unsearchable, and the more we look into them the more we shall find that there is in Him everything that can meet our need, and everything which can call forth our adoring praise and love.

This verse in some measure illustrates these truths. We have here

A REST WITHIN A REST.

We have in ver. 28 the rest for the comer, but we have in ver. 29 the rest for the learner. You observe in ver. 29 the rest that is spoken of is suspended upon obedience. We are to consider the figure of the yoke, which suggests the idea of burden. If the rest here described be the rest of obedience, it would never be suspended upon obedience; otherwise grace were no more grace. We are pardoned freely in Christ Jesus, through his redemption. But we have within our souls the precious rest and jewel of obedience. The Lord says: "You have come to Me, now learn of Me; take my yoke upon you."

What are we to understand by this figure of the yoke? It was a very common one in the days of the Jews. I cannot say whether the first thought I am about to mention was ac- tually present in the form in which I am going to use it in the mind of our Lord, but the spirit of the thought was certainly there. The first thought suggested by the figure of the yoke is submission. We know the Romans had a custom when they conquered a nation and reduced it to servitude, to set up a rude yoke formed of two spears as uprights, put a third across, and they compelled the conquered race to pass under the yoke in token of submission.

We have to remember that the whole secret of our progress in Divine life depends upon living under the Holy Ghost. Just as our justification depends upon our submitting to the righteousness of God, so our sanctification depends upon our daily submission to the will of God in little things and great. We are never to forget that if we are Christ's He has conquered us; we are his slaves; we are bound by love to his chariot wheels; we have no longer any right to ourselves, to our lives, to our reputations, to our interests, to anything we have; we have given ourselves away, and He has purchased us by the indefeasible title of his blood. Submission rings through the sacramental host of God. Let every man who names the name of Christ submit to his authority.

Oh! the rest when the covenant is upon his shoulder; when you have taken the responsi- bility of your life and placed it in his hands; when you have learned that you are his sheep and not the shepherd; that you are a very silly, foolish sheep into the bargain; that all you have to do is to keep close to Him who has under- taken to care for you; that all his love and power and wisdom are engaged upon your behalf, and that nothing can hurt you while you are following Him. "Goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life." Yes, as long as I follow the Shepherd; but if I run after goodness and mercy, they will run away from me.

DISCIPLESHIP AND SERVICE.

Then there is another thing. The Lord goes on to say, "Learn of me." There is the rest of discipleship. We want all to be learners, we are very ignorant. There are so many vexed problems, so many intricate questions; how you want to get them all solved and square them all up, and how difficult you find it to do it. Let us have the rest of discipleship. A low place is the disciple's place, to sit at Jesus' feet and hear his word. It is not that of the critic of the Church; it is the low-placed pupil at the feet of the Master. Oh, to come down low enough! What does He say? "I am meek and lowly in heart." That is the heart we want. Lord, break the pride out of it; break the idols out of it, and make us meek and lowly in heart. You will never get your heart lowly unless it be in union with the lowly One.

The next rest here is the rest of service. You see the figure of the patient ox toiling under the yoke. The ox everywhere in Scripture brings out the idea either of service or sacrifice. You recollect the old device of the ox standing between the plough and the altar, and the line underneath: "Ready for either." That is the true position of the servant; but here is the rest of service. The Lord Jesus Christ came not to do his own will, but the will of Him that sent Him. He led the life of dependence. "I am among you as one that serveth." He says: "The Son can do nothing but what He seeth the Father do, and those things that the Father doth the Son doeth likewise." Our Lord teaches us that if we would do service, our success must depend upon our entering into God's plan. We have often asked God to bless our plan, but it was not his plan, and therefore our plan was not blessed. What we have to learn is to have no plan except to enter into God's plan.

There is a verse in Ephesians ii. which lays bare the secret of service: "Created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before prepared that we should walk in them." What comfort there is in that verse! There is a path of service for you and me already prepared. You have not to make it or carve it out; what you have to do is to be willing to be led into it. That is the point. If you are willing to be led into it, God will do the best He can for you and with you.

There is a wonderful sermon by an American, the name of the writer of which I forget, but the title of which is,

"EVERY MAN'S LIFE A PLAN OF GOD."

I believe that it is so from my heart. We are not all turned out, as Pastor Monod said, like eggs in a basket; we have each our separate individuality and path of life, and success depends upon our being led into it by the Divine hand. If we will not yield ourselves to God in this matter, if we will not be an instrument in his hands, then God cannot do his best with us, He must do his second best. We shall suffer loss. "We shall be saved, yet so as by fire." Our work will be burnt up. What a terrible thing for your life-work to be lost; that it should turn out to be combustible; a life that has been a failure because you are not willing to be led by the hand of God.

There is one other thought suggested by the Holy Ghost, it is that of fellowship. A yoke is for two; they are yoked. Christian servants are described in the New Testament as "yoke-fellows." Paul writes to his dear "yoke-fellow," and the unspeakable joy is this, that if we are servants of Christ He has not left us to serve alone. He is our yoke-fellow. We are workers with Him. Whatever service He calls upon us to fulfil, He will be with us to enable us to fulfil it. Have we realised what a wondrous rest there is bound up in union with Christ?

"The revolution of the heavens," says Archbishop Leighton, "which is a motion in rest and rest in motion, changes not its place though running still. So the motion of life is truly heavenly; beginning in God and ending in Him, which is fellowship." Do we see how this rest may be ours? It is not the rest of inaction or dreamy repose—it is the rest of the union of heart with heart, of the believer and his Lord, of inward oneness, of harmony of the will, and delight and satisfaction of the mind. It is oneness with Christ that brings rest. Christ will take care that you are not idle or unemployed. Oneness with Jesus is the secret of service, of power, and of blessedness.

> One with my Lord, 'tis glorious to know,
> The barriers are broken and gone;
> Life and salvation my soul has put on,
> Since I and my Saviour are one.

There is one aspect of fellowship which often hinders the full realisation of these blessed results. It is fellowship with Christ in his sufferings—with his cross. If we follow Jesus, we shall find sometimes that the path is a very narrow one. There will only be room enough for two—for us and Christ. Blessed be God, there will be always room enough for two.

The path of fellowship with Christ leads down sometimes into darkness, into fiery trials, into Gethsemanes, into lonelinesses, and into sufferings. Rutherford says: "Some would have Christ cheap; they would have Christ without his cross." You will go with Him in the sunshine, but will you go when you have to go alone through the dark, and when you do not know how you will ever come out into the light? Let us go though prospects darken, health fail, sorrows come, and everyone says "Do not go." I do not say He will give you popularity or outward success; but He will give you rest. Will you have Him on his own terms?

Shall we close this Conference by the solemn dedication and yielding of our souls to Him who gave Himself for us, and now says: "Come, ye weary ones; take my easy yoke." It is easy, it is light. When Jesus is there, everything is easy. Hell outside, but heaven inside. May we know it! May we this night see some soul, hitherto like the unwilling ox, bend itself to the yoke now, and then the rest which He gives on earth shall end in the rest and the glory of heaven.

AFTERNOON GATHERINGS.

Work among the Blue Jackets.

ON Wednesday afternoon the North Tent was crowded with people eager to listen to an account from Miss Weston of her work among the marines of the Royal Navy. Mr. T. A. Denny presided.

Miss WESTON said that whatever efforts had been made in the past on behalf of these men would require to be increased and intensified in the future. The work has been greatly blessed. The converted men exercised a salutary influence on their companions; many of those discharged from the service are occupying prominent positions abroad, and are zealously engaged in proclaiming the way of salvation. A Japanese gentleman, residing twelve miles from Nagasaki, became dissatisfied with Buddhism, and resolved to visit the port, in order to see for himself the effect of Christianity upon the lives of those who professed it. He failed to get the desired evidence, and returned home. The Holy Spirit, however, so wrought with him that he went again. This time one of H.M. ships was in port, and he observed in the behaviour of the men what made him determine to be a Christian. That gentleman has been the means of pointing a hundred men and women to Jesus Christ. Lately, when the Channel Squadron was at Gibraltar, the men instituted a ten days' mission, with the result of enrolling many under the banner of the cross, and inducing a large number of persons to sign the temperance pledge.

The time was when it was almost impossible to have a religious service on board a ship of the Navy. Now, in the "regulations" there have been issued instructions providing for the holding of meetings of an evangelistic nature. Surely, when the way is thus opened, and the old obstruction removed, there is much reason for thankfulness to God, and a strong incentive to all servants of Jesus to avail themselves of the existing facilities for forwarding the work. By way of giving vivid pictures of the working of the Sailors' Rests, realistic scenes and incidents were introduced. Towards the end of the address, Miss Weston stated how operations analogous to those at Devonport were commenced at Portsmouth. There is reason to believe that the expense of building at the latter place will be amply met. Two petty officers of H.M. ship President, being present, bore hearty testimony to the work of Miss Weston, and to the personal blessing received through it.

British Syrian Schools.

ON Wednesday afternoon a meeting was held in Room No. 5 on behalf of these schools. Probably owing to the attractions of the tent and mulberry tree meetings on so fine a day, the attendance was not large. Rev. HENRY BRASS, vicar of St. Matthew's, Redhill, presided, and told of his visit to the Holy Land, last year, when he made the acquaintance of the work of the Society, in Damascus, in Lebanon, and in Beyrout. From what he saw he was able warmly to commend the work and the workers to the generous sympathy and help of British Christians. He pleaded specially on behalf of Mr. and Mrs. Mentor-Mott, who, in advancing years, have still to bear the responsibility of the work, with all its difficulties, arising from the Government and other causes.

Lady CARBERY then related her experience of the work as she had witnessed it, especially at Beyrout. She considered these schools the best agency that could be employed for elevating the women of the East.

Mr. GAWIN KIRKHAM wished his hearers could see for themselves, as he had done in his recent tour in Egypt and Palestine, the degradation of Eastern women, as that would be the strongest incentive to support these schools. Women were mere beasts of burden, and among the Mohammedans were utterly outside what we should call the means of grace, not being expected to attend the mosque, and almost regarded as without souls. Yet the children were singularly bright and intelligent. He expounded his "Broad and Narrow Way" picture in the Beyrout schools to about 100 girls, who knew English, were familiar with their Bibles, and answered Scripture questions more readily than a similar number of English girls would have done. In these schools at Beyrout he found children of ten nationalities or creeds being taught, including Latins, Greeks, Armenians, Druses, Maronites, Moslems, Copts, Syrians, Jews, and Soudanese. From one point of view the work was delightful, for the fragrance of the orange blossom was wafted into the rooms from the gardens by which they were surrounded. Having spoken of what he saw at Damascus, Baalbec, and Beyrout, he heartily commended the work as specially worthy of support.

Miss POULTON, secretary of the schools in England, said there were twenty-nine schools in Beyrout, Damascus, Antilibanus, Mount Lebanon, Zachleh, Cœle-Syria, and Tyre, containing more than 3000 scholars. There were twenty-one Europeans and ninety-seven native teachers employed, and also thirty Bible-women and Scripture-readers. Miss Poulton emphasised these workers as of the utmost importance. There was a real thirst for Bible knowledge on the part of the people, and the blind Scripture-readers were able to read in the harems, their blindness being their recommendation, as Moslem ladies were not allowed to look upon men. A special plea was urged for an English lady to go out to Tyre as a medical missionary.

The Evangelisation of Israel.

As usual, the Wednesday afternoon meeting in the Large Hall was devoted to a consideration of the work of God among Israel, with prayer for increased blessing upon all effort to show the scattered people that Jesus is the Messiah of ancient promise. The chair was occupied by Colonel MORTON, who gave expression to a strong interest in work among the Jews.

Mr. DAVID BARON, in the course of an interesting address, gave some account of his recent journeyings in the East with Dr. Dixon. From what he saw and learned, he was convinced that, notwithstanding all that had been done to reach Israel, there are millions of Jews who have not so much as seen a New Testament, or heard the name of Jesus. At Cairo Mr. Baron conversed with representatives of the Karaite Jews, who accept the Law and the Prophets, but refuse to acknowledge the Talmud. These people retain strong expectations as to the Messiah, and are held by their Gentile neighbours in higher respect than is accorded to other Hebrews. Nearly two hours were spent with the Rabbi of this important community in their synagogue, speaking of Jesus Christ. The old man is quite a typical patriarch; when asked what was the great need of the Jewish people, he answered, "The coming of the Son of David." He was told that thousands upon thousands of Jews and Gentiles believe that the "Son of David," the Messiah, came in the time of the Second Temple, and that Jesus of Nazareth was He. The old man remained silent for a moment engrossed in thought, and then observed: "I know there are such as believe that, but our eyes have not yet seen the salvation of God." The old man said he would certainly read a New Testament which was given him twenty years ago, but which he had never perused because he had been told that the book was "not for Jews."

Mr. Baron told of the great social progress of recent years in the Holy Land. The Jews there number 70,000 or 80,000; in Jerusalem the Jewish population is on the increase, while Mohammedans are becoming fewer in number. God is remembering the land, and the seed of Abraham also. The rainfall has of late been more copious than for a long time previously, and many a desert place has become a fruitful garden. One of the colonies near the Mount of Olives is made up of Jews from Yemen, in Southern Arabia. They immigrated into the Holy Land about ten years ago, believing that God would reveal the Messiah unto them. This colony was visited, and the people found in a state of great destitution, many of them being sick. Dr. Dixon prescribed for their ailments and a request to be allowed to speak to them in the synagogue was granted. They filled the building. Mr. Baron told them of Jesus Christ the true Messiah, whom God has sent to Israel, and to be the Saviour of the world. He spoke of the unbelief of the Jewish nation, and when he had done the Rabbi said: "We have come from the land of Teman (the south), where our fathers have lived from very early times. But never in all our lives until we came here, have we heard that the Messiah had come. If we had heard, we might have believed on Him." Some of the fault of the unbelief of those Jews must surely cling to the skirts of the Christian Church, for not having proclaimed Jesus unto them.

Rev. JOHN WILKINSON dwelt upon the place of Israel in the purpose of God, quoting Rom. xi. 30, 31: "For as ye (Gentiles) in time past were disobedient to God, but now have obtained mercy by their (Israel's) disobedience, even so have these also now been disobedient, that by the mercy shown to you they also may now obtain mercy" (R.V.). Mission work among the Jews is not only an end as affecting individual members of the race, but it is a means of greater blessing for the whole world, when viewed in relation to God's great and glorious purpose. Not only is there a veil upon the hearts of the Jews in regard to Christ, but also upon the minds of many Christians in regard to the Jews. Mr. Wilkinson intimated that early in October next, an all-day prayer-meeting will be held in the Conference Hall, to pray for the removal of this veil, so that the work of God may go forward with greater freedom throughout the world.

Having mentioned that the Mildmay Mission had been blessed with many converts—some of them being at the present time ministers and missionaries—Mr. Wilkinson said that £6700 had been received towards the £10,000 required to provide a central mission hall in the East-end. He declared London to be the best base of missionary operations among the Jews, for on an average over a hundred Jews arrive weekly from various parts. Alluding to the distribution of the Hebrew New Testament in many lands, Mr. Wilkinson rejoiced to report many conversions as a result of the work.

Christian Colportage Association.

THE value of colportage as an aggressive evangelistic agency was impressed on a large audience in the South Tent on Wednesday. Mr. W. H. SEAGRAM, who presided, in speaking of the Christian Colportage Association, said its primary object was the salvation of souls through the medium of the printing press and the individual dealing of godly men whom the Association employs as colporteurs. The men have distinct districts allotted to them, and it is their aim constantly to visit every house within their district, offering their books for sale, and seeking opportunities of conversation concerning the "one thing needful." Last year the staff of colporteurs was increased by twenty; and it is hoped to put ten more men to work shortly. During last year 46,000 Bibles, or portions of the Bible, were circulated, besides a very large number of other books and pamphlets, in which the fundamental principles of the Gospel were clearly set forth.

Mr. ROBERT PATON mentioned a number of books that have been markedly blessed in awakening sinners to a sense of their spiritual need, and observed that they were continually in receipt of tidings of fruit seen in spiritual blessing through the work of the men, and the influence of their books.

Eight of the colporteurs followed with brief accounts of their work, giving instances of direct results accruing from the reading of books, sometimes left at houses against the wishes of the people. Some of the testimonies were extremely interesting, and showed what joy and stimulus the men derive from this labour for Christ. It was clearly shown, however, that they have many difficulties to contend with, and they constantly need to be upheld in prayer by Christian people; an occasional word of cheer from such also goes a long way to make the colporteur's burden of work lighter, and to encourage his heart with the confidence that his labour will not be in vain in the Lord.

Mr. H. D. BROWN, secretary of the Association, referred to a very interesting work in the Scilly Islands as a result of a brief visit by a colporteur. Referring to the great havoc being wrought up and down the country by the circulation of infidel and immoral literature, he recommended the work of the Colportage Association as an antidote to the poison. The most practical manner in which to counteract such an evil was to take pure and Christian literature to the very doors of the people in the way that the colporteurs are doing every day.

Foreign Missions.

THE Thursday afternoon meeting in the Large Hall was devoted to the cause of Foreign Missions. Mr. J. E. MATHIESON, who presided, opened the proceedings with a few words on Ps. viii. 1: "O LORD, our Lord, how excellent is thy name in all the earth! who hast set thy glory above the heavens."

Rev. J. H. HORSBURGH, C.M.S. missionary from Central China, delivered a stirring address. Setting out with some observations on the "marching orders" of the Church: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature," he maintained that in view of the present state of the earth the Church stands convicted of disobedience. Inquiring into the causes of this negligence, he referred first to want of consecration to Christ. There has not only been want of heart, but want of thought and knowledge. Not only, however, is there want of thought, but there is wrong thinking. Some say, "There are heathen at home, and that all are not called to be missionaries." Seeing that only two out of five thousand people go abroad, it really does appear that all are not "called." England, however, is not a heathen country in the sense that China is; there are no people in England who are so benighted that, when spoken to of the Lord Jesus, they would think that some article of food was being mentioned!

Mr. Horsburgh said that China is a splendid field for all sorts and conditions of true Christians, and he hoped many would make up their minds to take the light to the needy millions.

Mrs. AHOK, of Foochow, spoke in Chinese, her remarks being interpreted by Mrs. R. W. Stewart, C.M.S. missionary. At the outset she commended to the notice of the audience 1 Pet. ii. 21: "For even hereunto were ye called: because Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an example, that ye should follow his steps." The idolatrous customs of her country are responsible for untold sorrow and sadness, and to make this known, and tell of the spiritual destitution of the people, she came to England. The griefs of the women include the terrible foot-binding and the shutting up from society; the opium smoking and gambling vices among the men are the ruin of thousands. Lady missionaries are specially required to work among the women of China, and for these the speaker made a touching appeal. Suppose our Lord had said He loved this world, but had never left heaven to lay down his life for us, would his pity have done us any good? We should have been without hope. But Christ gave the greatest proof of his love by coming and laying down his life for us. So, when we say by our lips that we know Him, we should give proof by our lives that what we say is true. She had not come all this way from home and country for pleasure or amusement. She was sitting in her house in quietness and peace, and thought of the coming of the Lord. She felt she dare not meet Him, and look in his face, having herself known the Saviour's love and pity, but having done nothing for the salvation of her brothers and sisters in China. She asked Christians to give themselves for work in China. There is a Chinese proverb: "While the stone is hot, put the cakes on"; so she begged her hearers to make no delay in putting their resolves into execution. Needless to say, these earnest words were listened to with rapt attention.

Mrs. STEWART informed the meeting that for about nine years Mrs. Ahok has been an earnest follower of Christ. All the zeal with which she and her husband formerly worshipped gods made by human hands has been consecrated to the service of God. Her husband told her that he had long desired to appeal to the people of England or America on behalf of his people, and, as he could not go himself, he would be glad if she would go in his stead. This journey Mrs. Ahok at once resolved to take, notwithstanding its difficulties to one who had never before been more than three miles from her home, and was a victim of the foot-binding custom of the country. At Hong Kong Mrs. Ahok was told, in the tongue of the people, "There are a thousand miseries before you," but her reply was: "If there are a thousand more, I will go." All along she has derived much comfort from the words of Christ: "If any man serve Me, let him follow Me. If any man serve Me, him will my Father honour." The houses of many ladies of her rank have been opened to the missionaries by Mrs. Ahok, and now there are numbers of avenues of usefulness calling for workers to fill them.

Rev. Dr. H. Grattan Guinness called attention to the very interesting character of the proceedings. Not in a vision had they seen a man of Macedonia, saying, "Come over and help us," but in bodily presence a "woman of Macedonia" had made the plea. Oh that some men and women would respond to the cry! After this Mrs. Ahok rose, and said in English: "Come over and help us; it is very important." Her words must have gone to the hearts of many.

Rev. H. Coley, L.M.S., India, spoke of varied work in our great Eastern Dependency, showing that the name of Jesus has there had a charm for many an ear. Mrs. Armstrong told of labour among many races in Burmah. A special interest attached to her account of the Karen community, in which the true missionary spirit resides; for, though poor, the people give liberally towards sending the Gospel to those who still sit in darkness. The last speaker was Mr. George Pearse, whose work among the Kabyles of North Africa is widely known. He rejoiced in the progress of recent years among the Berber races. There is among the Arabs an idea that Jesus will quickly return, so this is a point on which they may be approached by evangelists.

Prayer for our Country.

On Wednesday afternoon a meeting was held under the mulberry tree convened by the newly formed "Christian Union for the Severance of the Connection of the British Empire with the Opium Traffic." The chair was taken by Mr. H. C. Nisbet, who read Joel ii. 21-27. He expressed his belief that God was moved by the prayers of his people in his dealings with a country, and we were thus encouraged to pray for our country. He wished to see the glory of God put first by our rulers. Prayer was then offered by two brethren.

Dr. James L. Maxwell said none of us could think lightly of the drink traffic in our midst, without painfully injuring ourselves. So it was with the opium traffic. Though there is no real defence for our action, yet we insist upon China allowing this enormous evil. He then called attention to Canon Wilberforce's Exeter Hall speech, as reported in National Righteousness for June (the organ of the Christian Union), who could now speak with authority since his visit to India. There were now 10,000 opium licences in that Empire. Reference was also made to Mr. Alfred Dyer's exposures in China. There were many true patriots in that country who would put down the opium traffic if they could. The cry of many in India also is for the trade to be done away. Our fellow-subjects in Hong Kong had petitioned the British House of Commons to bring to an end this curse.

Mr. B. Broomhall, of the China Inland Mission, who has written much and well on the opium question, said there was room both for preaching and prayer on this matter. The Press of England had taken up the subject more largely during the past twelve months, and if the Christian people of England would but take it in hand vigorously, they would carry everything before them.

Mr. Edward Pearse said: I am here as a witness of what I have seen and heard. We who come from China speak of what we know. When preaching the Gospel, we are constantly met with hindrances in connection with this opium business. "That which hurts and destroys us comes from your country," the people say. Many of the missionaries have to treat cases of opium poisoning, and many of the people are unable to break off the habit of opium smoking.

Addresses were also given by Mr. Alexander, Mr. Andrew, and Mr. G. Parker.

Waifs and Strays.

On Thursday afternoon, the threatening weather drove Dr. Barnardo and his friends from the Mulberry Tree into Room No. 4, which became inconveniently crowded. Mr. Samuel Gurney Sheppard, who presided, said Dr. Barnardo's many friends were just now watching with intense interest the magnificent work he was doing. Referring to the recent attempts on the part of Romish priests to obtain possession of children, Mr. Sheppard said they were not going to let a child be snatched from their hands without a gallant fight.

Dr. Barnardo having read Mark x. 42-45, said the life of Him who came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, had changed the world by teaching the new principle of the love of God, and that others were to be the subjects of our love and not ourselves. They would notice that all revived spiritual life led to more care for the sad and the unhappy. It could not be denied that Christ had given a new value to human life, especially child life. Early civilisation approved of infanticide. Even Terence, whose saying, "I am a man, and nothing that concerns mankind is a matter of indifference to me," had been so much admired, in one of his plays taught infanticide, the approved doctrine of Rome at that time.

"How unhappy children are in this country!" exclaimed the Doctor, and then proceeded to describe several classes of children, beginning with those who were cruelly treated. The first case was that of a little girl of five, who had been literally used as a football. Such a cloud of terror hung over her, that it was some time after she was rescued before she would allow anyone to come near her. She acted more like a wild beast defending itself than like a child. A case of a boy was also mentioned, who had been cruelly used by his father, who, when brought before the magistrate, said: "The boy's my own; I'll do as I like." A further illustration was given of the case of little Nellie, a child of ten, whose aunt half-starved her, and beat her with a poker, the leg of a chair, and a rope's-end.

The case of children who suffered wrongs much worse than cruelty, was then touched upon. These evils were largely due to overcrowding. Out of this phase has come a Home for Rough Girls. As an illustration a woman with some children was named, having been discovered during one of the midnight searches. A girl of nine was taken to the Barking-side Homes, one of fifteen was taken into the Rough Girls' Home, and clothing was found for one of nineteen. Thus the mother's burden was lightened. The next section described was the lodging-house children, for the agents of the Homes were at work night and day in those places. Here the Doctor mentioned incidentally that last year the total of fresh cases admitted was 1893, of whom 780 were actually on the streets.

Touching upon the recent Romish controversy, Dr. Barnardo declared that if he saw the Roman Catholics at work rescuing their own neglected children, he would not quarrel with them. But they stood by while he rescued them, and then sought by underhand means to get them from him. He had never yet refused to deliver a child to respectable Roman Catholic parents for the reason that none such had ever yet made application! He had been cheered by messages from all parts of the world from those who approved of the stand he had taken, some of these being from Roman Catholics.

The Doctor spoke for more than an hour in a bright and cheery tone, mingled at times with touching pathos which brought tears to his own eyes and the eyes of many in his crowded audience. Rev. Percy Chapman, of Woolwich, offered prayer at the opening of the meeting, and Rev. Dr. Hole, Incumbent of Christ Church, Bromley Park, at the close.

Y.M.C.A.

In presiding over the meeting in Room No. 4 on Wednesday afternoon, Mr. George Williams noticed with thankfulness the extension and consolidation of Association work among young men at home and abroad, of which he gave some interesting statistics. Faithfulness to earnest spiritual work, and avoidance of the tendency in certain quarters to substitute some worldly attraction, will secure a continuance of the Divine favour. A returned missionary from Madagascar, where there are two associations, reports that he and twenty of his brethren from the London Missionary Society are nearly all old members of the Association. More workers are needed in the new territory of South Africa, with its 650,000 square miles. We may rejoice that the little seed has grown in blessing, not only to the United Kingdom, but to the nations of the earth.

Mr. Armstrong, who has been at work in the north of England, said the powers which tell against young men are equipped in everything necessary for their evil work. Money is poured out like water, that palatial drinking places may be made attractive. The prevalence of gambling, immorality, the fashion and custom of this world, make spiritual effort look small. Better machinery is needed. In a Yorkshire town of 13,000 inhabitants, no more than 130 young men are connected with the various places of worship: in another town there are but 150 in 16,000; while of 70,000 inhabitants of Midland towns, not 600 are Christian young men. An advance is needed all along the lines. One pastor said, "We, as a church, have missed young men; and as long as your Association devotes itself to them, it shall have my support." The Association should be supported, because it seeks to benefit young men for time and eternity, its basis is sound and wide as God's word, and its method is simple—the use of young men to win their fellows.

Mr. James E. Mathieson said the Association is always heartily welcome to Mildmay. The time of growth of the Association has been a perilous time for all Christians, especially for young men, in an increase of irreverence, an early freedom from restraint, and a larger freedom of opinion. A young man's first twenty-four hours in the great city, are likely to determine the course of his whole life. The keener competition and the lowered salaries of to-day increase the need of a helping hand for the young.

Mr. J. H. Tritton announced that the Société Nationale D'Encouragement au Bien, under the presidency of the Ministre de l'Intérieure, had, through M. Jules Simon, and in the presence of a large meeting, handed their gold medal and diploma of honour to a member of the Paris Association, for presentation to Mr. George Williams, as the founder and representative of the work in Paris.

Mr. Williams, in acknowledging the gifts, said it was France saying to the Association, "You are doing a good work. Go on, and God bless you."

After a few encouraging words from Mr. Edward Trotter,

Rev. Dr. Hole, Incumbent of Christchurch, Bromley, recounted encouraging facts in connection with visits to the associations at Cape Town, and at Amherst in Nova Scotia. Wherever spiritual work has been placed at the head of all other work, God has granted success and blessing, not only in multiplying associations, but in saving souls.

Mr. ANDERSON-MEIJERHELM, of Stockholm, referring to a recent visit to Paris, said the sin in which her young men are sunk is a strong reason to help her. The influence of the last Conference was very great, and there are now 600 members in Stockholm.

Rev. J. S. HILL, of Auckland, had been cheered by visiting all the Associations of New Zealand and Australia. At Honolulu is an Association for the Chinese, another at San Francisco, and one in the latter place for the Japanese. When sons or daughters go abroad, parents should communicate with Y.M.C. or Y.W.C. Associations. At Denver, in Colorado, are 150 young Englishmen without friends, except those of the Association. In a New York meeting, where strangers were asked to raise their hands, nearly all present did so. The Auckland Association is, with the exception of that in London, the oldest Association in the world, and was started by a man from Aldersgate-street. The parent Association should keep to the old paths for the sake of Colonial Associations, otherwise the deviation of the latter is likely to be greater than that of home Associations.

Zenana Bible and Medical Mission.

THE condition of Indian women, doomed to enforced degradation and deprived of social, intellectual, and religious life, was earnestly pressed upon the attention of those who assembled in Room No. 5 on Friday afternoon.

Mr. JOSEPH WEATHERLEY'S statement, some details of which follow, excited thankfulness to God that something is being done to carry Gospel light and compassion into the dark places of India's sin and suffering. The good principle and co-operation with other evangelical organisations had been illustrated in the receipt of a letter through the Church Missionary Society, from Miss Askew, recently sent out to Lahore, by this Zenana Mission, which, founded in 1852, now has sixty-one European missionaries and Eurasian assistants, 125 native Christian teachers, nurses, &c., fifty-eight Bible-women, sixty-three schools with 2379 pupils, and four normal schools in which 130 students are being trained for Mission work. The missionaries have access to 2569 Zenanas, a means of immense influence. The Bible-women visit in 405 villages There are two hospitals, one established at Lucknow, for the completion of which funds are needed, and which is in memory of the late Lady Kinnaird, who devoted herself to Indian work; the other at Benares. There are also several dispensaries. In 1889 there were 18,782 attendances by 5663 patients. Five fully trained lady doctors seek to influence the women's souls, while attending to their bodies. It is desirable to erect or adapt a building at Patna, to visit the villages in the N.W. provinces, and to extend the village work round Lahore, for which things an increase of income, and many more workers, self-supporting if possible, are needed.

Miss DAVIS, who has worked in India for six and a half years, said it was pleasant to meet with God's people, and to recount some of the wonderful things He is doing in a distant land. Happy Englishwomen, with bright hopes for the future and happy memories of the past, can have no idea of the desolation of Indian women. With one teacher to 250,000 women and girls in India, only the surface of the work is touched. In Bombay there is a normal school for native Christian girls, to which is attached a large and important day-school, which brings many classes of the people together. Prosperous parents bear with religious instruction to their children for the sake of having them taught English. A large Mohammedan school, with attendance of seventy or eighty, is under superintendence; for the Mohammedan idea that it is of no utility to teach women and girls has been modified. It is hoped that after the early removal of the girls from school, influence over them may be retained. Mohammedan fear of the Bible shows the power of the book. Miss Davis narrated incidents illustrative of ready reception and appreciation of God's truth on the part of Indian women and girls, and the persevering and successful attacks upon the difficulties which attend efforts for their spiritual benefit.

Rev. A. R. CAVALIER said there is cause to thank God for very decided progress and for new openings. The Lucknow Hospital is crowded out. There are 112 dispensary patients daily, in addition to hospital and home visits. As God's word has proved powerful at Patna, it is desired to start a medical mission there as soon as possible. A letter from Allahabad reports nine baptisms during May, including Bengali, Mohammedan, and Hindoo women. There are urgent requests for new stations in the N.W. provinces and elsewhere. Prayer has been made that at least ten more missionaries may go out this autumn. Those who cannot go may help the great financial need by the partial or entire support of a substitute. The needs of the four millions of women shut up in Zenanas is very great; contrast the privileges of Mildmay with the darkness and desolation of their lives. On one occasion 1700 native communicants gathered from 126 congregations in the south of India, where the absence of the Zenana system leaves women more accessible to Gospel influence than in the north. Within the Zenanas considerably more than 2000 women die daily, without medical aid and without the knowledge of Christ. Thank God, some are hearing of Him. Should not the number be increased by augmented support of a society which, by unsectarian work, witnesses before the heathen to Christian unity?

Colonel MORTON closed with a few words of sympathy from personal acquaintance with the work while he was in India.

Soldiers' Homes.

ON Thursday afternoon, at the North Tent, Sir Robert Phayre presided at the meeting in connection with Miss Daniell's Soldiers' Homes. The principal aim of the several Homes, he said, is the salvation of the men. Moral, intellectual, and physical needs are, of course, attended to. Miss DANIELL, for the sake of any strangers present, gave an account of how the Homes were started at Aldershot in 1862, by her mother, and traced the progress of the work to Colchester, Plymouth, Manchester, Chatham, Windsor, and London. Two things appeared to be pressing on her mind; first, that God would continue the work of conversion at the tent near the Aldershot Home, and through the meetings for prayer; and, second, that the soldiers' wives who live outside of camp privileges may obtain sufficient remunerative work. The aid of ladies will be welcomed for the second object.

Major-General ANDERSON said that twelve years ago he had come to know Jesus as his Saviour through the agency of Miss Daniell and her Soldiers' Home. He used at that time to go to the Home to patronise it; but the Spirit of God awakened him there. By the grace of God he and a few other converted men wrought such a change for the better at the station in Burmah that the reform surprised the general officer who had come to inspect it.

Captain KENYON could re-echo the words of General Anderson. He, too, used to go to the Home at Aldershot to bestow his patronage on it, and there he also came to the saving knowledge of Christ. The word "Home" is by no means a conventional one, but an actually descriptive term as a result of the Christ-Spirit of the ladies who work in the Homes. To Major SMITH the great charm of the Home at Aldershot was the great number of the genuinely converted men to be met with there—men of true humbleness and lowliness of heart. Among the others who spoke very briefly were Captain Wynne, of the Royal Artillery, and Captain Barrett.

Highway and Hedgerow Mission.

ON Friday afternoon a large crowd gathered under the familiar Mulberry Tree to hear a statement from Captain H. A. Bruce Moorhouse, relative to the Highway and Hedgerow Mission, a new enterprise for reaching the rural population of England.

Mr. T. A. DENNY, who presided, told the audience what a self-denying work Captain and Mrs. Moorhouse were doing, and how they had missioned the New Forest, Southwick in Sussex, Southwold in Suffolk, and other places. He heartily commended their work to the support and imitation of Christian people. Colonel Robert Wilmot Brooke also commended the work, and then Captain MOORHOUSE told how this enterprise had grown. He and his wife, moved by the destitution of the rural hamlets, began working among them ten years ago. During that time they had received £2000, and spent £3250, the difference being out of their own pockets. Among the results he might mention that four Y.M.C.A.'s had been formed, five or six mission halls and two Sailors' Institutes had been erected, and 500 or 600 workers had been brought out. The work had been carried on in England, Guernsey, and France. He pleaded for the villages and hamlets because the country was changing. Grass land was taking the place of arable land, and the cattle required so much attention that those who looked after them were unable to attend public worship. So in the fishing villages, many men were obliged by contract to fish on Sundays, and in both cases the only chance of worship was when the Gospel was taken to them. Their vans and their movable wooden mission-hall were now at Thorpe, near Saxmundham.

Describing van-life, such as he and his wife lived, he said people must be prepared to rough it. They must be able to cook and generally care for themselves. But they should be educated people, and should be able to work without looking for any monetary return from those among whom they laboured.

Captain Moorhouse then sketched the history of his Mission, drawing mental pictures of the turf-cutters on a moor in Somerset, the gipsies in the New Forest, the quarrymen in Guernsey, the sailors at Southwick, and the fishermen at Southwold. To continue the work as at present constituted, he needed £350 a year in addition to his own income, which was expended in it.

REV. WALTER BRADBURY has been travelling for several months on a mission tour, first as chaplain on an emigrant ship, afterwards holding Bible-readings in the Canary Islands, and in Tangier, N. Africa; afterwards in Gibraltar amongst the troops, and on board Lord C. Beresford's new man-of-war ship—then Port Said, Egypt, giving addresses at the Sailors' Homes, and holding mission services to children in Jerusalem, Bethlehem, and Jaffa.

HOUSE OF REST, KILBURN.—The concluding all-day meeting of the season, held on Friday, was the last in the old house in Cambridge-gardens, and was attended by many friends. Miss Mason gave a brief summary of the work to which she was called twenty-four years ago. All along the line, she had to tell of God's faithfulness. Miss Mason is about to "lengthen her cords, and to strengthen her stakes," and, in response to God's directing hand, is removing to larger premises, where, with the House of Rest, will be combined the Aged Workers' Home. Some very striking testimonies were given of the blessings and benefits received at the Houses of Rest by those present. In the afternoon, Rev. F. B. Meyer gave the address, and in the evening Mr. Reader Harris was the speaker.

LAST week, after a hurried glimpse at some of the chapters of this eagerly expected book, we described it as "one of the most fascinating works of its kind ever published." A more leisurely and thorough examination of the two handsome and portly volumes enables us to repeat that characterisation with all possible emphasis. On the occasion of the recent lecture in Exeter Hall by Mr.—or as we must now call him Dr.—Stanley, the Chairman remarked that it was a rare thing to find in the same man such powers in the leadership of men through arduous tasks of exploration and such literary gifts of description as are possessed by the author of "In Darkest Africa." This feeling has grown upon us as we have read these most thrilling and enthralling pages. The feats of endurance and courage performed by the exploring party, with Dr. Stanley at its head, awaken in us sentiments of admiring wonderment. The literary performance of producing this extraordinary narrative in such a short space of time seems equally beyond the range of ordinary human achievement. We can only believe, as the author himself constantly recognises throughout the book, that a Divine eye has watched over him and a Divine hand has guided him from first to last with special protecting and empowering care. Dr. Stanley's fame, both as traveller and author, was amply made before he entered on his latest quest; but in it he has added another chaplet to his laurel crown of good work undertaken and successfully accomplished.

The space at command does not enable us to give anything but a very fragmentary idea of the work which Dr. Stanley has given to the public. As everybody knows, he accepted, some three and a half years ago, a commission from a private committee to carry relief to the beleaguered Emin Pasha, Governor of the Equatorial Province of the Soudan, which was then under Egyptian protectorate. He was, if necessary, to rescue and safely conduct back to civilisation the Pasha and his Egyptian followers. It is beyond our scope to enter into many matters here recorded, and which will be found by the reader to be of extreme interest, e.g., the choice of routes, the difficulties of transport, the perfidy of Tippoo Tib, the obstacles to travel, the catastrophes to the rear column, the character and conduct of Emin Pasha, &c. We will only say that in all these and such like matters we are compelled to admit that the wonderful energy and decision of character, the fidelity to the trust committed to him, the patience and forbearance shown to others, and the inexhaustible resource exhibited by the commander of the expedition amply justify the choice of Dr. Stanley as the servant of the Rescue Committee. Of course, with such a mission, needing to be done with all possible haste, there was plenty of rough work to be gone through, and there may be some who will think that Dr. Stanley's measures in overcoming obstacles were not always those of a Christian traveller. So far removed from the scene of action, we are not disposed to pass any harsh judgment; we would rather believe that strong repressive measures were only resorted to in dealing with hostile tribes and with refractory or treacherous members of the expedition, when the force of an overwhelming necessity appeared to call for them.

CONFESSING GOD BEFORE MEN.

The lessons that Dr. Stanley learned during his memorable sojourn with Dr. Livingstone have evidently never been forgotten. But in no previous book of his do we find such definite and oft-recurring recognition of God, as the one source of help and comfort in the hour of human extremity and weakness. It is deeply interesting to trace in those pages how the powers of the unseen world and the verities of Divine interposition in mundane affairs impressed themselves on the writer, so that he is constrained to make public confession, in the face of all men, of his faith in God. Dr. Stanley says that, during the time he was in Africa, he read the Bible twice through, and the way in which his reading affected his thinking and acting is continually cropping out in his narrative. One or two brief extracts on this point may be given. In the introductory letter to Sir William Mackinnon, there occurs a passage now well known through frequent quotation, but which will bear to be reproduced here:—

> You who throughout your long and varied life have stedfastly believed in the Christian's God, and before men have professed your devout thankfulness for many mercies vouchsafed to you, will better understand than many others the feelings which animate me when I find myself back again in civilisation, uninjured in life or health, after passing through so many stormy and distressful periods. Constrained at the darkest hour to humbly confess that without God's help I was helpless, I vowed a vow in the forest solitudes that I would confess his aid before men. A silence as of death was round about me; it was midnight; I was weakened by illness, prostrated with fatigue, and worn with anxiety for my white and black companions, whose fate was a mystery. In this physical and mental distress, I besought God to give me back my people. Nine hours later we were exulting with a rapturous joy. In full view of all was the crimson flag with the crescent, and beneath its waving folds was the long-lost rear column.

On another occasion, when the relief column was marching through the primeval forest, and had been reduced to a condition of dire extremity from scarcity of food, Dr. Stanley called his officers together and discussed the situation. He told them that in all his wanderings he had never been in such straits from hunger, and proceeded:—

> The age of miracles is past, it is said, but why should it be? Moses drew water from the rock at Horeb for the thirsty Israelites; of water we have enough and to spare. Elijah was fed by ravens at the brook Cherith; but there is not a raven in all this forest. Christ was ministered unto by angels. I wonder if anyone will minister unto us.

He goes on to tell how at that moment a fine fat guinea fowl fell at their feet, and was caught by the fox terrier.

> There, boys; truly the gods are gracious. The age of miracles is not past.

There are many passages in the book that may be regarded as in the art of description. Here is one which it would surely be difficult to surpass. It tells of an experience in the forest near "Starvation Camp." Leaving the sick and infirm in the care of one of his officers, Dr. Stanley started out in search of food for himself and the marching column under his charge. On parting with the stay-behinds, he had asked them to pray for his success, and said that "God is the only One who can help you." Then follows the account of the first night:—

KOHINOORS FOR BEAUTY AND POWER

> Vain was it for me to seek for that sleep which is "the balm of hurt minds." Too many memories crowded about me; too many dying forms haunted me in the darkness; my lively fancies were too distorted by dread, which painted them with dismal colours; the stark forms lying in links along the path which we had seen that afternoon in our tramp were things too solemn for sudden oblivion. The stars could not be seen to seek comfort in their twinkling; the poor hearts around me were too heavy to utter aught but groans of despair; the fires were not lit, for there was no food to cook—my grief was great. Out of the pall-black darkness came the eerie shapes that haunt the feverland, that jibe and mock the lonely man, and weave figures of flame, and draw fiery forms in the mantle of the night; and whispers breathed through the heavy air of graves and worms and forgetfulness; and a demon hinted in the dazed brain that 'twere better to rest than to think with a sickening heart; and the sough of the wind through the crowns of the thick black bush seemed to sigh and moan: "Lost! lost! lost! Thy labour and grief are in vain. Comfortless days upon days; brave lives are sobbing their last; man after man rolls down to the death, to mildew and rot, and thou wilt be left alone."
> "Allah ho Akbar!" was the cry that rang through the gloom from a man with a breaking heart. The words went pealing along through the dark, and they roused the echoes of "God is great" within me. Why should a Moslem recall a Christian to thoughts of his God? "Ye fools, when will ye be wise? He that planted the ear, shall He not hear? He that formed the eye, shall He not see?" And, lo! worthier thoughts possess the mind, the straining of the eyes through the darkness is relaxed, and the sight is inverted to see dumb witnesses of past mercies on this or that forgotten occasion; one memory begets another, until the stubborn heart is melted, and our needs are laid as upon a tablet before our Great Deliverer.
> Toward morning I dozed, to spring up a few hours later as the darkness was fading, and a ghastly light showed the still groups of my companions. "Up, boys, up! to the plantains, up! Please God we shall have plantains to-day." This was uttered to cheer the sad hearts. Within a few minutes we had filed away from our earthy couches, and were on the track on the cheerless light of the morning, some hobbling from sores, some limping from ulcers, some staggering from weakness. We had commenced to feel warmed up with the motion of the march, when, hark! I heard a murmur of voices ahead. I saw a great pile of green fruit rising above the broad leaves of the phyrnia that obstructed a clear view, and intuitively one divined that this must be the column of foragers advancing to meet us. In a second of time the weak, the lame, the cripple, the limping and moaning people forgot their griefs and their woes, and shouted the grateful chant which goes up of its own accord towards the skies out of the full and sensitive hearts, "Thanks be to God." Englishman and African, Christian and Pagan, all alike confess Him. He is not here, or there, but everywhere, and the heart of the grateful man confesseth Him.

As we have said, there are many occasions on which the writer makes use of Biblical quotations to give point to some description or some experience. At one time the quotation is from Deuteronomy; then from Ecclesiastes; then from Job. He does not scruple to use the words of Christ Himself, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do," when he hears some ignorant Zanzibaris suggest that a new-born babe should be thrown into the river out of the way.

Another fruit of the old days of communion with Livingstone is to be found in the reverential regard that Stanley has for missionaries and missionary work. Was it not a rousing Ethiopian call sent to England from Mtesa, of Uganda, through the pen of Stanley, that brought into existence the C.M.S. Mission to the country of that sable monarch, which has had such a strange and tragical history? Did not the pioneering work of Stanley on the Congo pave the way for the little army of Christian workers scattered up and down the banks of that mighty African waterway? In these volumes there is a good deal of interesting missionary matter, especially with respect to the works of the lamented Mackay. But we must defer some extracts on that and other topics till our next issue.

ANGLO-AMERICAN Y.M.C.A., PARIS.—With an institute situate near the Bourse and the Boulevards, at 160, Rue Montmartre, this association has had a very interesting career. The twenty-first annual report complains that the premises do not meet the need of the great city. We rejoice to read: "The Bible-classes and prayer-meetings have produced fruits such as to justify the belief that God's blessing rests on the work in no small measure. On the afternoon of the Lord's Day, the Bible-class has been well attended, and many young men have on various occasions stood up and given their testimony to the fact of having in Paris found the pearl of great price." To many a young man the premises afford many of the advantages of home. We regret to observe that the balance-sheet shows a deficit. The secretary of the Association is Mr. Basil Hecver.

CONVALESCENT HOME, SANDGATE.—An entertainment to the workmen, in celebration of the completion of the first section of the new Home at Beach Rocks, Sandgate, was given there on Saturday evening, Mr. J. J. Jones presiding. Rev. Russell Wakefield, vicar of Sandgate, spoke in high terms of the way in which the Homes are conducted. Mr. George Nokes delivered a splendid address, full of pathos and humour, and gave his experience of the immense value of the Home to many a poor working man and woman living at the East-end of London. Mr. C. Button, Mr. W. M. Dabbs, Mr. C. R. W. Offen, Mr. H. T. Tiddeman, and others, also spoke in high commendation of Mr. Jones's work. There are now 120 inmates receiving the benefits of this invaluable Institution. As soon as the funds are obtained, the new building will be completed, and then accommodation will be provided for over 200 people. One of the speakers said it was impossible to commend the work too highly.

REV. WILLIAM CROSBIE, M.A., LL.B.,

Congregational Pastor.

THE credo: "I believe in the Holy Ghost," has been the inspiration of the life now to be sketched, and the secret of a remarkably successful ministry in different parts of England, and of those fervid writings to which attention has been drawn from time to time in our columns.

WILLIAM CROSBIE was born at Violet Bank, between Annan and Ecclefechan, Scotland, but when young was taken to live at Friar's Carse about six miles above Dumfries. It was a locality, not only fitted by its picturesqueness to make an impression on a boy's emotional nature, but which was replete with traditions of the Covenanters. His father held the position of gardener, or manager, to Dr. Crichton, the munificent founder of the Royal Asylum at Dumfries, and became an office-bearer in the Free Church at Dunscore, about two or three miles from his residence. In the parish of Dunscore he was placed under a schoolmaster of note in those days, and strong local influences quickened his early enthusiasm. Rev. Dr. Brydon was the minister of the Free Church, and guided his youthful inquiries amid the stirring agitations which followed the Scotch Ecclesiastical Disruption of 1843.

Thomas Carlyle and his gifted wife resided then at Craigenputtock, in this Dunscore parish, and lived on intimate terms with the Free Church minister. Earlier than this, Carlyle had in his boyhood sat on the same forms in school at Ecclefechan with those who became William Crosbie's parents. They knew the young philosopher well, and his terrible mania, of which they retained a vivid recollection, for fighting every new boy that came into the school. They also knew, in friendly relations, Carlyle's father and mother, and their inflexible religious principles. It may be added that they lived at that time in close acquaintanceship with another family from which a son would go forth to win celebrity—that of Edward Irving. Impulses of such a nature could not fail to mould the youthful aspirations of the subject of this notice.

From Scotland he went as a youth to Nottingham to be with an uncle. In this spirited town, to which he now returns, the great avowal took place of his faith and loyalty Christwards. In order publicly to confess the Saviour, he joined the Congregational church at Castle Gate. The pastor was Rev. S. McAll, who afterwards became Principal of Hackney College, London. Mr. McAll, admiring young Crosbie's devotion in the Sunday-school and other Christian activities, urged his entrance to Rotherham College, Yorkshire, and here began his more systematic preparation for pastoral work. In college he did three things which are too often thought incompatible: he studied hard at divinity, took high literary degrees at the London University, and maintained his religious spirituality. Those who knew him at that period were aware that he was accustomed not only scrupulously to observe his ordinary seasons of devotion, but to set apart special times for confession, for personal meditation on the Scriptures, and for prolonged prayer. Happy the student who, in obedience to the Holy Spirit's monitions, does not allow the literary demands of college life to jostle out the devotional! The true preparation for ministerial success lies in such a resistance.

Seven years of pastoral devotion at Romsey, marked his entrance to the Congregational ministry. Soon the young pastor's zeal and fervour were recognised in the Hampshire health resort and its neighbourhood. The full preaching of the Gospel of Christ was remarkably blessed to the eternal salvation of many; the church of the Independent order, with its noble traditions, was quickened and enlarged, and the town and visitors recognised that a man of God was there. In external efforts, a minister's house was purchased, and a large hall and class-rooms built for the extension of Christian work.

In 1864 a call which could not be misunderstood took him to Derby. No more than a mere glance at the remarkable service he was permitted to accomplish there for the Saviour can be taken. The church of which he was the pastor grew rapidly by the addition to it of converted persons, so that it came to number close upon a thousand communicants; territorial missions, and evangelistic expansions, were promoted as the town grew; preaching to the intelligent class of Midland railway employés during their breakfast hour awoke among them a warm interest in personal religion; innumerable lectures kindled enthusiasm among young men for social and national betterments; and an influential position on the local School Board enabled Mr. Crosby to further educational advancement. During his residence in Derby, a Midland Counties Christian Convention for the promotion of spiritual life and activity was organised at his suggestion, and successfully carried out. Assuredly this widely blessed work in Derby was a hallowed "forward movement."

Sixteen years of these heavy labours began to tell seriously on the health of Mr. Crosbie. An invitation had come to him to a tutorship in Hackney College, but his preferences were for pastoral influence, and, out of other overtures, he responded in his overworked state to one from Brighton in 1880. There the pulpit of the imposing structure called Clifton-road Congregational Church was vacant through the death of Rev. John Graham, whose heart action had been injured in a noble attempt to save the life of a drowning friend. God had been training his servant for this new order of ministry, and now located in a town which contains a host of earnest persons, who care more for the advance of Christ's kingdom than for that of any merely denominational order, Mr. Crosbie became a centre of attraction to many who loved downright evangelical and spiritual preaching. Former public and denominational activities, however, still occupied him. He led the way in building a commodious and handsome Institute which adjoins the church. Money was also raised for school-room and church improvements, and no less in largely improved contributions for local, county, and foreign missions.

In Brighton his contagious earnestness surrounded him, as in Derby, with the affectionate enthusiasm of young persons, and this they were constantly evincing by their testimonials of regard. With advantage to a successor, he has, through the Spirit's grace, left a church whose membership has risen from two hundred to more than five hundred persons. But this by no means expresses the wide extent of the spiritual influence he has been used of God to exert in the great southern watering-place. Ministers of his own order and of other churches have responded to his appeals and united with him in Conventions for the furtherance of the Kingdom of God, while visitors and residents, who in these days of uncertain voices have sought out unambiguously Scriptural teaching, have prized his prayers and ministrations.

Four features have marked these ministrations: (a) a previous and adequate meditation on the chosen text and its surrounding on the part of the preacher; (b) a scholarly and careful exegesis; (c) a predominant desire that the congregation should realise the wonderful force of Scripture words; and (d) the thorough and intense belief of the speaker. These characteristics constitute what we designate pulpit "power," but what Continental writers call "unction"; which some affect to despise, but which Roman Catholic as well as Protestant preachers regard as the sine quâ non of effective preaching.

The present writer listened to an address from Mr. Crosbie at the memorable Hastings Ministerial Conference in 1886, in the calling of which he had taken a very prominent part. There was in the address no attempt whatever at self-manifestation, nor at originality, but such an emphatic setting forth of the grace and power of the Holy Ghost, after self-renouncing and believing prayer, that at the close of it the eighty or a hundred pastors present could not utter speech, but with one impulse knelt down and continued long in the attitude, breathing out confessions, prayers, and adoration, under an overpowering manifestation of the Spirit's presence, and of an anointing which has continued with many to this day.*

Mr. Crosbie's future ministrations, near the Park in Nottingham, will not only embrace an important locality, but will touch the forthcoming services of from sixty to eighty candidates for pastoral and evangelistic life, who under Dr. Paton are being trained in a Divinity Hall for Gospel labours in connection with the Congregationalists.

Grateful memories will henceforth attend him of the overflowing expressions of affection which marked his removal from Brighton. The Sussex Daily News of the 26th ult. observed:—"No words could so eloquently express how greatly Mr. Crosbie's labours have been appreciated, and how closely he and his family have endeared themselves to the members of the church and congregation he has served for ten years, as the demonstration of affection and esteem which took place last evening." In addition to addresses of gratitude, costly testimonials were made, not only to him, but to Mrs. Crosbie and his son and daughter, who had co-operated in his work. On the following morning sixteen Congregational ministers, resident in Brighton, presented him with a framed address, which contained these words:—

> We shall cherish for you our affection, and shall gratefully remember the varied services you have rendered, not only to Clifton-road Church, but to the churches of the county, and such of the institutions of the town as you were able to assist. We thank God for the earnestness and conscientiousness of your Christian life, character, and ministry, which we believe will serve our churches long after you have left us.

Such a ministry conveys an important lesson, and may teach younger Nonconformist pastors that it is not an accommodative Gospel, nor the obtrusion of a personal originality into the presentation of Christian theology; but thoughtful study, believing reverence for Holy Writ, habitual prayer for the concurring power of the Spirit of grace, and a fervid sympathy and reality thrown into the treatment of New Testament truths, which may secure in our days, as in past ones, distinguished and permanent ministerial success.

* One minister, who exercises exceptional care in the admission of members, told the writer that such was the effect of the Conference on his ministry, and on his congregation, that, on the year following it, 156 persons were received into the church over which he presides.

ST. JOHN'S WOOD Y.W.C.A. has upwards of 180 members, who make use of its social, educational, and other advantages. Ten young women engaged in business live on the premises, and there is a "traveller's bed," whereby respectable but unsheltered ones are helped on their way. The hon. superintendent, Mrs. Richardson, devotes all her time and energy to the work, exercising a mother's watchfulness and care. The premises, 12, Portland-terrace, are too small for the requirements of the work, which has the cordial support of ministers of all denominations in North-west London.

WARNING TO SERVANTS.—A few days ago a young woman, in the neighbourhood of Finsbury Park, obtained a situation, through an old-established registry office, at what seemed to be a respectable house. Her suspicions, however, were soon aroused, and, fortunately, a neighbour knew of the character of the house and advised the young woman to leave at once. She took the girl herself to the Young Women's Christian Institute, Coleridge-road, conducted by Mrs. Ffrench, and a place of safety was soon found for her. She has had a very narrow escape, but is now in service along with Christian people. Steps were at once taken to warn the registry office in question and others to be more careful in future as to the character of their customers. Immediate and effectual steps were also taken to close the house.

THE LIFE I SEEK.

By Rev. ROBERT M. OFFORD.

Not in some cloistered cell
Dost Thou, Lord, bid me dwell,
My love to show;
But mid the busy marts
Where men with burdened hearts
Do come and go.

Some tempted soul to cheer
When breath of ill is near
And foes annoy;
The sinning to restrain;
To ease the throb of pain;
Be such my joy.

Lord, make me quick to see
Each task awaiting me,
And quick to do;
Oh, grant me strength, I pray,
With lowly love each day,
And purpose true.

To go as Jesus went,
Spending and being spent,
Myself forgot;
Supplying human needs
By loving words and deeds,
O happy lot!

THE DRIFT CHILDREN'S MISSION.

An interesting meeting was held on Saturday afternoon, June 28, in connection with the opening of a Country Retreat for the poorest of poor London children, at Aldersbrook Farm, Wanstead Flats. Despite the unfavourable weather, a goodly company assembled in one of the large sheds, under the genial presidency of Mr. T. A. Denny. After a few explanatory words by Mr. C. L. Boyer, the superintendent of the Mission, Mr. J. Kirk, of the Ragged School Union, expressed pleasure in being identified with this special form of aggressive work to reach the lowest grades of Metropolitan child-life.

Rev. J. L. Brooks, of Stepney, testified to the value of the work done by Mr. Boyer, as also did several other gentlemen present. Dr. Tyler hoped the freehold of the premises would be secured to the Mission, and offered £50 towards its purchase. Rev. T. J. Hazzard, hon. secretary, stated that the cost of starting the Retreat, inclusive of rent for the first season, had been generously met by kind donors. Several contributions are promised towards carrying on the work. It is hoped that many poor children will have "a day in the country" through the operation of the Mission.

Mr. Hazzard's address is 14, Lawrence-road, Bow, E.

THE CHRISTIAN HARBOUR LIGHTS.—A most encouraging muster of the above was held, under the presidency of Mr. George Lampard, at the Seamen's Christian Friend Society's Chapel, in Ratcliff-highway, last Thursday evening. A number of officers and seamen told of the blessedness which, since their own conversion, they had experienced in witnessing for Christ among their shipmates. Addresses were also given by Rev. G. J. Hill, Mrs. Hill, and others, and at the close of the meeting several sailors signed the pledge, and others were enrolled as members of "The Christian Harbour Lights."

MAIDENHEAD.—For the second time, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Morgan have been with us, holding special services in the village of Boyn Hill, in the open-air, and in the mission-room of the Baptist Chapel. They have spent the days in visiting amongst the people from cottage to cottage; God has been with them, and given them many an open door, blessing their words. Mr. Morgan had a slight paralytic stroke when returning to Oxford from his autumnal circuit, and for six months has been unable to go out. He seems wonderfully well now again, and preaches with fire and power. H. J. P.

Letters from France.—VII.

BRITISH SAILORS IN FOREIGN PORTS.

Our 300,000 Merchant Seamen, what is provided for them when they go ashore in a foreign port? Those who have the welfare of "the landsman's friend" at heart, are satisfied that they have helped Sailors' Homes and Sailors' Coffee Bars in our own ports; but have never asked, How is the good work begun at home to be maintained during the many months and in some cases years in which the sailors are abroad? Many splendid Homes, Coffee Bars, and Reading Rooms have been provided in our Colonies, but these institutions need to be extended to Foreign Ports, where English ships are found in the same number as in the Colonies.

Close to our own shores at Havre, through the kindness of sailors' friends, the Missions to Seamen have established for many years past an excellent room on the Quay—a very valuable Institution already mentioned with satisfaction in these letters. But other agencies are required for other needs besides that of having services and providing opportunity for quiet hours in a Reading Room. A Sailor's Home, through the liberality of English friends, has been helping the sailors who need board and lodging after being paid off till they can either cross to England or find some other ship requiring a crew. Hundreds of men have thus been rescued from dens of robbers, and thousands of pounds have been sent home to England to provide comforts for the sailors' families instead of finding their way into those of crimps and rascals who only work to rob, and who, till the Sailors' Home was started, got large incomes from the despoiling of the careless and uncared-for sailor. Thank God this is greatly changed, and through his goodness the two or three runners from the Sailors' Home have been able to compete with the fifteen to twenty crimps who board the ships at the same time; and in many cases every sailor that has left his ship has come to the Home.

After Lady Beauchamp had been working some little time and living in the sailors' quarters at Havre, it was manifest that another agency must be started, besides the two former mentioned. Sailors are open-handed at all times, and very "chummy," and Jack loves "to treat." Where is he to go? Only the drink shops; no temperance bar in the whole of Havre. Two thousand cafés there are, but that means a cup of coffee, and with it spirits of the worst description. Thus it became evident that this evil must be counteracted by a good temperance bar. Prayer was made for many months, and last July a good house was opened on one of the quays in the heart of the sailors' drink haunts. As each successive endeavour has been made to save the sailor, his enemies have redoubled their efforts. It would take pages to tell of the various devices set on foot quite lately by English men and women to get the sailors out of their ships into the houses that are labelled and touted "Entrance free!" "Free" to go in, but not to come out till, in many cases, their money has gone in drink. English girls are there to sing, and between their songs have to leave the stage and serve among the men that they may be "treated." In one house the English proprietor pays a commission to the girls on every glass they can persuade the men to order. There are five well-worked which represent many English people whose whole energies from 8 a.m. till long past midnight are employed all the year round in trying through drink and drugging to rob men, who in their sober senses would have sent sums varying from £5 to £50 to their families in England. In one case lately where only 35 frs. could be got out of a ship's officer for drink, a couple of drugged cigars were given him, with the result that he awoke a few hours after in his cabin with the runner of a music-hall standing over him with an I.O.U. for 150 frs., signed by himself when under the influence of the cigars. Could we see our own sons or brothers landed in such a network of vice, and not put forth a hand, in fact many hands, to rescue them? A large sum is required to keep the places I have mentioned in working order, for besides a staff of workers to keep the premises clean and bright, there must be a staff of runners to go on board the ships and patrol the streets, in order to compete with those sent out from boarding houses, music-halls, &c. Added to this, everything in France owing to heavy taxation is very much dearer, so that expenses are far greater than in England.

THE COFFEE BAR

has required some months to see how such an experiment could be adapted to meet the difficulties of the surroundings and the needs of the sailors. Now we have to thank God that daily, besides our countrymen, men of all nationalities frequent the bar, and express delight at finding themselves in cheerful surroundings, without the vices of the cafés.

The following petitions prove that the British residents at Havre sympathise with the dangers and wrongs which befall the sailor, as well as that that the sailors themselves are seeking deliverance from the temptations, exactions, and cruelties to which they are needlessly exposed.

BRITISH RESIDENTS' PETITION.

The undersigned, British residents at Havre, would call attention to the urgent need that exists of adopting measures for the better protection of merchant seamen in this and other foreign ports where they are paid off.

Very large sums of money are annually paid to discharged seamen here, and this money, in the hands of men whose vocation precludes them from gaining the experience necessary to its proper management, offers a tempting bait to the numerous crimps and evildoers, who infest shipping ports, and make a living by preying upon sailors.

It is unnecessary to describe the methods adopted by this class for the direct and indirect robbery of their victims. Detailed evidence was taken upon the subject by the late "Royal Commission upon Shipping" and figures in their report; moreover, the evil is well known to exist, and is admitted to be a disgrace to civilization.

It will not be possible to prevent sailors from falling into some of the traps laid for them, whether these be prefaced—as is often the case—by the administration of drugged spirits, or by some other equally shameful device. There should, however, be no difficulty in counteracting these evils, by framing regulations under which wages due would be secured to the men themselves, and placed beyond the reach of the crimps.

The undersigned would urge the adoption of measures in that view, and would also draw attention to the necessity of appointing licensed shipping masters abroad, as the present system of engaging crews leads frequently to further robbery of the men, and to the shipowner being also defrauded.

The absence of all official safeguards in foreign ports (where they are most needed) undoubtedly results in the moral and physical deterioration of our merchant seamen, frustrates and discourages private effort made for their welfare, and allows to be squandered abroad large sums of money which should find their way home, to the strengthening of family and moral ties, and to the benefit of British trade.

SEAMEN'S PETITION.

We, the undersigned seamen, discharged from British vessels in Havre, desire to bring under the notice of the British Government that, in the absence of official shipping masters, the shipping of crews in foreign ports is effected by private individuals who, not content with the remuneration they receive from the masters of vessels who employ them, exact an illegal fee from the seamen themselves, ranging from eight to twenty shillings per man.

Advance wages being payable only after vessels have sailed, it is impossible for seamen to guard their own interests; and as in most foreign ports no official advance notes are issued to seamen on their shipping outwards, it is also impossible for them to ensure the just payment of their advance wages through the intervention of other persons who might be disposed to act for them.

We are informed that H.B.M.'s Consular Officers have no power to check these abuses, and we, therefore, humbly pray that measures may be adopted as speedily as possible, to enable us and our fellow seamen who ship in British vessels abroad to receive for our own use the full amount of advance wages to which we are legaliy entitled.

In presenting this, our humble petition, we are convinced that H.B.M.'s Consular Officers in foreign ports will be prepared to confirm the accuracy of our statement, and the justice of our request.

I believe that some endeavour is being made to realise the benefits thus asked for.

R. C. Morgan.

THE McALL MISSION.

The missionary boat Le Bon Messager, as it is known in Paris (Herald of Mercy being its English name) has been lying in the Seine since the beginning of May. We had some delay in getting the needful permission for the meetings to be held on board, but on Sunday, May 25, we commenced the meetings. We began with two daily, but have now increased them to four. Beginning at 2.30, the meetings continue till 5.30, and there is an evening one at 8. The newspapers have well advertised the bateau for us, articles having appeared in many papers, all, of course, expressing much amusement at the floating salle de conférences, but, on the whole, in remarks not unfriendly to the work, showing thus a great contrast to what would have been written ten years ago.

The audiences are composed of all classes. Many men attend—in fact, the majority are men, and mingled with the working men and small tradesmen may be seen not a few gentlemen who listen attentively to the simple addresses delivered. Last Sunday afternoon 550 people attended the meetings.

It is very interesting to see the way in which the people crowd down to the gangway, and patiently wait their turn to go on board. Le Monde Illustré had three excellent sketches of the boat in its issue ten days ago, and these newspaper notices have made the work very widely known.

We trust that the closing fourteen days will be still more fruitful. July 13th will be the last day for the meetings, as the captain has to prepare the little vessel for her homeward voyage. She stops at Fécamp for meetings on the way.

The Committee desire to place a boat on the Seine for permanent work in the rivers and canals of France. Of course a much less expensive vessel will be required for inland work than is needed for the sea coast, and we think that we can have a kind of "house-boat" constructed at a comparatively small cost. Will friends help us in this new means of evangelising the many towns and villages here, where the Gospel is almost entirely unknown?

Reference has been made already in your pages to the annual meeting of the Mission held in the Oratoire, where some 2000 were gathered, from all the Halls of the Mission. It was an encouraging and hopeful sight.

We had held meetings for conference with several of our friends from England and America the two days previously, which were found to be very helpful. And we hope to have each year, at the beginning of June, these meetings for conference, that the needs of the work may be better known among our friends, the hands of all strengthened, and the work thus helped forward.

We are often suffering from the constant changes that take place in the city. Now we shall shortly be called to part from our good friend, Rev. T. Howard Gill, who is leaving the Rue d'Aguesseau Church for an English living. We shall miss him much. He has been a true friend to the work and has done all he could, amid his too many occupations, to interest others in the work in France.

We gladly take this opportunity of saying that the London address of the Mission will continue to be 17, Tresillian-crescent, St. John's, S.E. Mr. Robert McAll will continue to act as corresponding secretary for England, while Rev. Gilbert McAll has kindly undertaken to represent the Mission in London and the Home counties.

HOSPITAL SATURDAY FUND.—Ladies and gentlemen are needed to assist in the street collection on Hospital Saturday, July 12. The work is a work of love, and a truly deserving one. Any lady or gentleman desirous of helping is asked to communicate with Mr. F. G. Hughes, 23 and 25, Gresham-street, London, E.C.

A MISSIONARY FAREWELL.

There was a numerous assemblage of friends of foreign mission work at Harley House, Bow, E., on Wednesday afternoon last week, on the occasion of a meeting to bid farewell to a party of students and deaconesses about to leave for work in distant spheres. The anniversary of the East London Institute for Home and Foreign Missions was simultaneously celebrated, and a truly grand account of work done in the cause of world-wide evangelisation, was rendered by Dr. Grattan Guinness and his devoted wife. To those acquainted with the unwearied labours of our friends, it may seem superfluous to state that the proceedings were from first to last pitched to the note of the Lord's parting command, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature." The enthusiasm of the occasion had evangelisation for its theme, and the coming of God's kingdom for its inspiration. As details were given of the remarkable progress of the missionary movement during recent years, many besides those who spoke must have been possessed by a conviction that God is about to do great things in sending throughout the world the Gospel of his glory and the message of his love.

DR. GRATTAN GUINNESS

was cordially welcomed after his protracted travels in America. He gave some account of his movements while in the United States. He crossed the Atlantic, in the first instance, to borrow the steamer Henry Reed (which they had some years ago given to the American Baptist Missionary Union) for temporary use in connection with the new Mission to the Balolo people on the Upper Congo. This Mission has now a steamer of its own, the Pioneer. It is, said the speaker, a great pleasure and satisfaction to me and others connected with the Mission to see how God's hand has prospered our work in Africa. The Congo Mission was planted years ago in prayers and tears. It has now grown into three distinct missions, with between seventy and eighty labourers. The American Society has thirty-nine missionaries, and hopes soon to have double that number; the Swedish Society has about twenty missionaries, and several stations at which real soul-saving work, as well as Bible translation, is in progress; and the recently planted Congo Balolo Mission has already quite a number of missionaries, and we hope from time to time to send reinforcements from this Institute, which, if it existed for nothing else than to send workers to the Congo region, would well justify its existence.

Intimating that the interest of the Institute is world wide, Dr. Guinness said that between forty and fifty labourers had left Harley House and allied institutions for China, and hundreds for other parts of the world. Reverting to his American experiences, he said: "Being led to extend my visit to the United States, I founded a training institution at Boston, under the presidency of Dr. Gordon, who is closely connected with the Congo Mission work sustained in America. Our object was to facilitate the training of missionaries for the Congo region, and already the institution has begun to bear fruit. That undertaking led to journeys elsewhere, and as a result my travels were greatly extended. I have crossed the Atlantic four times in connection with this work of God. I have traversed the American continent from sea to sea twice, and from north to south—from Winnipeg to Mexico—travelling through nearly every State of the Union, preaching and holding meetings, some 300 in number, in fifty-five different towns. In addition to this, I addressed the students, numbering some thousands, in twenty-two different colleges and universities, attended four Bible conventions, and addressed large bodies of ministers and secretaries of Y.M.C.A.'s. As a result, we know that 160 have volunteered for missionary work. I also opened a training college in Minneapolis, in which, at the close of the year, there were over fifty students preparing for work. In addition to this, fifteen churches pledged themselves to support labourers abroad as their own representatives, and two missions were founded—the Southern Presbyterian Mission to the Congo, and the Mission from Kansas and Nebraska to the Soudan. In connection with these agencies, twelve missionaries have already gone out to Africa—three to the Congo, and nine to the Soudan as pioneers." Dr. Guinness was accompanied by his younger daughter, and in concluding his very interesting story, he said that by native help he had been enabled to translate further portions of the Scriptures into the Congo language—the Epistle to the Romans and the first Epistle of John.

Remarking upon the return of Stanley from his African travels, and that Mr. Henry Richards, from the Congo, was on the platform, Dr. Guinness read the following sentences, from Mr. Stanley's new book, "In Darkest Africa":—"On April 1 we travelled to Banza Manteka. At the Livingstone Inland Mission, Mr. and Mrs. Richards most kindly entertained us. At this place a few years' mission work has produced a great change. Nearly all the native population had become professed Christians, and attended Divine service punctually, with the fervour of revivalists. Young men whom I had known as famous gin-drinkers had become sober, decent men, and most mannerly in behaviour." In conclusion, driving home the call for more missionaries, the speaker read an appeal from the Shanghai Missionary Conference for a largely increased force of workers—evangelists, teachers, and physicians. "We do now appeal," said the document, "to you, the Protestant Churches of Christian lands, to send to China 1000 men within five years from this time. We make this appeal on behalf of three hundred millions of unevangelised heathen, with all the earnestness of our whole hearts, as men overwhelmed with the magnitude of the work before us."

MR. EUGENE STOCK,

of the Church Missionary Society, praised God for the good work which Dr. and Mrs. Guinness have been enabled to do, not only in preparing labourers for the field, but in rousing Christians to a sense of their responsibility in regard to foreign missions. Referring to the Soudan Mission, the speaker said that a few Sundays ago Mr. Graham Wilmot Brooke preached his first sermon without an interpreter in the Hausa language. In the Mohammedan section of the country the work is very difficult; in the Pagan section some of the people have learned of Christ through native agency, and have continued to worship God on penalty of death. Mentioning the negotiations between Great Britain and Germany, Mr. Stock said the result was one for which to thank God. But it imposes upon us a tremendous responsibility. Though Christian effort should not be bound by imperial considerations, yet where a British protectorate is acknowledged, there is a peculiar responsibility. Certainly now the Christian Church ought to ask: What is going to be done for the enlightenment of these vast regions in East and Central Africa, which will soon be opened by railway for the advance of the missionary?

Alluding to an interview which Mr. Stanley had had with the Church Missionary Society, Mr. Stock said Mr. Stanley told us roundly that if we want to make good our footing for the Gospel in Central Africa we must work our missions very differently. We must not send out little parties as hitherto, but we must pour men into the country. Mr. Stanley also related a conversation he had with two men representing refugees, who fled from Uganda during the trouble eighteen months ago. Their names—Samuel and Zechariah—indicated that they were Christians, and they told him of those who laid down their lives for Christ in the persecutions which are still fresh in memory. One of their questions to Mr. Stanley was, "Are all white men Christians?" Not finding it in his heart to give an answer that would discourage the poor fellows, Mr. Stanley said, "Let us hope so." The explorer asked the men if they were Christians, and their ready answer was: "Yes; we are Christians; we are Mackay's men." Each of them had a little book containing portions of Scripture and statements of truth, from which they read every morning and evening when they were assembled to worship God. Mr. Stock expressed a conviction that the early future will see greatly increased activity in mission work.

remarked upon the interesting character of the times in which we live. God's providence is an indication of his purpose, and if we are to be "workers together with Him," we must follow along the lines of his providence. The one teaching of God's providence is "Go ahead." Where you have sent one man, send a hundred. He says in effect, "I am about to send back my Son, to be King of the world; go and tell every nation, and go with an earnestness you never had before." I have no doubt, said Mrs. Guinness, that a thousand men will go to China during the next five years; and I pray that a thousand women may go also.

During the past year labourers for many spheres have left the Institute, and others are just about to leave. Altogether, 52 or 53, at the rate of one per week, have passed through the colleges, which had been carried on at a cost of about £7000, the Congo Mission having been supported to the amount of upwards of £4000.

THE MISSIONARIES

present included several returned workers. Among them were Mr. Van Tassel, from Northern Arabia, where he has been labouring for a number of years among the Bedawin. Mr. Glenny, of the North Africa Mission, presented several ladies who had been witnessing in various centres. They told of the sorrows of the women in Moorish homes. One worker remarked that during her early residence she was much impeded by the demands made upon her time in housekeeping. Observing that ladies of means could make pleasant homes in the North African towns, she suggested that they might greatly help on the work of God by "mothering" the lady missionaries. The suggestion was cordially taken up by Mrs. Guinness, and commended to the serious attention of Christian ladies. Another missionary present was Dr. Churcher, from Tangier, who spoke of the prevailing pride and ignorance of the Mohammedan population. At the same time he deplored the utter inadequacy of the efforts put forth for their enlightenment. These and the other workers were commended to the Lord in earnest prayer.

At six o'clock Mr. Morris (one of the tutors) presided over a meeting at which a number of the young brethren and sisters going out as missionaries briefly related the circumstances and experiences which led to their offering themselves.

At the seven o'clock meeting, Mr. W. H. Seagram presided, and deeply interesting addresses were given. Dr. Churcher, of the North Africa Mission, said he found it needful to speak himself to his patients every morning when they assembled, that they might not fail to associate the medical work with the Gospel. He pointed his moral by a story of two Dr. Browns in a town, one a D.D., the other an M.D. The former was called up one night to see someone who was ill. It occurred to him to ask which Dr. Brown was wanted, adding, "I am the one that preaches." "No, no; not you!" was the reply; "we want the man that practises."

Mr. G. Parker followed, who, with his wife (a Chinese lady), had come from Kansuh, a three months' journey beyond the farthest inland station. He has been there fourteen years, and for eight years has been itinerating. Next to the Bible he recommended us to study geography. At the close of his vivid description of his work, several Swedish brethren and sisters, who are going as missionaries, came on the platform, and Mr. Parker told them that he had found it necessary to preach, not only the death, but the resurrection and coming again, of the Lord Jesus—a crucified, risen, and returning Saviour.

Mr. HENRY RICHARDS, from Banza Manteka, on the Congo, said that at first it was very slow work, and he greatly felt the need of power from on high—a special anointing of the Holy Spirit for service; for this he continually prayed. He was led to translate and expound in small portions the Gospel of Luke. He had proceeded as far as the sixth chapter and hesitated at the words, "Give to every man that asketh of thee, and of him that taketh away thy goods ask them not again." The natives were incorrigible thieves, and he thought if he read this to them, and obeyed it himself, he would have nothing left. For a fortnight he waited and prayed for guidance. He could not tone down the words. He was convinced they meant just what they said. At length he gave them to the people, and told them not many Christians obeyed them, and he had not obeyed them himself," but he intended to do so for the future. Very soon a man came forward, and said: "I want that"; and another, and another, till he had given several things away. But the tide turned, and one man said: "You will take everything." And of their own accord they agreed that nothing should be taken from him without payment. So that, instead of obedience bringing trouble, he found that the Lord's commandment was not grievous. Then followed a mighty work of God, in which a thousand souls were converted. and the people became as honest as before they had been the reverse.

A "jotting" in the July issue of Regions Beyond announces a fact which will interest all friends of the work in which Dr. and Mrs. Guinness are engaged. It is that their eldest daughter, Miss Geraldine Guinness, who has for the last two and a-half years been in China, was in May last, at Shanghai, betrothed to Dr. F. Howard Taylor, second son of the beloved and revered founder of the China Inland Mission. Our readers will, we are sure, join in the prayer that God may abundantly bless the united lives of his two young servants.

THE CENTRAL VIGILANCE SOCIETY.

SIR,—This Society is doing admirable work in a quiet and unostentations way. The very nature of its operations necessitates that it should as much as possible be kept from public gaze. During the year 1889 the total income of the Society from subscriptions and donations amounted to only £346 12s. 6d.

The Society is ever ready to give legal or other assistance gratuitously so far as funds will permit, where such assistance is needed, in all cases coming within the scope of its operations; but to insure a continuance of its efforts for the protection of the young, the suppression of street solicitation, and the rescue of the fallen, it is absolutely necessary that increased support should be accorded, and for that support we earnestly appeal, The hon. treasurer is Lord Kinnaird, 1, Pall Mall East, S.W.

Your obedient servants, MEATH.
R. C. BEDFORD.

THE HAVEN is a "Mildmay" institution of great utility in the Borough. During last year 210 women and girls passed through the Night Shelter; of this number, sixty were sent to the Training Home. Most of these have obtained respectable situations, while others have been restored to their friends. Nearly all nationalities are represented in this small Home. Searching out and inquiring minutely into each girl's story is an arduous business, but in nearly every case the parents or friends are traced. It is very touching to read the tenderly grateful letters from fathers and mothers who have received back their long-lost and long-mourned children. Communications may be addresses to the Deaconess in charge, 60, Trinity-square, Borough, London, S.E.

HYDE PARK HALL MISSION.

THE Metropolitan Music-hall, Edgware-road, was filled on Tuesday afternoon last week, on the occasion of the anniversary meeting of Mr. Charles Cook's mission work. A sermon by Mr. Spurgeon is an event in the West-end, and doubtless many attended to hear the Pastor of the Metropolitan Tabernacle. At the same time the audience included not a few who were desirous of sustaining the hands of Mr. Cook in his several aggressive enterprises.

Mr. T. A. DENNY occupied the chair, and in the course of some remarks said he endorsed Mr. Cook as a most indefatigable and energetic worker, not only when at home, but also while holiday-making; for he takes his holidays in the dungeons and prisons of Europe, and God has greatly blessed his labours.

Mr. COOK briefly sketched his work since 1872, when Hyde Park was opened for preaching. At the end of twelve months, the building called Hyde Park Hall was opened; subsequently a disused skating rink was secured. About fifteen years ago, the Metropolitan Music Hall was taken, and if the place were larger, it would still be filled with listeners. The Gospel is proclaimed in Hyde Park about seven times every week by himself and fellow-workers, and many have believed the word spoken, to the saving of their souls. The converts have included people of many nationalities, representing many occupations in life; to-day quite a number of the whole are engaged in Christian work, as colporteurs, city missionaries, and evangelists. Years ago the Socialists interfered with the meetings in the Park; at present only one Socialistic meeting is held during the week, and that a very small one. Formerly the infidels were there every night; for two years past, however, they have not been strong enough to keep a meeting together in the Park. The Mission employs no band, or other novel means in its work; there is simply the Old Gospel, and the living voice of earnest Christians. In conclusion, Mr. COOK observed that the Mission does not rob the churches, but simply sets its own converts to work. As, however, these are poor people, the assistance of outsiders is essential to the carrying on of the work.

preached a very helpful discourse from John xx. 25: "The other disciples therefore said unto him, We have seen the Lord." In some introductory words he referred to his own own infirmity, expressing confidence that it is only temporary, and that he will, in due course, recover his wonted strength. In his sermon he dwelt upon (1), what the disciples saw; (2), how we may see the same; and (3), what then, if we do see the same? He urged his hearers to get a full view of Christ in all his risen power and glory. We must not think He is still on the cross as the propitiation for our sins, but realise that He rose again for our justification. It is a great thing to be a great Christ. Some see things small—a little sin, a little salvation, a little Christ. We must, however, see Christ as God. A great sinner requires a great Saviour. Enlarging upon the realisings of faith, in which believing is better than seeing, he said: Some people say, "Spurgeon is so sure!" Yes, he is. I would no more preach to you a thing I doubted than I would give to my children meat which I thought contained poison. What I preach I will live by, and die by, and stand before the bar of God by. If we have seen the Lord we shall be glad as the disciples were, and also "go and tell Thomas" what a blessed religion is ours, that it commands us to rejoice in the Lord. "Thomas" is close at hand, perhaps in the family.

One Sunday evening, said the preacher, I pressed the matter home to my congregation. You will say the children are all in bed; never mind, I said, wake them up, and talk to them about their souls. A mother went home and woke her little girl, saying: "I have never spoken to you about your soul. The pastor has been exhorting us to do so." The child replied: "Mother, I had often wondered that you did not speak to me about Christ; but I have known Him these two years." The mother brought her round to me on the following day, that the child might join the church. I said to the little one, "Why did you not tell your mother that you knew the Lord"? "Why," she replied, "mother never would come up to the subject, and give me a chance." "Quite true," rejoined the mother; "but no other child of mine shall be able to say such a thing of me."

The sermon concluded, Mr. Spurgeon asked God's richest blessing on Mr. Cook's work. He told of a young woman from South London who, in a fit of aimless despair, wandered one evening into Hyde Park to lose herself in the crowd. She heard words of comfort and joy from Mr. Cook's lips, which turned the course of her life. Mr. ROBERT PATON added a few encouraging words, saying that he also knew of instances of conversion at the Hyde Park meetings.

LETTER FROM MR. T. A. DENNY.

DEAR SIR,—Mr. Charles Cook is the most untiring and energetic of open-air preachers, and has had for many years the largest congregation in Hyde Park, with, to my knowledge, most precious results. He works Hyde Park Hall year in and year out, and the large music-hall in the Edgware-road, holding 1000 to 1500 people, for several months annually.

His hearers are mainly people who cannot contribute much towards needful expenses, which are thrown consequently upon a few, or left a dead weight upon the shoulders of Mr. Cook. This is most undesirable. His subscription list sadly wants refreshing.

Mr. Spurgeon kindly preached, at his request, last week at the music-hall, but the collection, from which he had large expectations, did not leave much after paying the expenses, which was, perhaps, my fault as chairman, for I was averse to dissipating the great preacher's solemn words by a money appeal.

Many of your readers will be aware that Mr. Cook's holidays are generally spent in prison visitation, and in distributing the Scriptures. I am sure you will be pleased to receive help for so good a worker.

I am, yours very faithfully, T. A. DENNY.

SEAMEN AT RIO DE JANEIRO.

ON the evening of Wednesday, July 2, a very interesting and enthusiastic meeting was held in the Mission Hall, Netley, Southampton, for the purpose of commending to God a missionary to the seamen of Rio de Janeiro. Colonel Hobbs presided, and gave a short account of the origin of this Mission. A few months ago the great need for such a work was heavily laid upon his heart, and on the hearts of a few friends. Subsequently, a small committee was formed, and these friends, with the help of a few others, raised a sum sufficient to pay the passage, outfit, and other initial expenses of a missionary. A suitable man was found, and a boat given for his use.

The harbour of Rio is one of the largest in the world, and in it are often to be found ships with English-speaking crews, aggregating more than one thousand men, cut off from all Christian privileges, and exposed to many temptations, both afloat and ashore. The Mission is strictly undenominational. The missionary has gone out without any guarantee of salary, looking to the Lord to influence the hearts of his people to send all that is necessary for the work.

Mr. E. H. Soper, Brazil, spoke of the difficulties and encouragements that may be looked for, and Mr. Wesson detailed the steps by which the Lord led him to undertake this work. A short address on the companionship essential in missionary service was given by Mr. Caldwell, secretary of the Missionary Bureau, through which agency the missionary was provided, after which Mr. Wesson was earnestly and lovingly commended to God in prayer. Continued prayer is requested for him, and for his work. Grants of Bibles and tracts, in different languages, and donations towards the maintenance of the work, will be thankfully received, and should be sent to the hon, sec. and treasurer, Colonel Hobbs, Netley, Hants.

THE GOSPEL IN CORSICA.

For many years past attempts have been made to carry the Gospel to the peasantry in the interior of Corsica, but in an intermittent way, and with but small results. A visit for missionary purposes by a lady, who wishes to be unknown, accompanied by three other ladies as companions, during last winter and spring (being her third attempt), has led to a marvellous work of grace which is fitted to call forth praise and thanksgiving to God.

The town in which the work began is under the baneful influence of great numbers of priests of the Church of Rome, who keep the people in dense ignorance and bondage. The ladies had first to obtain an authorisation to open a hall for evangelisation. The mayor protested in the strongest way:—"It is useless. The place is full of monks, they are all powerful," &c. The request was still pressed. A sudden change of thought seized him. "Of course there ought to be liberty of conscience as in all France"; but he dared not give a written authority, it must be done by word of mouth, and so this hindrance was gone. Premises were taken and fitted up. The town was virgin soil, having never before been evangelised in any way. The work began; it was work for eternity. Day by day the meetings continued without intermission. This was during the month of December. The work was so overwhelming that early in January two evangelists were sent for from Mentone.

The ladies had noticed a good number of young men of the better class standing at the back of the hall. They were students lately returned from college. On inquiry, they said "they had studied philosophy, but the philosophers could not give them a point d'appui"—a sure support, nor could Rome give it. A point d'appui upon which they could rest with confidence—that was what they needed—and it seemed to them that the Word of God, the everlasting Gospel, exactly met their need. The schoolmaster of the place was the first to accept the truth, and, full of joy, he told his comrades how he had found the point d'appui. These were all longing for the same happiness. The evangelists from Mentone just came in time to help them. There were fifteen intelligent young men to be instructed, and they were longing to believe, and ready to give themselves up to the Lord. The result was most gratifying. They came to the Light, and before the end of January some of them were able to conduct the meeting in the absence of the ladies, who had to go to a neighbouring mountain village where their presence was much desired. These young men said, on parting with their "Mother," as they called the lady: "The light that has been kindled in this place, with the help of God shall never go out."

At the mountain village the meetings were held daily, afternoon and evening, and the work of the Holy Spirit was again manifest. Among the converts was a charming young woman, the pride of the village, who was seeking Christ, and asked to be prayed for. She has since proved a valuable helper in the work. The priests did their best to spoil it, but in vain. Before the end of February there was in that mountain village quite a little company of converts. A hall was got for the new believers, and they determined to continue the work themselves when the ladies left for another village. Before leaving, they heard a municipal councillor (one of the converts) address the meeting with a warmth that astonished them. There were three young college students among the converts, who also explained the Scriptures, and we are happy to say that two of these are now safely housed with Dr. and Mrs. Grattan Guinness, at Harley House, Bow, for training, and they are working in the Strangers' Rest, full of earnestness and quiet joy.

On the day of the departure of the ladies from Corsica, June 3, one of these young men in charge of the meeting said: "In these ladies we lose our spiritual mothers. But although we remain orphans, we do not mean to cease to persevere in the good way which God has been pleased to show us by them." We know not what persecution these dear people may have to endure, but we plead that much prayer may be made to God for this work.

MISS MITTENDORFF'S HOME.

On Wednesday, July 2, a number of friends were invited to inspect this Home. A railway journey of about forty minutes from London Bridge, through a lovely country, brings the traveller near the breezy downs of Epsom. Near the station is found Clayton House, the bright and beautiful Home of seventy happy girls and their teachers.

As we enter by the pretty porch, through the garden, we hear sweet child-voices singing, and, on reaching the school-room, we find an examination already going on. The children sing several songs and hymns in concert; then a recitation is given by one girl, and another given by two or three together. In another room twelve little tots of the infant class are singing their kindergarten song, passing a ball from hand to hand, keeping time to the measure.

But another examination is entered on, when our worthy chairman, Mr. Joseph Weatherley, addresses the children.

"Tell me, are you ever almost come to the last piece of bread in the Home?"

"Yes, sir."

"What do you then do?"

"We pray to God."

"And does He always send the food?"

"Always, sir."

"When was the last time you were short in this way?"

"Last Sunday week, sir."

"Tell me what happened."

Then we were informed that when breakfast-time came, the only bread in the house had not been paid for; so Miss McGrath thought the children should not eat it, and they had arrow-root (which happened to be in the house) instead. During the day sufficient money was sent to enable them to pay for the bread. Numbers of other instances were given by Miss McGrath. One day the bread was quite exhausted, when an incident occurred of a kind which never happened before or since. The baker sent round to say that his men had made some mistake in making more bread than he could sell, and would they accept a present of forty or fifty quarterns. They thanked God and took courage.

The Home is open for inspection at any time, and help, either in money or kind, may be sent for this truly deserving work to Miss McGrath, Clayton House, Epsom. Remittances may be forwarded, if preferred, to Mr. Joseph Weatherley, 51, Gordon-square, London, W.C.

EVANGELISATION IN SICILY.—The eleventh annual report of work by Messrs. Varnier & Scuderi, shows that the whole face of society around Messina has been influenced by their labours. Instead of being objects of hatred, and, as in the early years of the Mission, threatened with death, Messrs. Varnier & Scuderi are now welcomed everywhere, and recognised as the men who possess the truth and teach it. Not only so, there is a readiness everywhere to hear the word; and, when convinced, the people do not hesitate to avow their convictions, and to defend them against priestly opposition. A medical mission, conducted by Dr. Constantine Scuderi, at Mandanici, where his father resides for several months in the year, has proved of immense value. The hon. sec. of the Mission in England is Mr. Donald Matheson, 130, Queen's-gate, London, S.W.

EAST LONDON FACTORY GIRLS.

An interesting and successful work has been carried on in the parish of Old Ford, E., where the Vicar (Rev. Wm. Adamson) has laboured for thirteen years. Mrs. Adamson and he, having for years felt the crushing burden of the social, moral, and religious condition of thousands of the factory and other East London girls, wrote letters six years ago in the public press, which led to the formation of numerous institutes in East London and other parts of the Metropolis. In their own parish a similar institute was established on a small scale. Last autumn it was found necessary to secure larger premises, owing to the remarkable progress of this truly Christian work. Mr. Adamson took the bold step of purchasing a freehold, and of erecting premises thereon, at a cost of £1600. The buildings were completed last week, and present a charming appearance in their simplicity. Towards the cost, Mr. Adamson has received £800, so that he has still to find a similar amount before the premises are free of debt.

This work is merely its first stage, and includes a dormitory for eight girls, and also a cookery kitchen for lessons and practical training. There are three Bible-classes and one prayer-meeting a week; while the rooms are open every evening from half-past 6 to 10. A pleasant sight it is to see these girls, ranged round the tables of their tastefully decorated hall, occupied in sewing, reading, writing, wool work, or recreation. In addition to the caretaker, the matron, who is a truly devoted servant of the Lord Jesus Christ, resides on the premises. Her years of work have been richly blessed of God in the factories and places of business, as well as in the rooms; and many are the jewels (some of them "bright jewels") whom the Holy Spirit has permitted her to cluster for the Redeemer's crown of glory.

An evening visit to these rooms, and a conversation with Mr. Adamson's devoted helper in this most Christ-like work, would prove deeply interesting. The conversions of some of its members are far beyond ordinary romance in their thrilling pathos; while the touching experiences of others are so terrible that the hardest heart would melt at their recital by Miss Rowland. Who that knows the condition of East London young women, socially, morally, and intellectually, can fail to realise the importance of such a work? No nobler effort can be put forth than that of bringing England's humble city maidenhood to the feet of the Lord Jesus, that they may have the "grace of consecration" as the future wives and mothers of our poor.

Mr. Adamson's undertaking necessarily involves him in heavy pecuniary responsibilities. Miss Rowland and he are exceedingly anxious to have a piano, fit up the dormitory, pay off the remaining £800, and raise sufficient to build the additions most urgently required.

ST. CHRISCHONA PILGRIM MISSION.—For fifty years St. Chrischona, near Basle, has been a centre from which Gospel light has radiated into many distant lands. The report for last year shows that, carried on in the same quiet way as heretofore, the Mission continues to enjoy God's rich blessing. We make the following interesting extract:—"The unanimous testimony of the thirty-four evangelists who are engaged by the committee in Austria, Germany, and Switzerland is that there are many open doors for the preaching of the Word, many golden opportunities. But the time may be short. There is a certain expectancy, a feeling that the times are serious, and that judgments are at hand. Praise be to God, the student of the Word realises that all these symptoms do but confirm the blessed hope that the Lord is near. Soon shall He come whom we long for. Oh, to be ready, ready when He cometh!" Communications with regard to this excellent institution may be addressed to Mr. E. E. Scott, 64, Queen-street, Edinburgh.

NORTHFIELD GIRLS' SEMINARY.

WEDNESDAY, June 18 (says a correspondent of The Springfield Republican), was a memorable day at the Northfield Seminary, replete with inspiration. Mr. Moody spoke loving words of Mr. D. M. Weston, president of the board of trustees, who died a few months ago. After recounting many incidents to show what a valuable man Mr. Weston had been to the school, he announced that just before his death he had given 50,000 dols. towards an endowment for the seminary. It was a touching scene, and tears were rolling down Mr. Moody's face and those of many in the audience as he spoke lovingly of the many who had devoted so much time and money to the school. Mr. Weston built Weston Hall three years ago at a cost of 25,000 dols.; he put 10,000 dols. into the hotel, the stock of which he turned over to the seminary, and he gave 10,000 dols. a year for two or three years in supporting the school, his gifts aggregating more than 125,000 dols. Nor was this all the good news the evangelist had to impart, for he read a telegram from Frederick Billings, of Woodstock, Vt., stating that he would give 50,000 dols. for Mount Hermon School as a memorial to his son Herrick, the money to be part of the endowment fund. Mr. Moody was able to state also that O. H. Greenleaf was to give 10,000 dols. This gives Mount Hermon an endowment fund of about 115,000 dols., and Northfield seminary around 100,000 dols., not enough by any means, but a handsome nucleus.

During the past year the Marshall house, where the seminary was originally started in a small way, has been made into a dormitory, and is now called the Revell House. Bonar Hall is also a new building, making room for twenty girls; and another structure is the Betsey Moody Cottage, built in honour of the evangelist's mother, and will accommodate twenty more girls. Three hundred and thirty-nine students, from twenty-five States and three countries, have attended the school during the year, and the institution has flourished under Miss Hall's discreet judgment and wise scholarship.

Rev. Dr. George Pentecost, who has returned from two years' evangelistic work in England and Scotland, gave the address of the day. He took for his subject the philosophy of life and its principles of success, and gave a capital exposition of it. The doctor is one of the best speakers on the platform, and his oration today was at once an inspiring sermon and a fruitful lecture to the students. Miss Hall, the Principal, gracefully presented the diplomas, after which Mr. Moody gave each graduate a copy of the Concordance, which, he said, next to the Bible, had been his most valuable help. Mrs. Moody, who was unable to attend on account of sickness, sent a copy of "Daily Life;" and Mr. Sankey gave each a copy of his new hymn-book.

AN EDUCATION SCANDAL IN INDIA.—A native professor on the staff of the Wilson Missionary College, Bombay, Mr. Jiniswalla, in a recent address at Poona, made a severe attack upon English customs. He lauded to the skies the institutions of the Hindoos, the barbarous character of many of which are well known. A correspondent writes to The Times of India:—"The professor told us that he makes a little money, and that his wife is on that account not so much a slave as she might otherwise be. We are glad of it for her sake. Occasions for beating are, perhaps, less frequent for that reason. But it ought to be known where Mr. Jiniswalla's money comes from. He is paid by the Committee of the Free Church of Scotland out of monies put into their hands for the conversion of the heathen." A Bombay correspondent writes to us: "It is remarkable that the existence of this professor, whose character is notorious, was not referred to in the report recently given in to the Free Church of Scotland by the deputies who visited India last year."

REV. W. H. AITKEN IN LONDON.

A TALK TO CITY MEN.

LAST Monday, at 1 p.m., Rev. W. H. Aitken preached in St. Peter's Church, Cornhill, the annual sermon of the Whittington Avenue Y.M.C.A. There was a good congregation, composed almost exclusively of men. Before the sermon the preacher made a brief appeal on behalf of the Association, and a collection was taken up.

The discourse was on "Friendship," and Mr. Aitken took for a text the Revised Version of Prov. xviii. 24, "He that maketh many friends doeth it to his destruction; but there is a Friend that sticketh closer than a brother." God has given us social instincts, and we must not ignore or neglect to cultivate them. They are a cure for our natural disposition towards selfishness, and through them we can exercise a strong and wholesome influence on those around us. The existence of the Y.M.C.A. is a recognition, on the part of Christian men, of the Divine intention. Friendship contributes to the educational discipline of life, and a good friend may be to us the very angel of God. At the same time we stand face to face with the fact that so-called "friendship" has done more to drag down and ruin young men than any other outside influence. Where there ought to have been a useful, manly, and God-like life there have been degradation, deterioration, and ultimate ruin through social influences of the wrong kind.

Mr. Aitken mentioned three kinds of friendship spoken of by Aristotle. First, that friendship which has a view to selfish profit and advancement; second, that which is based on pleasure; and, third, that which is based upon good. Against the first the preacher warned his hearers, as a degrading species of friendship, and one to be avoided. That form of friendship which is based simply on the social pleasure to be derived from it must be entered into with caution; though the power of entertaining others is a great gift when properly applied. Its abuse very often leads to evil. On this point, and with special reference to habits of impurity, gambling, intemperance, &c., Mr. Aitken sounded solemn and earnest notes of warning.

Coming to the last point, he showed very effectively how the truest and most really helpful kind of friendship is that which has for its basis a common love of God and of good. The best Friend of all is He who sticketh closer than any brother; who can send help in the time of direst need, and whose sympathy is prompt and keen. A close relation with Jesus Christ brings a friendship that is abiding, and that will enable us to act the part of a friend and good Samaritan to others who may be stricken down on the highway of life. The discourse was eloquent and very impressive, and was listened to with deep attention.

In the evening Mr. Aitken addressed a company of young men at Whittington Avenue.

SAILORS' MISSION, RIO DE JANEIRO.—Mr. E. H. Soper, of this Mission, writes that, in answer to the appeal made some months ago in connection with this Mission, Mr. E. Wesson has offered and has been accepted to labour as missionary among the sailors ashore and afloat in that large port. Mr. Wesson goes out in simple faith and dependence upon God. A sum sufficient to cover initial expenses has been raised, and he sailed for Brazil on July 3.

CHRISTIAN LIFEBOAT CREW. — Many testimonies were given at the muster of the crew last week in Ratcliff-highway by the seafaring members telling of God's power and love. The addresses by Colonel Macgregor, Miss Tuck, Hon. Granville Waldegrave, were most opportune and helpful. The text for the month given by Miss Child was: "My grace is sufficient for thee." Much prayer was made for Lady Beauchamp, her daughter, and the work at Havre, as well as for the many workers and fields of labour all over the world.

FAREWELL TO MRS. AHOK.

MRS. AHOK, the Chinese Christian lady who has been in this country for four months, has left for China viâ Canada. Her departure was rather unexpected. Letters from home telling of her husband's illness, made her wish to go, and, though some engagements were unfulfilled, her friends felt it was God's will for her to do so.

Woodford was specially favoured in having the last of her touching heart-stirring meetings; perhaps because Woodford is sending out a lady whose heart God has touched to accompany her. Miss F. Mead has gladly answered the call, and goes with Mrs. Ahok and her Chinese servant. The Lord will surely make up to her what she may miss in not having the society of any English people.

Mrs. R. W. Stewart, who translates for Mrs. Ahok, and who went to China fourteen years ago, spoke to all hearts of China's needs and claims—in the afternoon of June 26 at Mildmay, and in the evening at Woodford. Mrs. Akok told of the miseries of heathenism, showing a household idol which she had worshipped herself. Miss Mead spoke a few farewell words, telling how gladly she gave up home and friends for the love of Christ and his work.

ABORIGINES IN AUSTRALIA.

DEAR SIR,—In leaving England to resume my work among the native blacks of the Australian Colonies, I would like to express my gratitude to the kind Christian friends who have sympathised with and helped me during my stay of one year in this land. To myself it has been a time of great spiritual blessing and encouragement, and I shall go back strengthened in body and in soul, and I trust more fitted to carry on the work God has given me to do. I have visited many towns and cities in the kingdom, and have sought every opportunity of telling the Lord's people of his wonderful dealings with us for the last fifteen years. My travels in England and Scotland have covered 5950 miles, and the numbers of people who have listened to my story have exceeded 87,000. Although the financial results have not been great, my faith in God is strengthened, and I am helped by the assurance that our efforts will be sustained by the prayers and sympathies and faith of large multitudes of the followers of Christ in this highly favoured country.

My wife, writing in a recent letter from our Mission on the Murray River, says:—"The Lord is answering prayer. From Queensland the Secretary of the Aborigines Protection Society writes that he is desirous of getting Paddy and Jenny Swift to help him in commencing a new station on Birbie Island, Morton Bay. The Government are granting ten miles of land. They will also erect schools and other buildings, provide a teacher, but will not pay a missionary. We thank God for these indications of success. We ask the Christians of England to pray that we may experience another outpouring of the Spirit of God similar to that of six years ago, and that we may have means to extend our work to those who are "sitting in darkness, and in the shadow of death."

DANIEL MATTHEWS,
Founder and Superintendent of Maloga Mission, Australia.

BUCKS' EVANGELISTIC MISSION has been greatly blessed of God during many years. Unsectarian in character, it devotes its energies to the entire county, revisiting places where meetings have been held, and preaching in many out-of-the-way places where the Gospel is sadly needed. Last year's report says: "The spiritual condition of many of the people is sad in the extreme. If Christian workers did not come in contact with the people in their homes, and speak to them personally about their souls, they would hardly credit that such darkness and ignorance could exist in our land. The Bibles and Christian books sold by the colporteur, and the thousands of tracts given away from house to house, are being used for God in a remarkable way, and we often hear of great blessing as the result." The office and centre of the Mission is, Bible and Tract Depôt, Aylesbury; Mr. J. E. Taylor, hon. manager.

BAND OF HOPE UNION.

The defeat of the "Compensation" proposals shows that to some extent at least the present generation reaps the benefit of many years' faithful testimony concerning the true nature and effects of alcohol. For thirty-six years the Band of Hope Union has sought the physical advantage of children, and security, under God, for their future, in teaching and fostering the habit of total abstinence from evil drinks. It is difficult to persuade an intemperate adult to abstain; but there is hope for the children, especially when different denominations seek the union which this Association affords.

A very special effort was successfully made last year to raise a fund for the extension of the work in a "school scheme." Conferences of teachers have been convened, and able lecturers have been appointed to various districts of the kingdom; and, furnished with illustrative chemical, pictorial, and other appliances, they have found their way into all sorts of schools, to the number of 2544, wherein they have taught and examined 277,671 children in ten months; being heartily received by managers and teachers. Indirect benefit to parents is also traced.

It is cheering to know that the Union numbers 2,000,000 members in the United Kingdom, in nearly 17,000 societies; but the fact that there are 8,000,000 children of school age yet outside the ranks stimulates the Union to seek an extensive circulation of good temperance literature and the formation of a Band of Hope in every day and Sunday-school that is yet without one. The Union also has in contemplation a great National Competitive School Examination, with prizes.

As this forward movement is still hampered for lack of funds, a bazaar is being held every day this week in Exeter Hall, with the object of raising an extension fund of £5000. On Monday afternoon the Princess Louise, who was welcomed by Mr. George Williams, the president of the Union, opened the bazaar; received purses, appropriately presented by children, on behalf of its funds, and, through Canon Barker, expressed special interest in this branch of education among the youth of the land, and wishes for the success of the Union's operations. An address of welcome was read and presented to Her Royal Highness by Mr. Stephen Shirley, founder of the Union. Mrs. Mary Davies sang the National Anthem and "Years at the Spring." On Tuesday the bazaar was opened by the Duchess of Westminster.

The numerous stalls, elegantly draped and furnished with tempting wares in skilful works of utility and beauty of great variety, rendered the large hall quite festive in appearance. It was pleasant to find the leading temperance organisations which work among adults heartily co-operating and aiding the scheme by furnishing some of the stalls. A "look in" on the part of those who have not yet visited the bazaar will delight the eye, warm the heart, and loosen the purse strings.

AN INTERESTING LEGACY has been received by the British and Foreign Bible Society. In forwarding over £10 from the natives of the New Hebrides, Rev. R. M. Fraser says:—"Nine pounds of the latter sum is the legacy of a Tanna man, who loved his Bible—Kaiasi by name. While he was with me on this island of Epi as cook, his great delight in his spare time was to go into the kitchen, shut his door, pore over the Scriptures in his own tongue, and pray; and especially fervent were his prayers for his own land of Tanna. Now he has entered into his rest, and his savings go to help in giving the Book he loved to others."

IRISH EVANGELISATION SOCIETY.

The report of the work of the Irish Evangelisation Society for the year 1889 is again a record of the power with which it pleases God to accompany the simple, earnest proclamation of the Saviour's love and the sinner's need. In the course of the year 2480 meetings were held, in 157 places. As usual, the report gives extracts from letters describing some of the missions. Of one, held in the Soldiers' Institute, Dublin, Captain Wade Thompson, wrote:—"I believe there was real work done. The men of the R. I. Constabulary from the Phœnix Park Depôt were the most constant in attendance at the meetings, and from what the godly men amongst them say, as well as the workers at the Home, it would appear that there was much blessing to the unsaved ones there. There appears to be a very decided work amongst the Christian men who attend the Home, and that a more real and earnest spirit is now very manifest. They have established a special evening each week, which they call 'their own night,' for personal testimony and prayer."

Rev. G. W. Sall, Church of Ireland Clergyman, of Lorrha, Roscrea, asked for a mission in his parish (which is in a very Romanist district), and wrote at its close:—"Many have decided for Christ, and others are very near the Kingdom, and we trust, will yet accept our dear Lord's great gift. A very cheering characteristic of our effort is the proportion of men who have given evidence of the Holy Spirit's power."

A tent was erected in the northern part of the County Londonderry, in a country district not far from Limavady, called Boveva. One of the Evangelists, Mr. Carleton, wrote:—"On Sunday night we could not possibly accommodate the large number that came, and about 400 remained for the after-meeting. We have to dismiss the meeting twice every night to get opportunity of speaking to those who are being influenced by the Spirit of God, and even then we are unable to deal with all." This was one of many cases, showing that God is giving the hearing ear in rural Ireland.

One of the evangelists took a short series of meetings in a hall of the Belfast Town Mission in December, and at the close Mr. W. W. Collins, town missionary, wrote:—"My district is a very low one, abounding in gambling, drunkenness, bookmakers, dog-fanciers, &c. Many of these people turned up at the meetings, and many remained behind in the inquiry room, to be conversed with. Some of the most noted drunkards of the district have professed conversion, both male and female. Their lives since have shown a complete change for the better. The meetings were largely composed of men, who got the greater share of the blessing. One woman, however, the mother of a large family, and a drunkard, and the wife of a drunkard, when spoken to, burst into tears, and said, 'I have been under concern about my soul all week, and have slept little. I want to be saved; I want my husband saved; two of my children have been saved at the meetings; I am afraid I shall be lost.' She accepted Christ that night, and has been living a consistent life since. A most intelligent man—a great drunkard—was converted. He has smashed up his house several times through drink. He says, 'I want to be saved for the glory of Christ; I deserved to die eternally; I have been an awful sinner, but Jesus has saved me by his precious blood. Glory be to God!' This man engages in prayer in my meetings since. His home is now a Bethel, and his wife and he are both rejoicing in Jesus."

It is gratifying to observe that the Society is being increasingly used by clergymen of the Protestant Churches, who have come to find out that the missions are important aids to their work. For the first time for many years the accounts of the Society show a deficit. The hon. sec. is Mr. James Barton, Dundalk.

FAITH, HOPE, LOVE.

1. Cor. xiii. 13.

Lord, give me Faith, that I may see
Thy promises made real to me;
Like Abraham, that I may go
Along the way that Thou dost show.

Lord, give me Hope, to gild the way
That leadeth to the "perfect day;"
An anchor sure to hold me fast,
Till I have reached my home at last.

Lord, give me Love, that golden cord,
That binds me to thy Holy Word.
Let love in every action shine,
Making me like Thee, Saviour mine.

Then Faith and Hope shall bear me on,
And help to utter Love's sweet song,
As onward, upward I shall go,
And Christ's sweet image in me show.

PROGRESS IN CHINA.

At a recent prayer-meeting in connection with the China Inland Mission at Shanghai, some deeply interesting testimonies were given. Rev. W. D. Rudland, of Tai-chau, reported much blessing, fifteen persons having recently been baptized. The first of these was an old man of over seventy, for whom prayer had been offered for eighteen years. Among new converts were four children of native Christians. Mr. M. Beauchamp gave an account of the conversion of an influential resident in the Pao-ning district. He bought a New Testament, and, after careful study, embraced the Gospel. To this he testified openly by destroying the idols in which he had previously trusted.

Mr. Orr-Ewing gave a brief narrative of labours, chiefly in connection with the opium refuges, in the Ping-yao district of Shan-si. While in the refuges, the men learn to sing, also to address God in prayer. On leaving, they are visited in their homes. It is found that only those who are converted stand firm on the Christian side. Rev. Dr. Nevius, of Shantung, remarked that the last great famine had given a new impulse to the work. In connection with the American Presbyterian Mission there are fifteen hundred inquirers, and probably not less in connection with the English Baptist Mission. During the present spring several hundred converts have been baptized. The Romanists are making earnest efforts to proselytise among them; but, as a rule, those who "go over" are glad to come back again into Gospel freedom.

MRS. MOUNTFORD is now on a visit to her friends in America. She hopes to return to England in September, and will devote about two months to the delivery of lectures in different parts of the country. In addition to her well-known representations of Palestine life, she will have a lecture on Social Life in India.

LADS' REST, DULWICH.—The annual meeting of this Institution was held on June 28, at 69, Park-road, West Dulwich. Mr. W. H. Dalton read the report of the past year's work, which showed that much good had been done amongst the "arabs" of our London streets. A large number had been given the benefit of a short holiday, and a few of the most destitute had been received into the Home permanently. Among the speakers was Mr. George Holland, who told of his experiences in Whitechapel, and related many a thrilling story of East-end life.

HUMILITY.

If you ask the way to the crown—'tis by the cross! To the mountain—'tis by the valley! To exaltation—'tis "he that humbleth himself!"

Letters to the Editor.

QUESTIONS RE CONVENTIONS.

Dear Sir,—In reply to a letter from "Senex," I write to say that the subject of higher Christian life has been to me, for some fifteen or twenty years, a matter of great perplexity, and, at times, of real distress. I saw that some Christians were living in the enjoyment of more settled assurance of salvation, of closer and dearer communion with Christ, of a more holy walk, and of greater success in winning souls, than I was; and it excited my envy, and I fear, too, nettled my pride to feel that, after being many years a Christian, others should be living on a level so much higher than mine, that I could not even understand it, still less attain to it, and though I long ago gave up the thing as unattainable by me, I have never ceased to pant after increased holiness and usefulness, and I believe He who saw my desire has met it, though in a way that for a time seemed calculated to produce only the opposite effect.

He led me, for many months, through an experience, which brought my soul down to "I abhor myself"; and to cry, "Unclean, unclean." I seemed to myself a spiritual "leper, white as snow." All my anchors were dragged, and earth and sky mingled in one wild tempest; but when the storm had passed, out of this wreck of self and every rag of self-righteousness grew a feeling that whatever this higher life was, I must get it; for one thought of myself made me shiver.

A dear Christian friend, who was living in the enjoyment of it himself, tried to help me on; but it was some time before I could grasp it, and when I did, it was sudden, like a flash of sunlight let in on twilight; and I at once saw a number of things, which were before obscure to me. I had been recently wondering how near I was to the experience, "All of Christ, and none of self," and knew not how very far I was from it. Now I know it is with me—all of Him, and none of me; for all of me was torn to shreds.

So much for the first point in the letter. With regard to the second, I do find that sins of omission are included in the increased victory; for higher views of God's tender love and compassion lead to higher views of service in this direction, as well as the other. With regard to the testimony of others, a Christian friend who knows me well said the other day: "I thought when this dark cloud had passed, as I knew it would, you would take up the thread of your Christian life at the same point as before; but it seems to me you have stridden far ahead." And within about six weeks, on three several occasions, strangers have observed to me: "I suppose you are a missionary?" No one in all the previous years of my Christian life ever suggested such a supposition in regard to me. I had thought of asking a friend with whom I have been living for some time past, what she thought of the change in me; and was debating how I should put the question, when it suddenly occurred to me what a farce such a question would be, when I know that the change in me has been largely instrumental in bringing her into the light of God's love; and in her case the change is so real that she has voluntarily sought communion with God's people, and fellowship with Jesus at his table for the first time; and I myself can perceive the change in her which only a few weeks have made.

With regard to our speaking of it to others, when we know and feel that our Father has led us into a fuller, brighter, happier life, "life more abundantly," should we keep it all locked up in our own bosoms? or should we strive in every way to draw our brethren into the same enjoyment and liberty, and speak gratefully of the love and power that have been lavished on us? Which is most for his glory and the good of others? Does the patient who have been cured of a fell disease go about with sealed lips? Does he not rather tell all his friends of the skill and kindness of his physicians; and advise all who want healing to go to him? And is not this gratitude rather than pride? "Go, tell thy friends." was the Master's command to the leper; and "show thyself to the priest." Where is room for pride in such a case, except for the Healer?

In this, as in other things, there are spurious imitations which bring discredit on the true coinage; but these, like base currency, only prove that the real thing does exist. I think if McCheyne, Martin, or Baxter, could offer an opinion, they would thank God that his people were waking up to a more earnest pursuit of holiness, and a greater anxiety to win and water the souls of others, and would perhaps think as I do—that it is a sign of our times; that the virgins are rising to trim their lamps; and that the Spirit of God is preparing a people "arrayed in fine linen, clean and white," to go forth and meet the coming Bridegroom.—Yours faithfully, T. H. S.

Dear Sir,—May I, as one who sixteen years ago received a blessing more marked than that of my first conversion through the instrumentality of a lady whose higher life in word and action put my own lower standard to shame, be permitted to say a few words with regard to the questions put forth by "Senex"?

I confess I have been pained at the apparent lack of humility in some of the "higher life" advocates, and can fully understand that many an honest-hearted man would, in consequence, turn away disgusted, when this is the very soil needed if the seed of truth is to bring forth genuine fruit. The God-sent messenger who so helped me had evidently received the truth in "an honest and good heart." I know that she had given up all for Christ, and that at his word she had laid aside luxury, ease, affluence, and friends, for toil and reproach, in very truth "counting all things but loss" for Christ's sake. It was her life which drove her words home, so that when she spoke of the indwelling Christ and of "the exceeding greatness of his power to usward who believe," her testimony came with living power. The truths she promulgated were certainly such as to bring forth real humility, though, of course, some misunderstanding the inward principle of her life, might say as they said to Him who was pre-eminently "meek and lowly of heart"—"whom makest Thou Thyself?".

But surely humility does not consist in disavowal of what Christ has wrought in us, though it does seem to me of the highest importance that in utter self-surrender direction should be sought as to how and when the testimony should be given, since self-motives spoil all. Those who with single eye desire to testify only for God's glory, and only in his time and way, will often find that it needs the greatest humility to be prepared to sacrifice the reputation for humility.—Yours sincerely, F.

Dear Sir,—I have been much struck with the letter in The Christian headed "Questions re Conventions," and have a great deal I might say on the subject of unpractical and unfruitful aims at a profession of the "Higher life" of Conventions, and the "Spiritual life" of Congresses. But I will content myself with observing that it may furnish some reply to the important inquiries of "Senex," if I (another Senex) put down briefly, without categorically answering his inquiries, the reply to which the consideration of his questions and their application to myself have given rise, after looking back on a ministry in the Church of England of fifty-two years, and a continued aim at a humble walk with God for nearly sixty years.

I find, independently of any aid from Conventions and Congresses, that the "higher life" I have arrived at brings me to this:—

(1) A deeper view of sin in self and others.

(2) An increased sense of need of a Saviour "every hour."

(3) A stronger desire to realise all that the Saviour is, and has, and does. The more I know the more I find I have to know.

(4) A closer and brighter view of his glory and power to save, and a clearer consciousness of the immeasurable magnitude of his surpassing love in saving.

(5) A more perfect conviction that there is no possibility for a single soul to attain everlasting salvation but only and altogether by and through and from Him. It is strictly "Jesus only." Whatever we do, or have to do, the actual salvation of the soul is all his doing for us, and, by his Holy Spirit, in us. We can do nothing outside of Jesus. Others may get much "higher" in knowledge and experience, but I can hardly understand its being on any other lines than these. As to humility, I may say I grasp more intensely than ever in self-application those parts of the "confession" of my church relating to omissions and commissions which your correspondent "Senex" quotes.—Yours sincerely,

Vicar of Usk.

ROMANISM CHANGED?

Sir,—The communication which you insert from Carlisle in a recent issue is a remarkable instance of mental colour-blindness. It is seen in cases where the Ethiopian appears with a changed skin, and the leopard without spots. Does the writer not remember that it is the boast of the Church of Rome that it is always the same—"semper eadem"? Your correspondent brings forward in proof of the change which she thinks has taken place—what? A resolution of a Roman Catholic majority of the Maryland Legislature two hundred years ago "in favour of the free exercise of religion"! Would it not be much more to the point if she would adduce evidence nearer our own time and our own doors? Is she aware that only this month open-air preachers have been stoned in Ireland by Roman Catholics, that the Roman Catholic newspapers have described such preaching as insulting their religion, that it cannot be attempted in many places of Ireland, nor even the distribution of tracts? But passing from the action of Legislatures and mobs to that of the church and its representatives—if your correspondent can bring forward any denunciation of such outrages by the priests or the prelates of Ireland, by all means let her do it. It would then be taken for what it is worth.

Eighteen years ago the tercentenary of the massacre of St. Bartholomew, 1572, was commemorated. On that day the late Dean Stanley preached in the College Church of St. Andrew's in Scotland (on August 24, 1872) a sermon in which he congratulated his hearers on the great change that had taken place within the three centuries. Even the Church in whose supposed interests that foul crime had been committed, now denounced it. The sermon naturally attracted much attention. It fell under the eye of one who, it will be admitted, knew fully as much of the Church of Rome as your correspondent—the late Dr. Wylie of Edinburgh. He wrote a vigorous letter to The Times challenging Dean Stanley or any one else without or within the Church of Rome to prove the assertion. The Times accompanied it by an incisive leading article. The consequence was a flood of correspondence, not only in The Times but in almost every paper in the kingdom. Dr. Wylie adduced the famous medal which was struck by the Pope to commemorate the slaughter, with the inscription, Strages Hugonotorum, by a grand procession, a Te Deum, and the proclamation of a year of Jubilee*; and as the dogma of the Papal Infallibility had just been promulgated two years before he wrote, he justly argued that what was the infallible declaration of Gregory XIII. must be held to be the action of the Church still. This brought out, among other replies, one from Cardinal Newman, who evidently felt ill at ease and endeavoured to parry as best he could the force of Dr. Wylie's argument. But among all the correspondence that appeared, there was not a single letter to prove that the Church, speaking by her recognised representatives, had repudiated the crime. How could she?

Last of all, Dean Stanley had to acknowledge that no formal repudiation had appeared, but that, none the less, the Church of Rome now was ashamed of such action. Surely the mention of Matamoros in Spain, and the Madiai of Florence is reply enough. If the Pope should ever again get possession of Rome, as Catholics of Ireland earnestly desire he should, let your correspondent visit the Eternal City, and try to distribute Bibles there, and she will soon see whether the Pope will give such "free exercise of religion."—I am, Sir, yours sincerely, D. M'L.

June 30.

* To this day, I understand, a painting may still be seen in the Vatican, commemorating the slaughter.

KENSAL TOWN MEDICAL MISSION is intended to benefit those alone who are too poor to join the Provident Clubs and Dispensaries, who cannot spare time to attend a hospital, and who do not wish to apply to the parish for help. It is proving of great use among the very poor, due precaution being taken to see that none but that class enjoy its advantages. It has been found that nourishing food is often the medicine most needed, and therefore it is proposed to start a dinner fund to provide nourishment for such patients as the doctor considers to require it. The hon. sec. of the Mission is Miss Thompson, 11, Adaire-road, Kensal Town, W.

RATCLIFF STRANGERS' REST.—An interesting meeting for workers took place on Friday last. Dr. Churcher from Morocco, Dr. Van Tassel from Arabia, Mrs. Constantine from Smyrna, and Miss Read and Miss Cox from Algeria, gave hopeful and encouraging accounts of their work during the past three or four years. Rev. F. B. Meyer delivered a short but deeply spiritual address on John xx. 21, 22. He described "As my Father hath sent me, even so send I you," as the missionary's commission, preceded by the gift of "Peace," and followed by that of "Power;" the whole forming a golden circlet of three links.

Obituary.

REV. THOMAS C. MAGUIRE.

THE death is announced of Rev. T. C. Maguire, at Kilrush, co. Clare. Born in 1809, he became a Methodist missionary in 1835, and had a remarkable history. He was instrumental near Westport, in 1837, in the conversion of a large number of Romanists, who, in consequence, were forced to leave the country; and in 1848, at Middleton, co. Cork, he witnessed the burning of several Bibles in the public street by the mob. He took an active part in bringing about the union of 1878 between the Wesleyan and Primitive Wesleyan Conferences in Ireland, and he was an earnest, faithful minister and pastor. He was more than once elected President of the Primitive Wesleyan Conferenee, and was greatly beloved by all who knew him.

REV. DR. GLASGOW.

On Monday week, at Portadown, near Belfast, Rev. James Glasgow, D.D., passed quietly to rest at the advanced age of 85 years. Deceased, who was born near Ballymena in 1805, was the first missionary of the Irish Presbyterian Church of India, where he continued to labour for about 25 years. Since his return home, he held the positions of Professor of Oriental Languages to the General Assembly, and Examiner of Gujarati to the Indian Civil Service Commissioners. He was the author of a valuable work on the book of the Revelation, and also of a volume entitled "Heart and Voice." With one exception, he was the oldest Presbyterian minister in Ireland; and he was a broad, catholic man who was greatly beloved by members of other denominations, as well as by those of his own.

REV. J. W. WHIGHAM, D.D.

The Irish Presbyterian Church has suffered a serious loss by the death of Rev. J. W. Whigham, of Ballinasloe. Born in 1829 at Saintfield, co. Down, deceased was educated in Belfast, and in 1851 was ordained pastor of the Presbyterian congregation at Ballinasloe, which at that time was little better than a mission station. However, he had implicit faith in the power of the Gospel, and soon organised a fine congregation, rebuilt the church, and erected a manse. He travelled extensively in Europe, Egypt, and Palestine, and was well acquainted with natural history. He was convener of the Presbyterian Continental Mission, and then of the Church Extension Scheme. In 1885 he was elected Moderator of the General Assembly, and in 1887 convener of the Sustentation Fund, one of the most difficult and laborious positions in the Church. He was a faithful pastor, a wise counsellor, a true friend, and one of the ablest and most devoted ministers of the Irish Presbyterian Church.

REV. CHARLES HEBERT, D.D.

This well-known clergyman, who passed away a few days ago, was an ornament of the evangelical section of the Church of England. As a true Christian he was held in high esteem, while as a scholar he enjoyed a wide reputation. A graduate of Cambridge University, he was the associate throughout his life of many divines of distinction, but practical work for his Divine Master absorbed his heart and mind during pastorates at Burslem and Lowestoft, and likewise at times when he had no incumbency. Dr. Hebert was the author of several important theological works, the chief of which rendered important service in showing the strength of the evangelical position on the subject of the Lord's Supper. His body was interred at Silloth by the side of his wife, with whom he enjoyed married life nearly fifty-five years; her sweet disposition became her maiden name, Grace, and she was the originator of the Mission to Night Cabmen of London. Her gravestone tells his estimate of her in a happy quotation of double import, "Called, and chosen, and faithful." Mr. Hebert's desire was to have his own inscribed, "Who also himself was Jesus' disciple."

DR. MURDOCK, who for twenty-seven years has been secretary of the American Baptist Missionary Union, resigned his post at the recent Chicago anniversaries, feeling, with advancing years, the need of more leisure and rest. He was re-elected, however, for a year, and will continue to serve the Union whilst the new helpers are being initiated.

The Book World.

Principal Dawson on Evolution.

MODERN IDEAS OF EVOLUTION AS RELATED TO REVELATION AND SCIENCE. By Sir J. W. Dawson. 5s. Religious Tract Society. One of the most valuable contributions to the discussion of modern thought versus Divine truth that we have seen. The author's name is sufficient to awaken great expectations on the part of his readers, and they will in no sense be disappointed. The strokes by which he demolishes the earthwork reared to support the theory of evolution as opposed to special creation, are those of a master-hand, and are dealt with a precision, firmness, and force impossible to resist. The author's close acquaintance with Nature, and his thorough knowledge of the arguments employed by the varied schools of thought with which he is at variance, enable him to present the subject in a most fascinating and diversified form. The style, though argumentative, is popular and attractive. There is not a heavy paragraph in the whole book, and every page abounds in pith and point. While doughty champions of the faith, like Principal Dawson, are to the front, we need not fear for the cause of truth if only we can bring those endangered by the foe into contact with such skilful advocacy and defence of the truth. The Tract Society has done well to add so noble a volume to their list of publications designed to check the speculative reasonings of this unsettled age; it meets a need, and supplies a want long felt.

MISCELLANEOUS.

HONOUR NOT HONOURS. By Mrs. Austin Dobson. Religious Tract Society. The life-motto given to Basil by a Christian mother is manfully acted up to. His good influence on a wayward fellow pupil, and his success in an important examination are the main threads of the story. The musical and unmethodical clergyman, the quaint kind-hearted German professor and Cousin Glynn are well-drawn characters. A high spiritual tone pervades the book.

GOLDEN VESSELS. A manual of private devotion for the young. By Rev. J. Eustace Brenan. Seeley & Co. Intended for those united by faith to a living Christ—the thoughts on self-examination, besetting sins, and sickness are specially helpful. Prayers for Christian seasons and occasional use, e.g., at noon, before a journey, after special mercies are annexed. The book is calculated to spur the languid, and direct the unmethodical in daily walk with God.

THE FEATHERSTONES AND HALLS, GLEANINGS FROM OLD FAMILY LETTERS AND MANUSCRIPTS. By Margaret Sewin. Leominster Orphan Press. An interesting piece of biography abounding in episodes of life among the friends on the other side of the Atlantic, in the early part of the present century. Original letters written by Stephen Grellet, and other well-known leaders, form a part of the book most likely to be prized by general readers. The chapter on "America ninety years ago" is graphically written.

FOOTPRINTS OF CHRIST. By Rev. Wm. M. Campbell. 6s. Funk and Wagnalls. The author justly speaks of this work as containing "a realistic view of the Christian character," and has succeeded in giving not a few original thoughts concerning our Lord's human life and ministry. Fresh waymarks are set up in a well-worn and oft-trodden path of sacred thought and research. The book fully confirms the writer's words, that "to sit as docile, earnest, intelligent learners at the feet of the Great Teacher will help more and more largely to grasp the eternal fitness of things."

THE KESWICK CALENDAR AND BIRTHDAY TEXT-BOOK (3s. 6d. & 5s. Marshall Brothers) is a singularly attractive specimen of its class, and is sure to be very popular among those who attend the coming Conference. The daily texts, compiled by Miss Reade and Miss B. Polhill-Turner, are chosen with strict reference to their bearing on the fully consecrated life; one special aspect of truth being assigned to each month. Nearly all the leading Keswick speakers have contributed brief, but pregnant, introductions, in keeping with the respective subjects of the different months, and Rev. E. H. Hopkins has done the work of editing excellently. For a frontispiece there is a portrait of the late Mr. Bowker, who had undertaken the task of editing, which he was not spared to fulfil.

DEPENDENCE UPON CHRIST, by Professor C. G. Finney, is a lucid statement of the conditions of holy living. (6d. per dozen. Marshall Bros.)

THE GOD THAT ANSWERETH BY FIRE. By Mark Guy Pearse. 1d. C. H. Kelly. A sermon full of point and power. Great lessons for life and service are founded on the story of Elijah and the prophets of Baal.

AN HOUR WITH GEORGE HERBERT, the poet of devotion. We thank Rev. Charles Bullock, B.D., for this beautiful sketch, with selections from the works of good old George Herbert. (1s. "Home Words" Office, 7, Paternoster-square.)

THE LONDON CHURCH OF ENGLAND DIRECTORY AND GUIDE FOR 1890-91. This is a complete handbook to the London and suburban churches and clergy, with other ecclesiastical information. 1s. Office: Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C.

POWER FOR SERVICE. An Earnest Plea. By Rev. C. G. Baskerville, M.A., Birmingham. 1d. Partridge. The author has a true idea of service. Moreover, he not only knows the Master, but realises the wealth of his grace. We trust this admirable booklet will have a large circulation.

VOICES FROM THE BOOK. By the author of "Voices from the Dust." 2d., post free. Hastings: J. N. Fennings, 8, Belle Vue, West-hill. Scripture teaching on fundamental themes is well set forth in these pages, from the pen of one to whom the Bible speaks as the very Word of God.

CHRIST: WHO AND WHENCE? A sermon by Rev. C. McNeil, M.A. 1d. Standard Office, Dumfries. Christ's own witness to Himself is here presented, and its significance indicated with special reference to that type of teaching which ignores or denies his divinity and depreciates or naturalises his mighty works.

Messrs. Jarrold's guides to East Anglican watering-places enjoy a high reputation. New editions have been issued of those relating to YARMOUTH, LOWESTOFT, and CROMER (6d. each). In each case neighbouring places are included in the survey, the books being admirably illustrated, as well as provided with maps.

"MYSTERY BABYLON." A treatise on Romanism and Ritualism. By Rev. J. G. Gregory, M.A., Hastings. 1d. Partridge. These pages are calculated to make many search the Scriptures in regard to the Papal system and its corrupt doctrine. Exposure of error is accompanied by words of timely warning, and an indication of the simple truth on the questions controverted.

THE TWO GREAT POWERS: ALCOHOL versus LOVE! WHICH IS THE GREATER? By Rose Benn. 1d. National Temperance Publication Depôt. A sad narrative, in blank verse, dedicated to "Moderate drinkers," in the hope that they may awake to a sense of their responsibility, and, impelled by love, abstain from that which has wrought so much destruction in the world.

THE REIGN OF THE PRINCE OF PEACE. By Richard Hayes McCartney. 5 cents. Toronto: Willard Tract Depository, corner of Young and Temperance-streets. A poem in celebration of the glorious future. The author has allowed his imagination considerable scope; but the grandeur of some of his verses, on things most surely revealed, goes far to condone occasional defects.

MISS MARSH and her sister, Mrs. Chalmers, have returned to England from Wiesbaden, both having happily regained their eyesight. We are sure that our readers will unite with them in deep thankfulness to God for his goodness in this respect.

CHINA MISSIONS.—Miss Campbell, of the China Inland Mission, has visited Clifton and Bristol in the course of a widely extended series of meetings she is holding, urged by a profound feeling of the imperative call on the Christian Church at once to occupy the vast fields of labour open in China. With quietness and simplicity, but with admirable clearness, force, and unction, she enforced the Master's call to service. She came from holding similar meetings in Bath, and is now at Clevedon and Weston, whence she goes to Birmingham and Derby. W. D. W.

MARYLEBONE INFIRMARY NURSES' HOME.—The annual meeting of this institution was recently held at the Infirmary, Notting Hill. The Home is used as a training school for nurses, and was the first of its kind attached to a Poor Law Infirmary. It is under the direction of the Marylebone Board of Guardians and the Council of the Nightingale Fund. Since the opening of the Training School ninety-one probationers have been admitted, of whom sixty-five remained for a period exceeding the two month's trial. Of these sixty completed their year's training and passed a satisfactory examination. Twenty-five are now on the nursing staff of the Infirmary, six of them being head nurses. All the probationers who completed their training this year have been taken on the staff of the Infirmary. Many of those who have been trained in the Home are now occupying posts of usefulness in various hospitals and nursing institutions in other parts of the country and abroad. Under the fostering care of the matron, Miss Vincent, and the medical superintendent, Mr. J. R. Lunn, and under the superintendence of Miss Moriartz, the Home is becoming increasingly valued as a centre of Christian influence.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

These Notes run concurrently with the Readings of the "Bible and Prayer Union," founded and conducted by Rev. Thomas Richardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Mile End-road, London, E., of whom card of membership may be had for 1d., and Monthly Notes, prepared by himself, for 1s. per annum, post free. We hope many of our readers will become members of the "Bible and Prayer Union," and take its Monthly Notes, which of course are entirely different from these.

SUNDAY, JULY 13.—Psalm LXV.

THIS joyous hymn was probably composed for use in the sanctuary, on the occasion of one of the great annual festivals. It expressly dwells on the Divine bounty in the fertility of the earth (Lev. xxiii. 9-14). There is a marvellous blending of nature and grace in its entire texture, which makes it one of the most beautiful of all sacred lyrics.

There are three divisions. We are transported successively to the Temple courts (1-4), to the shore of the sea, where rock-bound coasts resist the fury of the waves (5-8); and to the pasture-lands and cornfields of Canaan (9-13).

1. Lit., "For Thee there is the silence of praise." Such praise as is too great and deep for tumultuous expressions, and so arrests the fever of the soul. It has been said, "The most intense feeling is the most calm, being condensed by repression."

2. By flesh the Psalmist would call attention to our weakness and need as men, each deficiency on our part pointing us to God. The needier we are, the more cause is there for going to God. And He answers prayer. There is no definition of the kind of prayer which he answers, because the outward expression matters nothing, if the heart speak. And wherever the heart speaks, God hears.

3. "Words of iniquities." This prevailing may be because they act more masterfully, or because they excite deeper contrition. The Hebrew translated "cover" implies, "to cover with the atonement." And the pronoun, Thou, is emphatic, intimating that God, and God alone, could do this.

4. God hath chosen Christ and all who are one with Him (Eph. i. 4). We need to be caused, ere we can approach or dwell (John vi. 44). But in each case God is prepared to do this by the Holy Ghost. What a sacred position would this be! Why should we not seek it! And go no more out! Such an attitude is involved in the practice of the presence of God.

5. The terror is towards his foes, the answer towards his friends (2 Sam. vii. 23). Ultimately all mankind shall come to acknowledge Him (Isa. lxvi. 16, 18). "Upon the sea" will mean not only those afloat, but those living on the seashore, in distant lands.

8. The morning and evening may mean dwellers in East and West; or the mercies which characterise dawn and eve leading us to new songs and joys.

9. Every spring is like a Divine visit. The holy soul looks through second causes to the present tenses of the I AM.

10. The ridges of the ploughed fields are lowered through the plenteous rains, and fertilised to fatness.

12. Let us seek an equal fertility in the life of the soul, through that river of God which is the Holy Spirit (Rev. xxii. 1).

MONDAY, JULY 14.—Psalm LXVI.

Some of the old expositors speak of this Psalm as the Lord's Prayer of the Old Testament. It consists of five divisions, of which the first and fifth begin in a similar manner, 1-4, 5-7, 9-12, 13-15, 16-20.

1. Notice the missionary spirit which breaks through the narrow limits of Judaism. Thus are men larger than their creeds. See also 4.

2. We should make our praise as worthy of its object as possible. Praise Him with a glorious hymn.

3. God's manifested power will only make his enemies yield a feigned obedience. See margin, R.V. Grace alone can change their hearts.

5. Come and see; thus Jesus spoke, and Philip (John i. 39, 46).

6. The Red Sea and the Jordan. Is not this always true of the Church, that God's people are passing through obstacles which must daunt them, were it not for their Divine companion (Isa. xi. 11-15, xliii. 2). Our God turns the place of trial into one of joy.

7. The metaphor here is of God looking forth on men from his heavenly watch-tower with eyes that carry with them the light by which they see.

10. "It is not known what corn will yield, till it come to the flail; nor what grapes, till they come to the press. Grace is hid in nature, as sweet water in rose-leaves. The fire of affliction fetcheth it out." Satan tempts us to our fall and ruin; God tries us to show what graces He has implanted, and to strengthen them by exercise.

10-11-12. The Psalmist sees God's will, not only in his appointments, but also in his permissions. He is said to do what He permits to be done. The imagery is of beasts, first netted; then heavily laden (the loins being the seat of strength); then driven by men who almost sit over their heads, dominating them as they choose.

12. Fire and water were used in purifying the spoils of war (Num. xxxi. 23). We need something more than water (Matt. iii. 2). He who brings us into the trial will certainly bring us out. The wealthy place is a well-watered place, and is translated in Ps. xxiii. 5, "running over."

14. The opened lips are expressly mentioned to show that the vows were made under strong internal pressure which forced them open.

16. These words befitted the woman of Samaria, and the Gadarene demoniac (John iv. 29; Mark v. 19); and they suggest the duty of all those who have received special help and blessing.

17. Scarcely had I cried, than I had reason to praise.

18. "If I had regarded." Be sure that you are on God's errands, and not on some sinful or selfish quest.

20. We have no plea in prayer, but God's mercy.

TUESDAY, JULY 15.—Psalm LXVII.

This Psalm was probably composed, like lxv., to be used at one of the great annual festivals, probably the Feast of Tabernacles. The singer goes beyond the occasion which called forth his song, and seems to include in the range of his thought those spiritual blessings which accrue to all the world through the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

1, 2. There is an allusion here to the threefold blessing of Num. vi. 24-26. When Abraham and his seed are blessed, the world is blessed through them. Similarly we may plead that God would bless his Church and people as the condition of blessing to the world. Oh for the shining of that dear face, undimmed by any cloud born in our sin and neglect.

3. We want crowns for the brow of Christ. Each loyal heart yearns for the exaltation of its King.

4. To govern is to tend. Christ shall yet be the Shepherd of mankind.

6. "The earth has yielded her increase," as if already the Millennial age had broken on the rapt gaze of the poet-prophet, and all the harmonies of nature were restored. Praise ever accompanies the fertility of the Church. "Our own God." What rapture there is here! Faith lays its hand on God, and appropriates Him for itself. There is a wide difference between speaking of things and people as fair and useful, and saying of them, "These are my own." He is our own, because He has made Himself so, and has taken us to be his for ever.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 16.—Psalm LXVIII.

One of the grandest odes in existence. It was probably composed when the Ark was brought up in triumph by the united people (27) from the house of Obededom to the newly acquired Mount Zion (2 Sam. vi.). It is evidently a processional hymn, to be sung by multitudes of white-robed priests and Levites, and we may almost mark the successive divisions of the melody as corresponding to the several stages of the march.

Whilst the Ark is being lifted to the shoulders of the Levites a measured strain is chanted (1-6); as the procession then moves forward, the march through the wilderness is recited (7-14); presently Mount Zion comes in sight, and all neighbouring hills are depicted as looking askance and enviously at its selection in preference to themselves (15, 16); the procession now begins to climb the sacred slopes of Zion amid more triumphant strains (17, 18); the procession is next described (19-27): and from the assembled hosts, now gathered on the sacred site, the strains of triumph peal forth (28-35).

1. These opening words were the formula used by Moses (Num. x. 32). How strange their history! "Through the battle smoke of how many a field have they rung! On the plains of the Palatinate, from the lips of Cromwell's Ironsides, and from the poor peasants that went to death on many a bleak moor to their rude chant:—

> Let God arise, and scattered
> Let all his en'mies be;
> And let all those that do Him hate
> Before his presence flee."

4. "Cast up a highway for Him that rideth through the deserts." As the Ark of God once led his people through the wilderness, so now does it ever lead us through dark and difficult places.

6. God has a special care for lonely people, and there shall be fulfilled in them the Beatitude: "Blessed are the Homesick, for they shall find a Home." "He bringeth out the prisoners into prosperity" (R.V.).

9. "A rain of liberalities," probably referring to the abundant gifts of every kind bestowed on the people.

11. "The women that publish the tidings are a great host"; an allusion to the Oriental custom of damsels celebrating a victory in song and dance. How marvellously this is being fulfilled now by the exodus of noble girls from their happy homes to publish to the heathen the Gospel of Jesus.

13. The Authorised Version gives good sense, contrasting the blackening contact of a smoky caldron with the lustrous colours flashed from the dove's wing.

14. Salmon means shady, dark. It was a high mountain near the Jordan. The kings were scattered, as snow-flakes are driven before the wind, and melt before the sun.

15. God does not choose the great and strong of this world (1 Cor. i. 26).

18. "Thou hast obtained spoil which Thou mayest distribute as gifts among men." Thus the Holy Spirit gives the exact sense, though not the words, in Eph. iv. 8.

19. "Who daily beareth our burden" (R.V.). Either rendering is delightfully suggestive.

22. Though the danger be as great as that caused by Og in Bashan, or by the passage of the Red Sea, yet will God deliver his people.

27. The union of the tribes at the extreme North and South is emblematic of the union of the Church of the ascended Lord (Eph. iv.).

30. "Rebuke the wild beast of the reeds," referring to Egypt, as representing heathendom.

31. A glimpse of days not far away.

THURSDAY, JULY 17.—Psalm LXIX.

This is the second Psalm with this title, "Upon the lilies." It touches the profoundest depths of sorrow, which were only fully known and trodden by our blessed Lord. Of course, there was a primary reference to the sorrows of the Psalmist; but only in Jesus is there a full realisation of much that is here expressed. Clearly, however, the maledictions with which wrong-doing is threatened had no place in Him, who from his cross asked his Father to forgive. This, like xxii., is constantly applied to Christ in the New Testament. Compare 4, and John xv. 25; 9, and John ii. 17, and with Rom. xv. 3; 21, with Matt. xxvii. 34, 48; 25, with Acts i. 20.

4. The last clause is a proverbial way of saying, "I am held guilty of wrongs, which I have never done," as when Shimei charged David with Saul's sins (2 Sam xvi. 8).

8. True of David (1 Sam. xvii. 28), and of our Lord (John i. 11, vii. 5).

9. All these foregoing verses may serve to show us how deep and agonising was the travail of the Redeemer's soul, when He came to his own, but they received Him not, and accounted him a wine-bibber and sinner.

13-21. Read these verses once or twice, and think into them some of the meaning with which Jesus uttered them. It is probable that He literally died of a broken heart—this was evidenced in the blood and water of John xix. 34.

22-28. That such will be the fate of the wicked is undeniable, but though the saint foresee it, he will not desire it for selfish reasons. Compare 25 with Acts i. 20.

35. We began with deep mire in which was no standing, we end in the abiding city of God.

FRIDAY, JULY 18.—Psalm LXX.

This Psalm reminds us of xl. Indeed, it is a repetition of its closing verses. It was composed as a psalm of remembrance, to put God in remembrance of his suffering ones. "When God seems to forget us, we must not forget to put Him in remembrance" (Isa. xliii. 26, lxii. 6, marg.).

1. God often delays to come to our help, and tarries till the fourth watch of the morning, or the night before the execution, but He is never too late. But we often chafe at the delay.

2, 3. Wicked spirits as well as men seek after our soul, but God shall turn them backward and disappoint their designs.

4. How much better to say: "Let God be magnified," than, "Aha, Aha." The godly man boasts in God, and is only eager that his name should be exalted (Phil. i. 20). Let it be our one aim to do and suffer all with this one purpose, to make all men think better of the great God.

5. Happy are they who have learnt to glory in their infirmities, and to use them as arguments with God. There is a beautiful answer to this plea in that description of the Messiah which is given in a following Psalm (lxxii. 4).

Helper in good works; Deliverer from all the power of the adversary.

The prayer closes with one further plea for urgency.

SATURDAY, JULY 19.—Psalm LXXI.

The writer and the occasion of this Psalm are unknown. It is obviously an old man's psalm (9, 17, 18). The divisions fall naturally into prayer (1-13), and the expression of confident hope (14-24). The three first verses are a reproduction with slight variations of Ps. xxxi. 1-3. One key-word is Great (19, 20, 21, 23). All the day (8, 15, 24).

2. If you are too weak to cry aloud, God will stoop to you.

3. How approachable is God at all times! There is a door at St. Peter's which is opened only once in a century, but God's door stands always open.

4. Not only is our hope in God, but God is our hope. Not created things; the Creator alone can satisfy us. "Christ is in us, the Hope of Glory."

6. Let us praise God for his mercy in his ordinary works, and have eyes for his daily miracles.

9. Compare Josh. xiv. 10-14. Our weakness is a prevalent and irresistible plea.

14. The strain changes from prayer to hope.

15. How soon has the answer come to his petition (8).

16. The LXX. translate "I will enter into the powers (mightinesses) of the Lord," as into a sure citadel. But there is great force and beauty in our version.

17. Be content to let God teach you just one step or lesson at a time. And declare what you are taught.

21. "Thou wilt turn again and comfort me" (R.V.).

22. This name for God occurs only in two other Psalms, lxxviii. 41, and lxxxix. 18. May God cast the dumb devil out of us, and set us talking on this theme which can never be threadbare.

MRS. BOOTH continues to suffer very much. The steady progress of the disease becomes more manifest as time passes, and the increase of pain has been, during the last ten days, in proportion to the spread of the cancer. Her whole system is much more seriously affected than ever before, and the return of the nervous symptoms in consequence have not only intensified her suffering, but have increased the strain upon all those who surround her.
